Centenary Bit Unreal —Jeannaret

"The Centennary Celebration of University College is a little fictitious," Principal Jeannaret of UC revealed to students who attended the soph-frosh banquet last night in Hart House.

The College actually came into existence at the same time the University did, in 1827 he said.

UC was made the teaching body of the University in 1853, and the University the administrative and degree-granting institution, he said. "That is why we are celebrating our centennary now."

He told the freshmen and the sophomores the history of the College, mentioning some of the peculiarities in its history.

At one time, when University College moved to its new quarters, the old building was converted into a lunatics' asylum, he said. The name of the place was "University Lunatic Asylum."

He said that he has spent much time trying to find some trace of the original cornerstone of the building, hoping to find it for the centennial.

Resist And Dissent Rely On Yourself Advises Dr. Smith

Student self-reliance, and his capacity to resist the pressure of standardization were stressed in the opening address of Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto, yesterday, in Convocation Hall.

In speaking, he named three attributes illustrating the qualities of mind a student should try to obtain through an education — seriousness, sincerity, and self reliance. "The most valuable member in society," he said, "is the man or woman who has the capacity to dissent, who sets up a resistance to mass movements and mass ideas."

Continuing, he called for an independence of mind and a critical mind that could stand up against the dreary platitudes that assail us. "Nor will you believe everything that you read in print," he admonished the freshman. "I pray that in Canada we shall be on guard against the menaces of the informer, the agent provocateur, the witch hunter or the Gestapo, the concept of guilt by association, and the technique of the smear, which are foreign to the concept of liberty that we cherish," he said.

The president also stated that as a result of successive increases, the present salary scale of the Univeristy of Toronto was higher than that of any other Canadian

Big Weekend But No Show —Homecoming

There will be no Stadium Show as part of the Homecoming Weekend this year according to Paul Lorch, Director of the Blue and White Society. "My idea in place of the Stadium Show is an old-fashioned pep rally and street dance," said Lorch.

Many reasons were given by Lorch for dropping the Stadium Show from the Homecoming activities. Enthusiasm has been waning over the years and the job of the producer was becoming so difficult that it was getting out of hand. More difficulties are encountered with this type of show than with an inside one. In addition to a portable stage, a great deal of equipment is required. Arrangements must also be made for rain insurance. The show is just for one night, said Lorch, and it had to be good for a critical audience. He pointed out that professional talent had to be brought in last year.

The first big homecoming was held in 1927 when the University of Toronto celebrated its Centenary. The weekend was originally designed so that undergraduates could stage a welcome for the alumni and to show them the undergrad spirit. After a lapse of 21 years the idea of Homecoming weekend was revived and this is the fifth annual homecoming.

This Homecoming Weekend will be held on October 17th when the McMaster football team will play against Varsity Blues at Varsity Stadium. After the game the Blue and White Society will sponsor such activities as a pep rally, Tea dance, street dance, a dance at the Royal York hotel, and the traditional Float Parade on Saturday morning.

Homecoming Weekend, this year, coincides with the Centenary of University College which will be featuring special events during that weekend.

Korean Engineer Arrives As SAC Plan Succeeds

A South Korean student, who was invited by the Students' Administrative Council last year, to study at the University of Toronto, has arrived. He is Keeying Lee, a graduate chemical engineer of the University of Seoul.

The SAC invited him for the past academic year, but could not get him released from the Korean Civil Service in time. Instead of arriving last fall he arrived in Canada after the final exams of last year.

He does not mind now that he was late. He said that his English at the time was very poor, and he couldn't have possibly benefited from his courses at the time.

"I can read now and write, although I still haven't enough confidence to talk much, but I am hoping I can get my M.A.Sc. in one year anyway," he said. Mrs. J. F. Molloy, his "Canadian Mother," recalled that since Lee came to this country he has learned 7000 English words, all the ones marked with two stars in his Japanese-English dictionary. Lee is modest about this.

He is impressed with the laboratories in the Wallberg building, and mentioned that the University of Seoul had nice, big ones, too. "But we had nothing left after the North Koreans attacked. We had to move, the whole University, down to Pusan." He walked all the way.

He does not blame the North Koreans, the Chinese, or the Russians for the Korean war. Smilingly, he attributes it to History.

He is not willing to express an opinion about Canadians yet. "I have only been here for four months, a short time to evaluate a people," he says. But he is irked by one thing. He claims that many of the Canadians whom he has met, and the newspapers, have criticized Synghman Rhee and the Korean Government — very superficially, as he puts it.

He doesn't like the idea of a separate North and South Korea, because too many of them are related, and because the economy of the two is interwoven. But by compromising he hopes that the situation can be solved.

The Communists can learn from us, but we can learn from the Communists, too, he thinks. He believes in Nationalizing big indus-

Mother Of Veteran Is Korean's Stepmom

Mrs. J. F. Molloy of 70 Walker Ave. has a son who is in the Canadian Army. He was in Korea two years ago, where he made good friends with a young Korean boy, who was attached to his unit as an interpreter. The boy, who has not had his High School diploma yet, had one dream: 'To come to Canada, and study engineering".

He began to correspond with Mrs. Molloy, first addressing her as "Mrs. Molloy," then, "My dear Canadian Mother." "Now he calls me 'Dear Mom' in his letters", says Mrs. Molloy.

"I got in touch with everybody I knew who could possibly have done anything", said Mrs. Molloy. Finally she was sent to the Students' Administrative Council. She got in touch with Mr. Wong, the Korean Delegate to an International Conference held in Toronto last summer.

It was that Korean boy we originally wanted to bring here, but he didn't have the qualifications to enter the University said Mrs. Molloy.

The SAC arranged a scholarship for a Korean student, and Mr. Wong found Keeying Lee, another Korean, the most eligible to come here. His family — parents, aunts, sisters and brothers put up the money for his trip. The University of Toronto gave him a scholarship, World University Service gave him some money to live on for a while, and Mrs. Molloy provides free room and board for him.

"The young Korean interpreter is still dreaming of coming to Canada, and we will try to get him here", says Mrs. Molloy. She is still hoping that she will find an organization to sponsor his trip.

Cheerleaders Picked Tonight At The Stadium

"This year with the extra games in the inter-collegiate schedule, we must get our cheerleaders picked in a hurry," said Paul Lorch, Director of this year's Blue and White Society. "To do this we are picking the kids to lead the Rah-rah section tonight, at 5.00 p.m. in Varsity Stadium," he said.

"This year with the first game on the very first afternoon, we will have to have the cheerleaders picked well in advance, so they can get a little practice first," he said.

"We want to have as many contestants out as possible," Lorch said, "since many of last year's squad will not be back." "We especially want people from the high school squads of last year as well as any with some experience from around the campus," he said. Lorch also pointed out there were positions open to men as well as women on the Blue and White squad.

Handbooks Held Back By Printer

The Students' Handbook should be here today, according to the Secretary of the Students' Administrative Council, E. A. MacDonald.

"I was told 'tomorrow' every day for the last week, but Alger press, the company printing the handbooks, has not been able to fulfill their promise yet", he said.

He expects to have difficulties distributing all the copies, but thinks the SAC will take them anyway.

The Handbook is a little booklet published by the SAC annually to provide students with information about campus organizations. It contains a map and a calendar.

They are printed for distribution at the time of registration.

"UC"

UC freshies and freshmen are being introduced to the College this week with a bang. The Frosh activities which began on Sunday with a tour of the Museum, filled most of each day until the Soph-Frosh Banquet held in Hart House Great Hall last night.

In between they toured Hart House, and the campus, attended a barn dance in the JCR, and Tuesday night chose Catherine Hees, I Soc and Phil, and Chuck Coleman, I General, Miss and Mr. Freshie.

VIC

The snake dance that would up down Bay Street, stopping traffic and annoying the TTC on Saturday night was an unplanned part of Victoria College's Freshmen weekend.

The weekend included a chapel service, a welcome from the president, and tour.
On Monday night there was a Freshman dance.

The traditional Bob Apple Battle between the Freshman and the Sophs is still to come. There will be "constructive" initiation this year, as in the previous few years.

SPS

Engineering Freshmen will be taken for a tour in Hart House and the Engineering buildings on Thursday. No organized tour is contemplated to the King Cole Room, Society officials announce.

An informal party will be held in the Drill Hall today. The engineers said that GIRLS from University residences and [illegible] residences will be provided for the party.

Forestry Freshmen were welcomed in class the first morning of lectures by the executive of the Forester's Club. They toured Hart House, and took on green and white ribbons which they will wear for a week. A freshman dance with a girls' college will be held next month.

UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICE

MEDICAL EXAMINATION

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, MI. 9644; for Women, MI. 2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

CHEST X-RAY

The Health Service, in co-operation with the National Sanatorium Association (Gage Institute), provides chest X-rays, which are compulsory for the following students: All new students, all final year students, all medical and nursing students, dental students in their first and last two years, and all students who do not live in Canada. Appointments for all male students not in Arts are made through their class presidents during the week of Sept. 28th. Arts students and all women students make their appointments during the same week at the Health Service, unless they have already done so previously. All other students and staff members may have a chest X-ray if they wish. They are urged by the Health Service to do so.

SAC Now Sees Stars Transfers Its Offices Into Old Observatory

For the first time since its conception, the St[illegible]s' Administrative Council of this campus has a home of its own. The SAC, (with the exception of the men's Employment Office), moved last Thursday into the Observatory Building north of the Bookstore. From there is will keep an eye, not on the stars, but on the needs and desires of University students.

It is also the first time, since the astronomers left for their present quarters at Bloor and Devonshire Place, that the old (1856) planetarium will again be used for observation, if not of Venus, then perhaps of even more rewarding objectives, like keeping the students happy.

When the Administration, and in particular, Dr. Sidney Smith gave its solemn nod to the SAC last April, it marked the end result of what has become known as the Student Union Dream. The dream has often resembled a nightmare experienced by an Architecture student on the night before an exam. Many designs but no substance. This dream has been on the minds of students for over 40 years. In the fall of 1948 a Union Committee was appointed whose unfortunate assignment was to draw up plans for raising money. It raised a fine flock of plans, architectural designs, and editorials, which continued until last year. It imported an American expert to study and give a report on the problem, daily squibs appeared in the Varsity extolling the advantages of a Union over the KCR, junior architects fought overt the l[illegible]ation and style, an[illegible] nothing happened.

Last year with all sensible hope for the Union gone, John Love, the Committee Chairman, brought the suggestion to a head. He convinced the SAC of the feasibility of the plan, and together with John Hoag, another Architecture student, drew up a blueprint for the best utilization of space in the Observatory.

John Love's plan has generally been followed in the present set-up of offices in the building. The basement contai[illegible] the new Varsity offices, and Torontonensis has moved in from St. George St. On the first floor are the general SAC

Housing Service Still Has Rooms

Four students and an extremely busy telephone are responsible for finding homes for the great percentage of students who do not live in residence during the school year.

The University Housing Service, run by Horace Krever, has handled over 1000 applications since it opened on July 20. Accommodation is obtained through posters in banks and stores and through advertisements in the papers and on the radio, Krever said.

Rooms and apartments for rent are listed by the service according to size, district and sex of students who may be accommodated. The lists are then posted for students to inspect. Applications have come in from all parts of the city and students have taken rooms as far out as Port Credit and Richmond Hill, Krever said.

There have been more places available for men than for women, he said, although many places offer room and board in exchange for baby-sitting. The hardest people to place are married students as most landlords refuse to accept children. An application to rent a room in a funeral home in exchange for answering the telephone and "doing odd jobs" was filled immediately.

Although most of the places near the campus have been filled, the Housing Service still has some listings left and expects to be in operation until the end of September.

Torontonensis Appealing For Staff

Students interested in working on this year's Torontonensis should drop in and leave their name with the editor, Reggie Mori, at the SAC office, or phone OX. 8565.

The Torontonensis is the official yearbook of the University of Toronto, published by the SAC. The yearbook contains a pictorial review of all the events on the campus. Highlights of activities in the colleges and faculties are duly recorded.

Students from all years are invited to join the staff. Freshmen and freshies are welcome to inquire and become members of the staff. Experience is not necessary.

Many top positions on the Torontonensis staff are now open. Photographers and section editors are needed immedately.

Assistant Warden

Magnificent Confusion

The halls of Hart House were filled with sight-seeing freshmen. A door marked "Warden" stood open, and occasionally an intent young man rushed in and out, carrying sheaves of paper and shaking the hands of people who gathered around him. He was Garth McDowell, the new Assistant to the Warden of Hart House, who this year replaces Dave Gardner, away in New York to appear in a TV Shakespeare series under Maurice Evans.

Though still "in a magnificent state of confusion" as Warden McCulley put it (with a wink), Garth McDowell was quickly getting the feel of his new position, and he enjoys it immensely. "Just love it," he exclaimed, with an enthusiasm perhaps characteristic of an engineer. "Its great, though it's not too easy following in the footsteps of Dave Gardner."

Garth McDowell attended Pickering College and University of Toronto Schools. When the war came, he joined the Royal Canadian Air Force. At war's end, he entered Electrical Engineering in the School of Applied Science. He quickly became an outstanding campus figure at Ajax, and later, on this campus. For two years he was director of Skule Night. Graduating in 1951, he went to Canadian Westinghouse in Hamilton. He comes to Hart House after completing a two-year postgraduate student training course at Westinghouse.

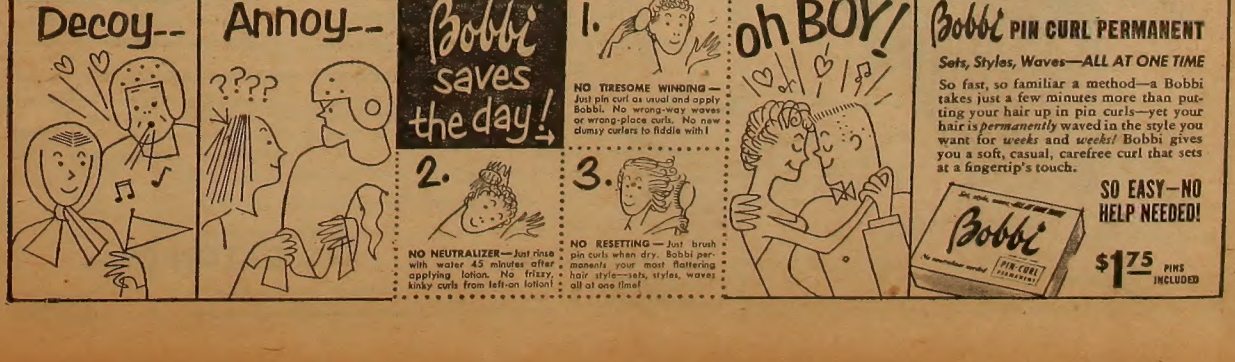
Sitting in his office, which is situated right behind that of his new Assistant, Warden Joe McCulley said yesterday: "I'm very happy to have Mr. McDowell on the job. Following Mr. Gardner he is in an extremely difficult position; on the other hand, he knows the University, and Hart House, and will be prepared to co-operate wholeheartedly on everything that will contribute to the happiness of the members of the House." Warden McCulley smiled. "Of course, at this moment he is in a magnificent state of confusion, but this is a fairly common state for most people at this time of the year."

UN Club Meets at 4

The opening meeting of the United Nations Club is this afternoon at Falconer Hall at four o'clock. The program will include a movie and a speaker. The new executive will be introduced and the year's program discussed.



Plans for this year include many repeat performances from last year:- the United Nations Week festivities climaxing with flag-raising on the campus on United Nations Day October 24; the Caledon Hills farm weekend; a local model economic and social council leading to a model general assembly, meeting in February with representatives from central Canadian and American universities, and a low-cost trip to the United Nations in New York.

Exchange For Books Now Open

For the last few years the best place to buy books at bargain prices and one of the best to sell them at, is the Students' Administrative Council Book Exchange at the back of 119 St. George St. (The COTC building.)

Books from every faculty and on every conceivable subject pass through the exchange. As the demand for used texts always exceeds the supply, more books are always needed.

Books are priced at three-quarters of the original price or less—depending on the age of the book.

Mistress of Jalna

The season opened Monday with Mazo de la Roche's new play The Mistress of Jalna. Monday also marked the return of the New Play Society to the Museum Theatre after a relative absence of two years. The event was not an entirely happy one.

The play takes place in Canada and is concerned with Adeline Whiteoak, mistress of Jalna and mother of Philip Whiteoak. She is a domineering, fear inspiring creature, and her dislike for Mary Wakefield, the new governess, and her opposition to the love affair between Mary and Philip provides the key to three acts and seven scenes of conflict. This is an old theme. If it is to succeed the mother, Adeline Whiteoak, must dominate everyone in word and deed. Catharine Proctor did not dominate. She swung back and forth between the tiger and the kitten; she destroyed time and again her authority by some overeager gesture, an arm flung too impulsively, or a smile too warm for her part. Towards the end it appeared as if she was playing tongue-in-cheek, laughing slyly at her own portrayal.

Because the lion lacked teeth the brave exploits of the lion-tamer and her fearful partner lacked conviction. The many sharp crises between the mother and her son Philip, the willingness of Mary to marry Clive Busby out of fear of the mother, became merely elements of an early twentieth century pot-boiler with the rusty iron girders of its plot forcing the hero and heroine apart at a polite moment and together again at another decorous moment — the end of the play.

Mazo de la Roche never got beyond her plot which was mechanical and uninspired. The best moments of the play were the digressions for the most part by the children Renny and Meg played by James Doohan and Cathy Mellish. They were uninhibited and amusing; because they lacked the heavy fetter of an adult plot they flourished. Although purely decorative they sparked the first act and were welcomed interruptions whenever they poked their heads in. Children that can be seen and heard from a safe distance of seventeen rows are indeed a delight.

Nicholas Whiteoak played by Edward Holmes, a deep-voiced handsome man who seemed a bit too modern for Jalna, gave a satiric and very amusing imitation of the vicar and his mother, which, although digressive, stole the evening.

The rest of the cast waded against the play with varying degrees of success. The two brothers Philip (James Doohan) and Ernest (John Hardinge) were well done. They built up a character and stuck to it against odds. Mary Wakefield (Rosamund Merivale), Dr. Ramsey (Peter Mews), and Muriel Craig (Beatrice Lennard) kept pace with things; in other words they didn't rise above nor sink below their material. Clive Busby (George McCowan), the other man in love with Mary Wakefield, played his thankless role and spoke his lines of endearment with discomfort. Araby Lackhart and Bruce Scott played their parts of housekeeper and soldier with aplomb.

The set by Sully Corth was excellent. The Museum Theatre stage is very small with poor lighting; it requires considerable ingenuity to create space where there is none but this has been done. By using an inner curtain stretching across the hallway entrance Miss Corth has thus been able to extend the outer stage beyond the normal curtain line.

One other compliment for the technical side should be given to the sound effects. The barking of dogs, the arrival of carriages, the mood music, were all deftly executed without scratching, or over-loudness, or any of the other clues to mishandling.

The direction by Basil Langton as far as the blocking goes was satisfactory but in terms of the relationship between the characters it was inadequate. Madeline Whiteoak was not strong enough; Philip was too strong; Mary never clearly showed her fear or her confusion.

Somewhere the balance of the play was lost. The playwright was definitely to blame. The director and some of the actors were more to blame for what they did. The result was a play occasionally boring, sometimes melodramatic, never believable, and only here and there amusing.

'Elizabethan Age Will Be Shown At Hart House

"The Age of Elizabeth", filmed and with commentary by Fraser Fairlie, will be shown for the first time in Hart House Theatre tonight.

Fraser Fairlie is known to most students as "Varsity Police"; he used to ride a motorcycle at the head of the float parade. He was one of a group of Trinity students that formed "Monarch Productions" to make films, and was connected with the Film Society. He has already made three feature-length documentaries in England and Europe.

Special training in fire prevention will be given Boy Scouts across Canada as part of their observance of Fire Prevention Week from Oct. 4 to 10. In many centres Scout Groups will visit fire stations and see actual demonstrations of fire fighting equipment and learn at first hand the best methods of preventing fires, especially in their own homes.

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

You won't need a stethoscope or sliderule when you get your copy of Issue 1, Volume 73, of The Varsity, to tell that the sports page has returned to your campus journal. We are back. New quarters, but we are back at the old stand.

A change or two in the staff but about the same as last year. Our good friend Mal Crawford won't be around to enjoy the celebrations, but we'll be drinking a couple for him. Bruce North is at Osgoode, so there's a couple more ales before we get down to our own serious drinking. Other than that we are staffed about the same as last fall, including our cute blonde friend Jo Ratcliffe.

And the policy will be about the same as last fall. We will be trying to give you the widest possible coverage of Varsity sports that space will permit. A new twist will come up about the first of October, when we plan to give you an interfaculty sports page every Wednesday morning. So, college and faculty athletic directors, be sure to get your news into us.

It goes without saying that we hope to give adequate attention to the sports-minded women of this campus. Our Women's Sports Editor is on record as saying that she will have one feature length women's sport story in every issue. Now men, don't look at us with a raised eyebrow.

It's good to be back.

Game Against Western Is Test For New QB

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The 1953 football season, college variety, gets under way officially this Saturday afternoon at Varsity Stadium and, even this early in the fall, there's a man on the spot. That chap is Eddie Skrzypek.

Ever since the Varsity Blues failed to produce an effective aerial offensive last season and wound up losing the intercollegiate championship to Western on the last day of the season, U. of T. fans, not to mention coach Bob Masterson, have been looking everywhere for a passing quarterback. And, in preseason tests on Sept. 14 in the intersquad game at training camp and last Friday in a game at Varsity stadium with Balmy Beach, Skrzypek looked to be the boy they were looking for. Saturday's tilt, a college preview test with Western Mustangs will be a better indication of how the 6'1", 190-lb. quarter of last year's undefeated intermediates and York Memorial collegiate before that will make out in senior competition.

Skrzypek has to battle four other hopefuls for the field general's job. Doug Geekie, QB on last year's team, Olli Mandryk, who understudied Alex Lawson in the job two years ago and was second string quarter with Balmy Beach last year, Bill Stevenson from last year's intermediates, and Harry Wilson from Riverdale collegiate are all in contention for the position.

"Skrzypek has the edge right now" coach Masterson said yesterday. "He's got the edge in passing and handles the team and the ball well. Mandryk has the experience but his arm is a question mark. Geekie runs the team well but is weak on passing. Stevenson is a good prospect but lacks experience."

Masterson said he'd use these four quarters in Saturday's game and make his choice of two, or maybe three, to carry with the team in the regular season. Wilson, whom Masterson described as a "good looking boy", will be sent to the intermediates for the time being.

What about the team as a whole? "Of course, the Western game will tell a lot," Masterson said, "but with the addition of passing, we may be stronger than last year—if the line holds. Certainly, we're stronger in spots".

The loss of sophomore fullback Bob Kimoff, who suffered torn knee ligaments in the game with Balmy Beach last Friday, and will likely miss the whole season, will be a big blow. Phil Muntz and Don Cheeseman, both from last year's Baby Blues, will share his spot.

Masterson has no cutting problems at flying wing, where Al Haig, whose talented left foot has been doing the Blues' kicking for the last three years, and Bob Leeming are pretty well set. Johnny Adams, who did some hoofing last year, has been sidelined by academic difficulties.

On the halfline, Masterson has problems galore. To begin, he lost blockbusting Bill Bewley, who graduated last June and has moved into pro ball out west. Although a high scorer like Bewley can't be replaced too easily, there's no shortage in the backfield.

For example, Steve Oneschuk and Bobby Dale recovered from the knee troubles which plagued them last fall. In the two games so far, Oneschuk was going in his old style and scored a major as the Whites beat the Blues 23-7 in the intra-quad game at the Lake Couchiching camp and another when Balmy Beach shaded the Varsitys 23-16. Dale, meanwhile, is a bit more doubtful but he says his knee is okay.

Though it will be hard to dislodge Oneschuk from the right half slot, there are some candidates around. They are Ross Woods from the intermediates and newcomers Jack Rogers and Peter Maik. At left half, Bill McFarlane is back for his third year with the Seniors. He and Dale have opposition from Bob Pinkney and Al Riva for the position.

About that "if the line holds up". The Blues lost fellows like Joe Harris, Dunc Ellis, North Hogarth, Gerry Sutherland, Ray Yakasovitch, last year's captain Bruce Miles, and Hank Tamowski. "We had to do a rebuilding job there", Masterson stated and our line lacks depth. Our problem is to build a strong reserve line".

Ends present no problem except picking a pair of starters., although Saturday's game won't be a good time to see the current crop. Two members of last year's Balmy Beach squad, Gene Chorostecki and Fred Smale, both of whom have been drawing raves in training, will miss Saturday's game. Smale picked up a broken nose and cheekbone in the Beach game and will be sidelined two or three weeks and Chorostecki, whose brother Johnny starred with Varsity in 1948 and is now with Sarnia Imperials, has a sprained ankle and will likely sit this one out.

The Blues will dress four ends anyway. Bruce Johnston of the 1951 championship team will start as will Don Smith whom Masterson rated the "best defensive end in the league last year" along with Bill Horton of last year's squad and Ted Kennedy from Etobicoke Collegiate.

At tackle, Alex Macklin, a 6'3" 210-pounder returns from the '52 team. To offset the loss of Hogarth, Ellis and Harris, Roy McMurtry will move over to the tackle position from guard where he played the last two years. Joe Scime, former intermediate, and 225-pound Carl Kanteroff of the 1951 Blues, are shooting for the middle position, as well as Bob McDonald and Jack Strapp.

Guards Don Mattason and Baz Mackie return from last year's outfit and they'll be backed up by Bob Waugh and Jack Walker from the intermediate team and Frank Palermo who shifts to inside from the defensive right end spot he occupied last year.

But it was at centre the Blues took the worst beating over the summer. Their whole starting roster, Gerry Sutherland and Ray Yakasovitch, is gone. But Masterson thinks he may find an adequate replacement in the three candidates he has in camp right now. Leading contender is John Wismer, a 6'1", 180-pounder from the Baby Blues. John Chishom is also attempting to make the grade from the juniors and John Prendergast, a fullback with the St. Mike's interfaculty team last year, is having a try at snap.

"And you can say this", the Blues mentor concluded, "We'll be an interesting team. We won't be forced to play it close to the vest like we did last year and will play a more open brand of ball—more colourful in a sense".

All of which is more optimism than you can squeeze out of most football coaches at this stage of the season.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

"Gather ye suntans while ye may"—a rather hackneyed version of the old master, but one thought is still there. Namely—that good old summer has been had and the afore-mentioned suntans will soon be fading into the white glare of (ho hum) text books. And what is this we see—a sports page? A sports department. Egads what is this place coming to!

We have a busy season ahead of us which will be soon taking the form of tennis, baseball, archery, swimming and eventually basketball. So welcome back, all ye lovers of sport (and the followers too). Let's make it the greatest year ever.

We were talking to a few freshmen on this matter and were met with a few inquisitive glances. Apparently University athletics have been presented in too high sounding terms and there are reasons for this feeling too. The poor wee frosh have been led to believe that sports on this campus have become far too specialized and that mass participation in any field would be impossible. This is true to some extent that special ization is overshadowing the casual sporting atmosphere. We can see one reason in particular for this fact.

This brings us back to a subject somewhat related to sun tanning. Unfortunately classrooms do not lend themselves to the entrance of the ultra violets but there is one faculty on the campus which will still be taking advantage of the wide out-of-doors—legally that is. The favoured few we are thinking of here is a group who are labelled "Physedders." These individuals will be spending part of each day in preparation for mangling the other teams in this and other Universities during this season's competitions. Don't laugh. This is just what has been happening and what will occur again if Phys Ed remains "in interfaculty competition. Those in this faculty are specialists in all fields of athletics. Those in other schools and colleges may be specialists in one or another field. The thing that has been bothering us is the fact that Phys Ed has been dominating interfaculty meets. Last year alone they walked off with laurels in hockey, baseball, swimming and basketball—the four main sporting interests on the campus, as far as women's activities go. Does it seem fair to you—that a group of people whose school curriculum includes practise in these fields should compete with the majority who work in athletics only when time permits. No wonder there is a growing fear of specialization. We do not like to see a monopoly of awards but such is the case. If we allow this situation to continue, we fear the good old feeling of democratic participation in interfaculty athletics will be lost completely. If Phys Ed should quit the ranks of such competition, they still could find enough to keep in shape among themselves. By doing this, we feel sports on this campus among the women would pick up considerably, and competition would be set on a far fairer level.

"It's a great change for the better," said Miss Parkes yesterday. "Women will now be able to reach the SAC without having to go to the SAC basement (they could not enter the Hart House office), the Varsity will finally get adequate space, and will be in close contact with its business department. Much inconvenience will be saved by this centralization."

University. This he added, "has not placed them in the lap of luxury."

Outlinging the present building program, the president said that provisions for the humanities and social sciences were being brought up on a par with those of the applied sciences. "The next building project to be undertaken will be a womens' building, adjoining Falconer Hall, providing recreational facilities for the women."

Swimming Practises

Practises and try-outs for the women's interfaculty and intercol swimming squads will be getting into full swing on Monday. An open invitation has been extended to all aspirants — a wonderful opportunity to take part in top notch competition.

The weekly schedule for practise runs: 5:30, speed; 6:30, diving; 7:30, style and synchronized — every Monday, Wednesday and Thursday at the U.T.S. pool, 371 Bloor Street West. Miss W. (Freddy) Baxter will be coaching the intercol crew again this season. Last year the U of T ladies team came first in this field over squads from Western, Queen's and McGill setting a record in the medley. The same four Universities will be included in intercol competition this year.

As in previous seasons, the big meet will take place the last weekend in November; that is on the 28th. Hart House pool will be the scene.

HELP!

There are several openings on the Varsity sports staff in both men's and women's departments for either reporting or make-up but preferably both. No workman's compensation or four months with pay — sorry. In fact there is no pay. We do offer however, congenial surroundings and excellent chances for advancement. You may discover great hidden talent in the field of journalism. Interested people should report to the sports desk any time, day or evening, in the Varsity office, basement of the SAC building.

COUPON BOOKS admitting to the student section at Varsity Stadium will be sold for $1.50 each TODAY and TOMORROW, Sept. 24 and 25. Admission is on a "first come best seat" basis, and the student section extends from centre field as far south as required.

TICKETS WILL BE SOLD at the south door of Varsity Arena (opposite Museum) from 12:00 noon to 6:00 p.m. today and from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tomorrow, Friday.

CONDITIONS OF PURCHASE. Only one ticket per student will be sold on presentation of Admit-to-Lecture Card with athletic portion attached. Married students may purchase an additional book for their wives. Athletic membership cards must always be presented with coupon books at gate.

GRADUATE STUDENTS who are registered in full times courses may purchase tickets by showing Hart House membership card or identification from the office of School of Graduate Studies.

Catastrophe

Our 80-Acre Maze

The present 80 acres which contain the University of Toronto are certainly not a very great part of the original land grant given the University in its original charter. But when the class of 5T7 starts to feel their way along the halls and greens of the campus this September, the maze facing them—our University of Toronto—is an obstacle that will take the freshman months, and even years, to appreciate.

In an effort to overcome this situation, a program of student orientation has been developed over the last few years. One Faculty after the other has been adopting a plan of not only initiating students to their own Faculty or College, but also educating their freshmen in the atmosphere of the other colleges around them.

Nevertheless, the present program is but a drop in the bucket. The skeleton is here. The next thing needed is the co-operation of the freshman himself. At the new members' night at Hart House last year, attendance was as much composed of veteran students trying to find out what they had been missing, as of freshmen finding what there was to do.

The next month will be alive with new members' nights sponsored by every organization on the campus. Orientation activities may be too much of a load to add to the already busy schedule of the freshman. But it seems that his time might be well spent finding out all the activities offered here, before he buries himself in pallid insanity of a second best.

No Cave – Dwellers

Return to lectures means concentration on studies. And as tough as this problem is, the student must guard against letting this become the sole aim of his energies.

In the confusion of cold wars and hot wars, of A-bombs and H-bombs, we are called upon to do some serious thinking above and beyond our studies. War and threats of war demand such thinking and as thinking is no place for, nor time to deal with those who are using citizens we must carry our share of the burden. There the university as a veiled cave into which to retreat from seemingly insurmountable problems.

With hate-filled speeches coming from both of the ideological camps of the world, the need for clearer thinking and understanding is pressing — for understanding not only of the other side but our side as well.

We must ask the meaning of "our way of life" and, more important, we must make sure that it exists and is not only a product of the text-book. Talk of democracy and freedom is too often just talk.

Freedom of thought, freedom to express ideas, freedom to discuss ideas expressed, freedom to teach ideas: these are the pillars of democratic education. They are essential if some semblance of our beliefs is to be preserved. They are essential if we are to develop the ideal student and citizen.

Yet they are being weakened and even destroyed in various parts of this continent.

This, then, appears to be what is facing the student today. He must act to associate himself with that much-too-scare species, the free-thinking individual. He must go beyond his studies and exams in search of that knowledge which is so vital to the understanding and preservation of democracy.

University is not for the intellectual cave-dwellers. It is for those who are willing to share the burden of today's problems and to make a concerted effort to understand and solve them.

A Professor Speaks

Hart House Desecration

The following article, deploring recent physical changes throughout the campus, was written by a member of the University staff, who requests that his name be withheld.

It is with sad eyes that we see the desecration of the path to the south-west entrance to Hart House. This path from the cloisters to the entrance was originally made of stone and the height of the retaining wall was just right for artistry. I admit the paving stones wore into hollows which filled with water after rain and this made it messy for walking. Unfortunately no provision had been made for drainage such as a slight slope and drainage holes in the wall would have provided.

BUT WHAT HAS BEEN done this summer? Instead of relaying the pavement, the stones have been overlaid with about six inches of cement, the whiteness of which is a fearful contrast to the dignified stone of the House. The layer of cement is therefore six inches above the lawn on the House side of the walk, which gives an awful jolt if you inadvertently walk too far on that side. It has also necessitated another step up at the Cloister end of the walk, (a nuisance on a dark night), and the deletion of a step at the Hart House entrance. This poor step looks so miserable as it lies now sunk down to the level of the cement. The parapet of the wall, now much too low and its extension, the little iron fence, looks completely silly. Grey stone and white cement do not harmonize, and the result is a pain in the eyes.

The court between the Theatre door and the Stage door has also been raised and I can foresee some bad tumbles off the edge of this on dark nights.

ANOTHER DESECRATION is alongside the Elm Walk. This tree-shaded path sought from Hoskin Avenue to the west side of University College is one of the prettiest parts of the University grounds and the view of Wycliffe College, Hart House and the Soldiers' Tower very enchanting. Yet someone has spoilt it by having had erected five huge black poles to carry reflectors for the illumination of the sports field. I think the Athletic Directorate must be the offenders. Woe to them! Is there no one with sufficient heart and love of beauty to stop these acts of vandalism?

LET US RECALL WHAT has happened within quite recent years. First the erection of the eyesore known as the (temporary) University Book Shop, then the erection of a new power plant where chimney stacks soar above Convocation Hall and Knox College as viewed from the east side of the campus, then a huge stadium for the benefit largely of non-university teams; it overhangs the side-walk on Hoskin Ave. like a gloomy prison, and this summer has seen the last of the lovely little dell formed by the Taddle valley between Hart House and the University Library. No more will the merry children sleigh down its snowy slopes, gladdening us with their joyous cries, no more shall we glimpse at the Parliament Buildings through its interbranching trees. I wish the extension of the Library could have been southwards even if it meant removing the Medical building to a new site more convenient to the General Hospital.

Some will say "We must have progress." I admit it but deplore how some of it is brought about. On the other side of the account I must admit there are a few things for which we ought to be thankful.

Cap'n Bligh

In days gone by when the sea was high
A mean old man was Captain Bligh.
With an ugly scowl and a villainous stoop,
He used to stomp around the poop
And bawl. Or drawl
His characteristic call:

Flog that man, Mr. Christian!
Flog him with the cat 'O' nine.
Flog that man, Mr. Christian,
Cause he ain't no friend of mine
Oh Mr. Christian, My loyal mate
My loyal friend and associate,
Mr. Christian, I deeply appreciate,
If you'd flog that man.

One night his crew, with dirk and gun,
Decided something should be done,
And making sure he couldn't swim,
Into the drink they jetsoned him,
And jeered and cheered
As the captain disappeared.

It all took place in years gone by,
But still at night when the wind is high,
You'll see his shape against the sky,
And hear the voice of Captain Bligh,
It moans and groans,
In funeral undertones.

Flog that man Mr. Christian,
Flog him with a cat 'O' nine.
Flog that man, Mr. Christian,
Cause he ain't no friend of mine.

—Cheezdoff and All.

Your Page Eight

This is the editorial page. This is the page that will carry the opinions of you, the student, in the form of signed articles and letters to the editor.

It will not carry all your opinions. It will carry those that are worthy of being expressed and those that will stir up some discussion and controversy. The editors will make every effort to see that all sensible articles are printed.

But this page has limitations in space, and this necessarily calls for limitations in the length of the articles and letters that you send us.

Signed editorial articles that will be in the upper right-hand corner of page eight (usually) should be limited to about 700 words. Letters to the editor should be concise and should be about 150 words in length.

Another feature on this page will be the traditional "Champus Cat". A column of wit and humor the "Cat" offers a touch of the less serious side of University life. Contributions to this column must be of moderate length and will be accepted in the Varsity offices any time from now on.

Page Eight is your page. It is, in many ways, the most valuable page in The Varsity. We think that University students should and will have something to say, and this is the spot. Use your page.

Something Wanted

Now that The Varsity has moved to bigger and better offices, (observatory basement) there is even more room for a large staff to work comfortably. Each spring as a number of our staff graduate we count on filling their positions with freshman as well as senior students who have not worked on the paper before.

There is a place on The Varsity for many people besides newswriters. Drama and art critics, music and book reviewers, feature writers and make-up assistants are also needed. The undergraduate daily provides the only journalistic training on the campus and experience in commercial writing may be obtained only through active participation in its publication.

THE WEATHER Clear and Cool

Friday, September 25, 1953 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO VOL. LXXIII, NO. 2

Sitting Pretty

Hart House is gradually accelerating the changes which began last year. Above are some of the couches and footstools which replace the venerable and comfortable) red leather couches of previous years in the downstairs common rooms.

Other changes include a concrete walk replacing the raitraps outside the main door, and the more frequent admission of women to the activities of the House.

Added Comfort

HH Gets Seatlifting

Campus philosophers who had grown accustomed to the sombre and smoky atmosphere of the East Common Room and Map Room of Hart House had a surprise in store for them when they returned to the campus this week. These sections of the men's union have been transformed into bright examples of modernistic interior decorating.

Walls have been painted in pale blue and new drapes hung and the brown leather couches and chairs have been replaced by new and brightly-hued furniture. Red, green and blue are the new colors students sit on during their lunch hours this year.

People using the common rooms yesterday seemed pretty well agreed that the changes have been for the better. "They're a little violent", one Vic freshman commented. "but comfortable". "They seem to fit in very well", he added when asked if he thought the modern interior seemed to clash with Hart House's Gothis exterior.

"It's a lot more comfortable," observed a third year artsman, who had been around long enough to remember the furnishings of other years.

A sophomore student thought the old chandeliers looked out of keeping with the rest of the rooms but, since the renovations aren't quite complete felt that this might be remedied.

Trinity College Chapel Is Added To College

Students passing by Trinity College during the past month have seen and heard signs of construction on the west end of the lawn in front of Trinity College. The structure will be the new chapel.

The one-storeyed building, which will be the height of four storeys will combine the old and the new. The walls of the chapel will be constructed of the same Credit Valley stone with limestone trim as Trinity College. According to S. Waggett, clerk of works, there are 5 or 6 types of Gothic style but the chapel has been designed in the style of perpendicular Gothic a style similar to that of Trinity College.

A new feature contained in the chapel will be the type of lighting to be installed. There will be a few chandeliers in the chapel, but the main lighting is to be provided by fluorescent lighting concealed in the buttresses.

Fourteen large windows of leaded glass, which will eventually become stained glass memorial windows, are to be installed in the chapel. A choir gallery and an organ loft will also be included. The thirty-two pews contained in the chapel will seat approximately one hundred and sixty persons.

Some of the decorative features of the chapel will include a high, vaulted ceiling and rear doors of carved stone.

A corridor will connect the chapel to the main building through the west end of the main floor of the college. A porch is being built on the east side of the new structure.

Sir Giles Scott, the third generation of a family of ecclesiastical architects came to Canada from England, specially for consultation with George and Moorehouse, the architects of the new Trinity College Chapel. Construction of the chapel was started last August and the structure will be completed in about two years according to Mr. Waggett.

A scaled model of Trinity College with its completed new addition, in full detail, is displayed in the main chapel, the altar and the del are several illustrations of the interior of the new chapel. Several views of the chapel are pictured showing such details as the gates separating the side chapel from the main chapel, the alter and the interior buttresses.

Tasmanian Chancellor Visits U of T

The Chancellor of the University of Tasmania, Sir John Morris, will visit the University of Toronto today. He is on a personal tour of Canadian and American universities and will remain at Toronto for several days, Dr. C. T. Bissell, vice-president of the University, announced.

Dr. Bissell explained that the Chancellor had taken a personal interest in student activities and is making a study of them throughout his tour. He added that Sir Morris was particularly interested in student union progams at the univesities.

Besides this, it was pointed out, the visitor would examine library facilities, and would generally study extra-curricular student interests.

The Chancellor, who is also Chief Justice of Tasmania, will be the guest at a dinner arranged by President Sidney Smith today.

Hart House Chaplain Plans Worship Centre For Chapel Members

The New Chaplain of Hart House still prefers the Harvard education system. He is Rev. John G. Rowe, a Harvard University graduate in History.

There would be no need for Hart House there, he feels, since all houses have their own activities, and the whole University lives as one community.

He likes the quiet atmosphere in Toronto, though. Writing his Ph. D. now, he appreciates the personal contact he has with his professors. "At Harvard, I would be taking more formal courses, and I like this better."

He was commissioned as a paymaster in the US Navy during the war. "I never thought of the Ministry until then. The notion of taking holy orders downed me in the Navy," he says. "I tried to resist the notion, but it kept coming back, so I decided to go to the Episcopal Theological Seminar in Cambridge, Mass., to try it. I stayed", he says, adding, "that's how it happens to most ministers."

He believes that social intercourse is more important to arts students than the academic course they take.

He believes that Christianity is advancing in Universities. "My plans—to try to build a worshiping community around the chapel, and to make myself available for consultation, serious, or otherwise," he says. "Just to be around," he adds.

Gallant Engineers Infiltrate Victoria Purloin 3 Bloops

About 450 first year engineers, accompanied by a Scottish piper, visited Victoria College yesterday after their Campus tour.

While in Vic, they encountered three Vic frosh, and promptly removed their scarlet and gold bloops. A few chivalrous Victoria students hurrying to defend the three coeds had their ties removed — by honest Engineering methods.

The three Vic girls were surrounded by the engineers, and escorted on a special tour of Queen's Park and Victoria College. They were taken to the classrooms where they were due.

Mike Erdei, IV SPS, one of the participants on the tour said that while the Engineers were saying "Good Bye" to the girls, their classroom door suddenly opened, and a distinguished old lady said "Ha-Ha", and slammed the door again.

As the Engineers opened the door to let the girls into the classroom, Erdei recalled, the lecturer told them "if any of you wish to get educated and become civilized come in, but otherwise go away, I am giving a lecture."

The President of the Victoria College Union, Ken Cork, later deplored the "provoked assault in which the Engineers snatched the Bloops from defenseless freshies heads, getting away before husky Vic freshmen could get to rescue them."

"This is a University, not a Kindergarten. Such unprovoked, childish, and ridiculous attacks must cease," Cork said.

Erdei, who claimed to be a "gallant Engineer", said that he would start a collection to buy the freshies new bloops.

Members of the Engineering Society executive have declined to comment on the raid last night. Those present in their office said they could not represent the whole executive and could not get in touch with anybody qualified to do so.

Amidst shouts of "Toike Oike" Engineers raid Victoria College at least once a year.

Last year they stole the Vic Apple pole, paraded it through the campus down to the Mechanical building.

They sat one of their own coeds on the pole, and made her ride into a classroom to the exasperation of the lecturer.

First Kickoff Pairs Varsity With Western

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Although the schedule lists it as an exhibition game, Varsity Blues and Western Mustangs will open the 1953 senior intercollegiate football season in earnest tomorrow afternoon at Varsity Stadium when they engage in a game which will give fans a preview of what most observers are calling the two strongest teams in college football this fall.

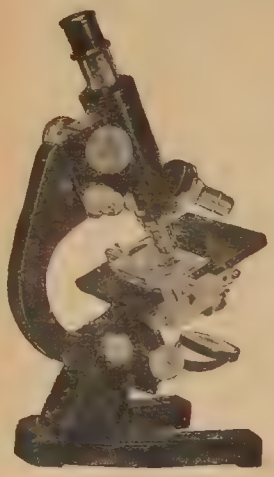
All eyes will be on rookie quarterback Ed. Skrzypek, recruited from last year's championship intermediate team, who is looked upon as the man who will give the Blues the passing attack they lacked last season when they lost the championship to Western on the last day of the season.

Both teams will be somewhat different from the outfits that battled for the title a year ago. The Mustangs, who have won five championships since the war, have lost halfback Ray Truant and linemen Doug McNicol and Millar Gallow, among others, but have almost their entire starting wingline from last year as well as a complete backfield of veterans, headed by quarterback Don Getty.

Coach Bob Masterson expects his team to be as srong as last season and "stronger if the line holds up". It was along the wingline that Varsity suffered its most conspicuous losses with captain Bruce Miles, all-star tackles Dunc Ellis and Joe Harris, centres Gerry Sutherland and Ray Yakasovitch and end Hank Tamowski among the absentees. However, Masterson feels that he has adequate substitutes for a strong starting line at least.

The graduation of halfback Bill Bewley was a big loss but Steve Oneschuk, Bobby Dale and Bill McFarlane are all veterans who are returning to the backfield.

Skrzypek is backed up by three other aspirants for the quarterback position, veteran Ollie Mandryk, Doug Geekie, who skippered last year's team, and Bill Stevenson of last year's intermediates.



The Blue and White band and a full team of cheerleaders will be on hand for the opener, which is the first of three Varsity encounters this year with their arch-rivals from London.

Masthead

There will be an important masthead meeting in the editorial office at 4.00 p.m. today. All masthead members are requested to attend.

Dacca Vice-Chancellor Thanks U of T SHARE For Money Collected

"The Vice Chancellor of the University of Dacca has requested our High Commissioner in Canada to convey to the Executive of the SHARE campaign the University's sincerest thanks for their valuable gift", quoted E. A. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, yesterday. He read from a telegram sent to his office in acknowledgement of goods received in Pakistan as gifts purchases with the money collected last year in the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education campaign.

Similar telegrams and letters have been reaching his office during the summer thanking this university for more than $3,700 of medical equipment sent to universities in Southeast Asia. Mr. MacDonald reports that approximately $1,600 remain in the SHARE funds. This will be used in paying scholarships to Asian students studying on this Campus.

Rajeshwar Mittra, a graduate engineer from Calcutta, India, will arrive to study advanced electrical engineering here on October 4th, reported Graham Ferguson, grad. A group of scholarships were offered last year by the World University Service for the first time. They were titled Mutual Co-operative Scholarships and were obtainable in six countries. Under this arrangement the country from which the student comes pays his travelling expenses and the organization of the university at which he studies pays for his expenses during the academic year. At Toronto these expenses are paid by SHARE.

"Mr. Mittra was chosen by those students from the University of Toronto attending the seminar in India this summer", Ferguson added. They interviewed eight students that had previously been selected by the Indian WUS with the cooperation of the Indian Government. McGill is supporting a similar scheme for scholarship students, he said.

Besides the scholarship fund, $2150 of SHARE funds have been given to the International Office of the WUS for relief work to be distributed as the Service thinks fit. SHARE sent complete infirmaries valued at $900 each to the University of Jakarta, India; Punjab University, Lahore, Pakistan; and the Muslim University, Aligarh, India. Infirmaries established with the money donated in previous campaigns were also given supplies. The University of Assam, India, received goods worth $350; the University of Delhi, India, and the University of Dacca, Pakistan, received $200 worth each. A refrigerator was sent to the University of Delhi at a cost of $282.22. All these goods were purchased at prices from wholesalers reduced.

New Pharmacy Faculty Varsity Campus Addition

Seventeen and one-half minutes from Hart House (via Eaton's College St. store) and you are at the newest addition of the University of Toronto. On Gerrard and Church Streets the former School of Pharmacy has officially become the Univesity Faculty of Pharmacy.

Having the full support of the Dean of Pharmacy, F. N. Hughes, the establishment of the new Faculty in the University has been called "a definite milestone in the advancement of pharmacy in Ontario." The University now takes over the teaching of pharmacy, but the Ontario College of Pharmacy (OCP) still exists as the licensing body for the pharmacists in the province.

Although there has been a close relationship between the former college and the University since 1892, it was not until the introduction of the new four year course in 1948 that the actual move to establish the Faculty got under way. Earlier this summer it achieved success. Dean Hughes described the four year course as "an extremely important factor in making possible the Faculty of Pharmacy."

Back in 1892 an agreement between OCP and University officals established a course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Pharmacy (Phm.B.), a one-year course. While all the lectures were still held at the College of Pharmacy, the Senate of the University, which granted this degree, was responsible for the setting of the examinations, and also appointed a set of examiners at the College to carry out the exams.

Thirty-five years later, however, a two-year course was established, and an agreement between OCP and the Board of Governors of the University was drawn up wherein the University would teach special subjects such as chemistry, English, Botany and Organic Chemistry.

Far as the new Faculty is from the campus, the Dean sees "no immediate possibility in moving it closer." But he hopes that at some tune in the future this might be accomplished.

Carnegie Aids Asia Studies

The University Department of East Asiatic Studies has received a grant of $42,000 from the Carnegie Foundation, Professor W.A.C.H. Dobson announced yesterday.

The Department already has an excellent Chinese library, he said, thus the grant will probably be used to increase the collection of East Asiatic books, especially those dealing with Japan and India.

Professor Dobson has just returned from a tour of the Far East, during the course of which he bought about 40,000 new books for the University. He stated that he had found a good deal of interest in the project in Asia, especially among graduates of the University of Toronto now holding academic positions in that area. He added that he had received many gifts and books for the collection.

Canadians should have more interest in the Far East, Professor Dobson said. He added that he believed that interest aroused by the new grant and purchases made possible by it will go far towards the achievement of this aim.

No President SPS Society Polling Early

Due to certain losses sustained in the Battles of last April the Engineering Society is without a President and a Vice President, Alec Pathy III SPS announced yesterday.

He spoke at a general meetng of the Engineering Society yesterday, which convened to make fall elections possible at an earlier date. According to a motion passed by the Engineers, an election will be held for the vacant positions next Wednesday.

Nominations were received yesterday and are still being received today until five p.m.

U of T Dents Student Was PC Candidate In Federal Election

A second year dental student at the University of Toronto contested the federal elections of August 10 as a Conservative candidate for the Manitoba constituency of Springfield. Joe Slogan, age 22, and president of the student Conservative Club on this campus, was one of the youngest candidates named in the election.

Slogan described the Springfield constituency as very "unorthodox," one of the largest in Canada (it covers 30,000 square miles) and "one of the stickiest constituencies in which to campaign."

The dental student had his first brush with politics on a large scale during the Manitoba provincial elections. There he turned down a nomination to run for the Conservative Party.

But it was a different story in the national elections. At first Slogan set his mind against being a candidate. "But after a long talk with 'The Chief'," he said, "I decided to run. I easily won the nomination receiving more than three times as many votes as my middle-aged lawyer opponent." After that he had only four weeks in which to present his program to the electorate.

"The most thrilling episode of the campaign," Slogan recalls "was something new and unheard of in the constituency." He broadcast his platform to the people from a specially-equipped low-flying airplane.

"It was rather amusing to see the hen running for the chicken coop and the people frantically waving and scrambling for the leaflets," Slogan said. "In fact I heard that one farmer was going to sue me for a miscarriage by his cow."

Slogan, who came in third in the traditionally Liberal constituency, deplored the lack of interest among the electorate. Less than 50 percent voted in Springfield he related.

The young Conservative candidate is a 1952 graduate of the University of Manitoba where he won the Richardson scholarship. He majosed there in psychology, and political science. Before coming here he worked in the Selkirk Mental Hospital and found the work "fascinating."

Slogan feels that he will stay in active politics. "With the bug in my blood it is likely you will be seeing more of me in the field of politics," he declared. Last February he was elected vice-president of the National Progressive Conservative Student Federation.

Of Varsitads

Meet the Press

One of the most enduring institutions on the campus, and the one the new student is most likely to meet first, is the Varsity. Despite everything from raids by Engineers and theft of copy to official banning by the Caput, it has over the course of more than seventy years continued to serve the Toronto campus.

Who makes this happen? They're quite ordinary people; they may sit next to you in class. Their sole distinguishing mark is a certain mild insanity that makes them want to work on the paper. But the Varsity would not, and indeed could not, exist without them.

But every year, due to failures (very rarely) and graduation (very frequently), anywhere from a guaran editorship before he or she the Univesity, and it is necessary to recruit new staff members if the paper is to appear.

Thus every fall a drive is started to gain replacements. The Varsity has very little to offer. The staffers work long hours—deadline is 11.30 for the last copy run—and the pay comes only in the form of satisfaction of a job well done. But the rewards are greater than that. Virtually any new staffer may look forward to an editoship before he or she graduates, and the newsrooms of virtually all professional news services and papers in Toronto have their scattering of wearers of Varsity pins, awards, conferred annually on staff members for outstanding services.

This year the attrition has been considerably higher than normal. The Varsity needs help in every department, every year. Any student who would like to try to write a bright feature, draw a cartoon (the cartoonist has a broken arm), write a headline, lay out a page, or even cut up a paper and paste it on a card for the "morgue" will be welcomed to the staff. No experience is necessary, and the training given will in time qualify any volunteer as a professional journalist.

There is even good fun for those who do not plan a journalistic career. Though there is little glamour to newspaper work, there is a deep satisfaction to seeing one's own work in print, and their are few prouder moments than those following the first by-line. There are other inducements too; the Varsity parties, the trips to Oshawa, the out-of-town stories (few but fun), the annual banquet, and all the many other staff activities.

If you like to meet people, to do satisfying work in a congenial and solid group, and to really participate in all the activities all over the university, come down to the Varsity office in the Observatory basement, seek out any Varsity staff member you know, or come to the annual tea-less Varsity tea—the time and place will be announced in the paper next week.

But come. You'll never regret it.

Rats And Reporters

An frenzied whisper ran along the basement of UC. Out of the maze of cubbyholes, ratholes and other holes, came the worried squeals of anguished rodents. They had come back to the office of the Varsity expecting another winter of plenty, and found — nothing. The Varsity had moved.

The journey to space, though it did not reach any stars, brought the Varsity to the capacious cellar of an erstwhile Observatory, and you can do a lot worse than that.

From a place with the cheery name of Moss Hall, (which happened so long ago that the name seems most appropriate) the paper has moved and moved and moved.

In the twenties, when women were fairly bursting with emancipation, the Varsity, true to its tradition of keeping up with the times, segregated its staff. The male section (if any) moved into a small room next to the present Men's Employment (or is it Unemployment?) Office.

There is nothing like close co-operation between editor and staff. So the editor sat right in the room, contained within a little partition to jeep him quiet and under control, and all you had to do was to lift your foot and put it over the "wall" and you were right with the brass. Maybe it was a good idea, that segregation. The other part of the staff (female) was housed in even a smaller room at the end of the UC cloisters, and probably had a lot of fun. When a news editor in Hart House needed help, his female assistant assisted him in UC. The possibilities are unlimited, but anyhow, they got the paper out. That was because they couldn't enter Hart House, as they are still supposed not to do. (Try it sometime, girls.)

In the early forties (this century) the men staffers became as scarce as a coed engineer, perhaps because they didn't appreciate the segregation, and the office was moved entirely to UC, where it remained till this year, with the mice and the smell.

The editorial office was 200 feet and at least three collisions with rushing copyboys around the corner corridor. After the war, the male ranks of campus journalism swelled again and Hole 95 in the UC basement bulged at the seams. Even the ratholes were utilized. There were papers on the tables, stories under the tables, editorials in the garbage can (Hmm. . .) and football pictures of three years ago in the "Incoming" basket. It was fun.

The only window in the place was as eccentric as a sports writer doing a music review. When the masses of rats and people made the air solid enough to be eaten for dessert, the combined strength of the news and sports departments couldn't pry it open. Then it came up with a bang, and promptly began spewing snow on our prized photographs and freshie reporters. When you tried to close it, you found that it was easier to move the whole table into the corridor, just freeze and forget it. Anyhow, it was fun. We hope the new one will be equally so, rats or no rats.

SAC Office New Home For SCM

The University of Toronto Board of Stewards yesterday approved recommendation that the Hart House office formerly occupied by the Students' Administrative Council be used as headquarters for the Assistant to the Warden and the Student Christian movement.

Joseph McCulley, Warden of Hart House, said the SCM will take over what used to be the private office of E. A. Macdonald, secretary-treasurer of the council, and that the general office would be used by Garth McDowell, newly-appointed Assistant to the Warden and undergraduate secretary.

Space was made available this fall when the council moved their office to the old Observatory Building which will also house the undergraduate newspaper, The Varsity, and the yearbook, The Torontonensis.

Mr. McDowell, who succeeds Dave Gardner as Assistant to the Warden, will take over many of the duties formerly handled through the Warden's office. He will be staff advisor to the numerous social, athletic and educational committees who use Hart House as their headquarters.

Mr. McDowell attended Pickering College and University of Toronto Schools before enlisting in the Royal Canadian Air Force at the outbreak of the Second World War.

Music Faculty Help In Orchestra Work See Continuity Aid

"In order to secure continuity and to take advantage of the instruction offered by highly trained conductors, it has been decided that in future the University of Toronto Orchestra and Chorus should be conducted by members of the Faculty of Music," Students' Administrative Council secretary-treasurer E. A. Macdonald said yesterday. These two groups have previously been organized and run by undergraduates.

"Another important feature of the new arrangement," he said, "is the decision to make membership in either the Orchestra or chorus obligatory for all students registered in the Faculty of Music. This membership is now part of their course and only members of the Conservatory orchestra or the Opera School will be excused."

Mr. Macdonald emphasized the fact that these new arrangements would in no way hinder undergraduates not registered in the Faculty of Music from joining the groups. "Anyone who has an interest in good music is most welcome to join," he said. "The new arrangements do not limit the size of the Orchestra and chorus. If two hundred students ask to joi, this Campus will be the proud owner of a 200 piece orchestra."

"The new arrangements have been made simply to improve the music at this University," he said. "This way, those joining will have access to a much larger library of music and will be under the tutelage of experts. Student conductors will still be able to gain experience under the regular conductor." It has not yet been decided whether a student will conduct at any of the concerts.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Summer Summary

Let it be admitted here and now that even the least discerning film-goer might have palled before last winter's sere film season. In direct contrast, the summer just gone by offered a series of vastly superior movies, many from the U.S. Man On a Tight-rope, Shane, The Story of Three Loves, and various others lightened the summer scene. Young Bess, made in the U.S. with a British cast including Jean Simmons, Stewart Granger, and Deborah Kerr, was a lively re-creation of the young-womanhood of Elizabeth I, quite faithful to Margaret Irwin's book of the same name, but probably not to the original events. MGM's contribution to coronation season, Young Bess is one of the best costume pieces in months; it carries a visual conviction which is nearly always borne out by the dialogue.

Other early summer films of interest which you may still be able to find in the small theatres include The Yellow Balloon, an out-of-the-ordinary English thriller about a child murderer, and Alfred Hitchcock's enthralling, subtle I Confess which resembles his most recent good-humoured work about as much as Birth of a Nation resembles Gentlemen Prefer Blondes.

The prize film of the summer, however, turned up at Loew's for a few short weeks around the beginning of August. Most Vincente Minelli fans will never admit that The Bandwagon surpasses his great American in Paris, but its general air of well-informed hilarity and the dozen or so reminiscent songs spotted throughout raise it far above the general run of recent musicals. Much of The Bandwagon's charm is due to Jack Buchanan, the famed song-and-dance man who first rose to stardom with Gertrude Lawrence and Bea Lillie in the Andre Charlot revues. With bumptious Nanette Fabray, also of the Broadway stage, he often pulls the picture right out from under the feet of Fred Astaire, no slouch in the charm department himself.

Genevieve, Lili, and The Moon is Blue were all late-summer arrivals, and Lili, at least, seems to have settled down for the winter. An unusual story about an orphan girl who falls in love with a circus magician but ends up marrying a crippled puppeteer, Lili only escapes the mawkish by a slight margin, but its delicate direction, excellent dancing and the performances of Lesie Caron and Mel Ferrer place it beyond all criticism.

Genevieve, at the Hyland, is an easygoing technicolor confection about the British Veteran Car Club's annual London-to-Brighton cavalcade of aged automobiles. Included in the events of the weekend run are a beautiful lady trumpeter, and a strictly illegal race back to London between two fifty-year-old vehicles, one piloted by Our Hero, the other by the wholly delightful villain of the piece, enacted by Kenneth More. Kay Kendall plays the trumpeter, and nicely too.

Among the distinctions garnered by F. Hugh Herbert's The Moon is Blue is that of being banned by the U.S. Navy. The U.S. Army has, as yet, no comment on this schism in Pentagon policy: the film continues to pile the customers into any theatre that cares to show it unsanctified by the approval of the Motion Picture Production Code. Enlivened by Maggie MacNamara's sprightly performance as a very honest girl, and David Niven's as an aging but undaunted wolf, The Moon is Blue is witty, frank, unsubtle, and very entertaining.

A final note of gloom amid the sunbeams: contrary to its enromous advance publicity, Innocents in Paris has not the slightest distinction to merit its long run at the Savoy. Indeed, it's probably the most depressing British film to hit Toronto, ever. Without wit or originality, it has little to recommend it except an exceptional facility in interweaving six or seven totally unrelated episodes, and Ronald Shiner's performance as an English bandsman on a shy but rowdy binge.

Jazz

At The Philharmonic

It was a'rockin'. You never saw such jumpin' and stompin' till the break of dawn. No, it was not the Saturday Night Fish Fry; it was the Wednesday night Jazz at the Philharmonic in Massey Hall. This organisation is one of the best money makers in jazz to-day, and it would seem justified when one looks at the impressive line-up of jazz artists engaged in it: Still there were relatively few moments when they achieved good jazz.

In the opening number, the JATP Blues, Phillips, Smith, Webster and Harris did some imaginative blowing at the start of their solos, but they too, soon disintegrated into the general pattern of loud, disorganized and banal playing. The climax was lost in the determined riffing of the outsize line-up. But no one could say that this was the fault of the artists alone. They had to satisfy an audience, the majority of which consider that the highest note, the loudest riff and the fastest beat necessarily constitute the best of jazz. It is no wonder that some resorted to a certain and well-known and violent saxy dance in order to satisfy them. After all it means money.

The melting treatment of such ballads as September Song and Laura, with some esperially nice improvisation by Carter was quite a relief from the previous unsuccessful cacophony. J. C. Heard on the drums did quite an impressively tricky solo number, but as an accompanist only produced one or two interesting rhythms all night.

By far the most enjoyable portion of the session was the set by the Oscar Peterson trio, piano, guitar and piano. Here were the organization, the co-operation and color so patently lacking in the 'jam Session. Their second number with its pleasing balance and its original yet ordered development was the highlight of the evening. In the usual Peterson fashion he managed within the next few numbers to bring in a variety of familiar tunes including the theme from the first movement of Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata. "Quasi una Fantasia" was right! He also did a piece which resembled the sound of a large clock drowning.

Ella Fitzgerald without any of the usual obvious gestures quietly put over some really smooth and facile jazz singing including her acknowledgedly 'still available' smooth sailing.

The ensemble came back for one more shot at raising the capacious Massey Hall roof. It is too bad that when jazz does come to the philharmonic it does not fulfill the possibility it has of making a real contribution to music.

ART REVIEW

Kazuo Nakamura

Kazuo Nakamura, now exhibiting in Hart House, has an unbelievable facility for bringing fields, cities, mountains and moods out of wet blobs of water colour and feathery black strokes. It would be unfair to call him either an abstractionist or a realist. He is more than either. All the exhibited work deals with actual landscapes, seen and made visible through techniques of abstraction, but more real than realism could have made them.

This is truly an "exhibition", in that Mrs. Nakamura has set himself a very difficult assortment of feats to perform. Imposing various restrictions on himself, and using styles ranging from Dufy to Japanese traditional, he attempts to make what he sees and feels tangible to the spectator. In almost every attempt, he succeeds.

He mops purple colour across wet paper, and it is a misty meadow, complete with brown-lit marsh and the croak of frogs. He swipes out a stiff black series of lines, and they are suddenly mile upon mile of open farm land. He takes a pen and a ruler and puts the breeze on paper. He uses vague colours, drab colours, gay colours, garish colours; variety and monotony, and every permutation turns out to be the only right one.

It is a joy to have an artist in Hart House who obviously knows what he is doing and how to do it. We are used to being deceived by contemporary artists, but being so deceived into a new perception of natural beauty is a rare and a welcome experience.

Signs of the Times

This is one play that the Varsity Blues are bound to use dozens of times in their opening football game tomorrow with Western Mustangs. It's centre John Wismer handing the ball to rookie quarterback Eddie Skrzypek.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

The Blues play a pre-season game with the Western Mustangs at the Bloor Bowl tomorrow afternoon. The sports department of The Varsity believes that the final league standings will look something like this: Toronto, Western, McMaster, McGill and Queen's.

The reasoning behind this logic follows the facts. Perennially, John Q. Metras' Western Mustangs and Bob Masterson's Varsity Blues wage a nip and tuck battle for the Yates silverware. The Mustangs managed to cop the sacred cup five of the seven years since the war and the Blues relieved them of the burden of carrying the emblem of the Senior Intercollegiate championship back to London the two years they missed.

If habit is not sufficient indication that things are about the same as years gone by, the profit and loss column with respect to staff should be. We think that Western will miss Doug McNichol and Ray Truant more than the Blues will miss Bill Bewley, Joe Harris and Dunc Ellis, last year's all-stars. McNichol was the second half of an effective pass attack, and Ray Truant was probably the best defensive half in the league.

The final listings will probably be determined by two gents named Ed Skrzypek and Don Getty. Don Getty, is well known for his fine passing in the last half of last season and particularly the final game with the Blues. Probably Getty is a little more experienced than Big Ed but we think Skrzypek's long pass to Fred Smale and Gene Chorestecki gives the rookie Blue QB the big edge. We know there are question marks. Enough question marks to rate the Blues as possible threats for the cellar. But we think enough will prove themselves to push Toronto to their Yates festivities.

Sure, and McMaster is the dark horse of the league. In their first try at Senior ball last year, the Marauders lost all their exhibitions, but we like to remember the game little bunch of freshmen, led by Ed Parente and Ed Kozakowski. The Marauders have lost two of their best in Lorne Wrigglesworth and Lee Munn. But we think the sentimental favourites of the Intercollegiate will have enough to take them to the show position in their first semester in the Senior loop.

We are really sorry for Vic Obeck and Frank Tindall, coaches of the Redmen and Gaels for we expect they will be attempting to outsnarl each other in the big fight for he all-so-rans. Obeck will miss Geoff. Crain, the best three-way quarterback to come up through the ranks of the college ranks. But with Len Shaw, Hal Biewald, Garnet Bertrand, Fred Wilmot and Wally Kowl all back, the Redmen should be a little better than the best that Queen's can muster.

Queen's suffered the most actually, through graduations and non-graduations. Most of their last season's starting half line went by the board, including Don Griffin, Ken Atwood, Jack Sisson, Stu Kennedy and Toni Arnoldi.

You think we might be a little off in our predictions? Hang around friends, till the end of the season. One of us is going to be eating crow and we don't think it will be us.

Gaels Weakened Is It Possible?

By UNCLE KINCAID
(Sports Editor, Queen's Journal)

The 1953 grid season for Frank Tindall and his tricolor charges is at this time a big question mark, with the initial test under fire slated for Saturday when the Gaels play host to Balmy Beach, of the O.R.F.U.

The Golden Gaels will be sporting the new look in football this year with many unfamiliar faces joining the club for the first time. Graduation and academic difficulties took more than their share of the talent from Richardson Stadium. Among those leaving via the graduation route were Don Griffin, who will be sadly missed at the quarter slot. With him go Ken Atwood, Jack Sisson and Bill Gatfield from the half line. All-star end, Tony Arnoldi, now carrying the double blue of Balmy Beach, Stu Kennedy currently centering the Ottawa Rough Riders, Walt Waddell, and John Varcoe are major losses along the line.

Norm Dyson, Ron Lane, Brian Gibbs and Bobby Bevan are chief among those who lost the battle with the faculty last spring. These boys are going to be missed when the Gaels line up on the Third against Varsity.

Jake Edwards and his Champion Comets have supplied the greater number of replacements to fill the empty places and from all reports, they are doing a bang up job. Pete Cranston, back after a good year with the Tricolor, will likely start at quarter and from here, it looks like Wally Mello of the Comets will be his replacement. Frank Geard, a consistent hoofer for the Comets last year, will probably be handling the kicking chores.

Back for another season with the Big Team are Jack Roberts, Pete Zarry and Doug Bell, on the half line. They will be assisted by such notables as Greg McKelvey, Al. Kocman, and Jimmy Cruikshank, all up from the Comets.

The front wall will be spearheaded by big Gary Lewis, this year's Captain, back at Queen's after a stint with the U.S. Marines. Jack Zwirewich, Doug Hargreaves, C.U.P. All-Star Sherm Hood and Jack Cook will lend the exprienced flavour to the Wing Line with the greater number of the alternates once again coming from last year's Intermediates.

The mixture of new blood with old which is so prevalent this year can very easily produce a winning combination. For that the Golden Gaels are once again considered the Dark Horse of the League.

As regards new blood, the Queen's AB of C went all out this year as they hired Bruce Boa, late of Western and the Calgary Stampeders of the WIFU to act as Line Coach.

Benny Says...

One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, has been kind enough to send us the following probable scores for the Senior Intercollegiate games scheduled for tomorrow afternoon. Benny is offering 2 to 1 on the Blues ar[illegible] the lineup to Benny's emporium forms outside room 5, University College.

Toronto Blues 15 - Western Mustangs 7.

McMaster Marauders 9 - McGill Redmen.

Softball Soon Opener, Oct. 5

Batter-r-r-r up. It won't be long now before we'll be hearing that call and women's softball will be under way for the fall of '53. The resounding smack of pop flies will be ringing over the walls of Varsity Stadium and fences of Trinity field come early October. Practices and tryouts start any day now, and girls from all colleges and faculties are urged to participate. After all, who knows of a better way to whittle off that excess poundage acquired on the beach?

Freshies, this invitation is of special interest to you. Women's softball provides an excellent introduction to college sports and helps you to see just how they run things 'round here. As a lot of us know, these games are loads of fun for everyone — 'specially the umpires. So, gals—don't miss a good thing — come out and limber up!

College and faculty representatives are meeting tomorrow to decide on schedules and leagues for the softball season. Those present will represent U.C., Vic., St. Hilda's, Meds., St. Mike's, P.O.T.s, Phys. Eds., and perhaps Nursing. Helen Saarinin, in charge of women's interfaculty softball, tells us that the schedule is due to start on Oct. 5th. Last year, Vic. I was topped in the final round by P.H.E. L Perhaps with the new blood that we're hoping to get this season, there will be someone to take over the position of the mighty Phys-ed. femmes.

So sports and spectators — get into the swing (the batter's swing, that is), and make this a bigger and better season for the weaker sex in sports.

HELP!

There are several openings on the Varsity sports staff in both men's and women's departments for either reporting or make-up or preferably both. No workman's compensation or four months with pay—sorry. In fact, no pay at all. We do offer, however, congenial surroundings and excellent chances for advancement. You may discover great hidden talent in the field of journalism. Interested people should report to the sports desk any time day or evening, in the Varsity office, basement of the SAC building.

U of M Track Star McEwen Blues Coach

Don McEwen, Ottawa native, who has won championships by the hatful for the University of Michigan track team the last four years, moves to Varsity this fall to assist with the coaching of U. of T. squad.

"The Michigan Flyer", as he is known, has ruled as United States champion at two miles the last two years, having registered a time to nine minutes and one second for that distance. He has also been timed at as low as four minutes and nine seconds for the mile.

McEwen graduated from Michigan this summer after spending four years in a business course there and came to Toronto to take a position with the Shell Oil Company. At the request of the overworked Varsity coach, Hal Brown, McEwen consented to direct the track team while Brown continues as a specialist in feld events.

Brown said last night he hopes to better Varsity's intercollegiate track status of last year when they placed third behind the champion Western outfit. He pointed out that, though they were third, the Blues trailed the winners by only eight points.

Several veterans are returning to the team. Dick Harding returns to his specialties, the 220 and 440-yard events, to seek to make up for last year's showing when he sprained an ankle the week before the intercollegiate meet. Also back is Dave Preston, three-miler, miler Bill Eckersley and distance runner Herb Tilson. Strongmen Juri Vrzesnevski and Endel Tulving are expected back. Bob Hamilton, who was adjudged outstanding among interfaculty trackmen last year, is back at school but there is some question of his eligibility.

The intercollegiate meet is carded for McGill on Oct. 21 this fall. In the Bloor Bowl, the junior interfaculty meet is on Oct. 8 and the senior on Oct. 15.

COUPON BOOKS admitting to the student section at Varsity Stadium will be sold for $1.50 each TODAY, Friday, from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. at the south door of Varsity Arena (opposite Museum).

CONDITIONS OF PURCHASE. Only one ticket per student will be sold on presentation of Admit-to-Lecture Card with athletic portion attached. Married students may purchase an additional book for their wives. Athletic membership cards must always be presented with coupon books at gate.

GRADUATE STUDENTS who are registered in full time courses may purchase tickets by showing Hart House membership card or identification from the office of the School of Graduate Studies.

Fall Fashions

In 1919, Hart House, the University of Toronto men's student union, was officially opened to the undergraduate body. It was internationally acclaimed as the greatest architectural masterpiece of the year on the continent.

Alas, could they see it now.

Evidently ashamed of their fine gothic windows, they have half hidden them with some mad oriental-looking drapes of green and red. The age-old and distinguished chesterfield lounge have been removed. They have been replaced by strange looking shapes in orange, yellow, green, and decently enough, brown. Nothing about the bare armrests and angular footstools lends itself to an atmosphere of relaxation.

There is no doubt about it, modern buildings, and modern furnishings are a fine thing. The Victoria College Student Union has proven that. There, a colourful structural design is in complete harmony with loud interior colours and modern furnishings. There is no ugly clash closing in on you the moment you enter the door.

Is there anyone who would be so rash as to suggest renovation of University College? The finest tradition of the University of Toronto would be ruined in the press for conformity. Even if Hart House is only 34 years old, there is still no more reason for spoiling its stature than that of University College.

But renovations are the result of popular demand. Certainly some refitted furniture was needed in Hart House. However, they have the facilities for completely rebuilding their furnishings from the bottom up, and if it was impossible to do anything more with the old foundations, surely someone could have put some original thought to the matter, and come up with a new look to do justice to the building. Who knows, but the student body, and the board of stewards might not have found greater satisfaction in having resisted "the pressure of standardization," and of popular demand.

Signs of the Times

On disturbing feature of the modern novel has been the increasing stress on sex. While the novelist must sell his work we don't believe that it should be at the expense of certain standards of morality.

The novelist today has shown a stronger sense of social justice, but in matters of marriage and chastity he has shown a marked deterioriation. This, the Archbishop of York, Dr. Garbett, deplores. And we join him.

Apparently the modern writer feels there should be no limitation to his sexual escapades, that chastity is a sign of weakness and failure. Too often unlimited sex is used to reflect strength of character and self-realization.

But while we are quick to criticize the writer, we can't help asking if he isn't simply putting into words the actual trend of our moral standards in society itself.

Diaper Kids

An editorial in the first issue this year of Toike Oike, The Varsity of the Engineers, recalls the proud words of the Engineering Society's president emeritus. Skulemen are no longer "hard-living, beer-sluggin' slide-rule men," the editorial repeats.

It continues that the Engineers are being recognized as hard-working and sincere. "It may seem contradictory for a Skuleman to be changing from the rugged individuals who were renowed for downing beers, to chaps whose claim for fame is their diligent work, but the trend is a welcome one."

We agree, as odd as it may seem, if there is a trend, but we wonder.

Only yesterday about 400 young budding Engineers stormed up to Victoria College, stole bloops off Vic freshies, and, to top it all, "kidnapped" three innocent coeds. All this brought the expected reaction from the president of the Victoria College Union. He called the "assault" an act of "childishness."

What else can we call it?

If it was fun, then surely there are more mature ways of having it. If it wasn't, then where is that trend the Oike editorial so produly welcomed?

Because we follow a policy of fairness we will admit there are some earnest and diligent Engineers, but it will take a lot more than these few to indicate a trend.

Gothic Comfort?

The Pressure of Society

Believing that the President of the University of Toronto struck home on a very timely maladjustment of society in his address to the student body on opening day, we are reprining verbatum a section of the address given.

The third quality of which I speak is self reliance. Thsi is not the same thing as conceit.

YOU ARE NO LONGER pupils, you are students. In the University you will be expected to pay less attention to the letter and more attention to the spirit. The premium will be on your thinking, rather than your memory. You will not earn even a passing mark by repeating the undigested ideas of others. You will not be gauged by your knowledge of a single text; you will be required to relate many areas of learning. The purpose of this educational theory and practice is to get you to develop your own toughness to mind, to work out your own ideas, and to adhtre to your own views, while at the same time studying the opinions of others and being ready, if convictions come to you, to change your opinions. "Next to being right in the world," wrote Thomas Henry Huxley "the best of all things is to be clearly and definitely wrong, because you will come out somewhere. If you go buzzing about between right and wrong, vibrating and fluctuating, you come out nowhere; but if you are absolutely and thoroughly and persistently wrong, you must, some of these days, have the extreme good fortune of knocking your head against a fact, and that sets you all straight again."

YOU WILL BE SUBJECTED, all your lives to the most insidious pressure of modern society —the pressure of standardization. Every day we are adjured through pictures, print and propaganda to pursue the same goals, admire the same people, enjoy the same pastimes, wear the same clothes and think the same thoughts. There are hundreds of clubs and societies—political, social, professional, industrial and even, God forgive, the name, of cultural—which tend to submerge the individual in the tide of conventional mediocrity. The most valuable member of society is the man or woman who has the capacity for dissent, who sets up a resistance to mass movements and mass ideas. Emerson wrote, long ago: "Whoso must be a man must be a nonconformist." I am not praising eccentricity for its own sake, although Canada cuold easily support more "characters." I am calling for an independence of mind, a critical spirit that can stand up against all the dreary platitudes and the pallid inanities that assail us. There are amenities of civilized living that must be observed; individualism should not be indulged in, to the distress of other members of the Community. But I do hope that every member of this University will develop the habit of thinking toughly and tenaciously for himself.

IF YOU ARE SELF-RELIANT, you will not follow the crowd. You will make up your mind. You will not believe everything that you read in print. You will not succumb to mass hysteria and to the paralysis of fear engendered by demagogues who seek their own political advancement. I mention two examples of what I have in mind. You are aware of the attacks that have been made on independence of thought and freedom of discussion, especially in universities. I pray that in Canada we shall be on guard against the methods of the informer, the agent provocateur, the witch-hunter or the Gestapo, the concept of guilt by association and the technique of the smear, which are foreign to the concept of liberty that we cherish.

At Least Six Inches

What's all this rot on conformity mused Cat as he walked along Hoskin eyeing the new skirts yesterday. Cat liked his skirts anyway they came. They were all the same anyway, and Cat couldn't see how anybody would change them, or for that matter why anybody would want to.

Then he saw it.

At least six inches higher and s l u n g straight from the shoulders. Repulsive he thought. "I like the old way."

And when it turned the corner there was no alternative. Cat followed. "What a monster," he was still thinking, as he followed it off the bus an hour later.

By this time Cat was starting to wonder what he was doing. Surely there was some method to his madness. He just wouldn't follow this all the way home for nothing. He had to find out about it.

But how was he going to do it, he asked himself, as he slipped in the door beside it. He would wait and see.

Ten minutes later he got his chance. In a moment of weakness it had been hung in a dark corner of the bedroom. Cat leaped to his chance. He fumbled with the opening, but it wouldn't come.

"Confound," growled cat as he stalked away. "Whoever would want to put a lock on a fishing kreel."

Bushy.

BLUES UPSET MUSTANGS 11-1

There Goes Phil

Varsity Blues' rookie fullback Phil Muntz is off and running in one of the many jaunts he made through the Western Mustangs' defences Saturday as the Blues surprised the defending intercollegiate champions 11-1 in a pre-season exhibition clash at Varsity Stadium. Muntz was a member of Varsity's champion intermediate team last season.
Pursuing Muntz is Western's guard, Mike Newediuk. Guard Jack Fowler is about to dive at Muntz while Cunningham (22) is otherwise occupied.

Varsity Unveils New Offensive

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The powerful and accurate kicking of a pair of veterans and the running of a half-dozen rookie backfielders provided more than enough spark to give Varsity Blues an 11-1 victory over a lustreless crew of defending college champions from Western in a pre-season warm-up game at Varsity Stadium Saturday afternoon.

Steve Oneschuk booted a sensational 34-yard field goal and left-footed Al Haig hoofed two monumental singles but it was a surprising group of young Blue backs that up-ended the highly touted Mustang team. With runners like fullbacks Phil Muntz and Don Cheeseman and halves Bob Pinkney, Pete Maik, and Al Riva along with veteran backs Steve Oneschuk and Bob Dale ripping the Western defences for 218 yards on the ground, the Blues showed fans the kind of offensive they lacked all last season when they lost their 1951 crown to the same Mustangs.

Blues opened the scoring in the first quarter when quarterback Eddie Skrzypek fumbled on second down at the Western 34 and Oneschuk kicked a field goal from a sharp angle. Skrzypek set up the score when he hit Muntz with a 14-yard toss at the 33. Al Haig plowed through for five and Oneschuk tried another field goal. This one was wide but portly Carl Kanteroff charged through to flatten Brian Young for a single point.

The Blues added another in the second period when, scrimmaging at their own 40, Ollie Mandryk hit both Oneschuk and Murray Hadlow wiht long passes but both throws were dropped. Al Haig moved in and kicked a show-stopping 75-yard kick for another single point.

The only touchdown of the afternoon came in the third quarter with Bob Dale the scorer. Here's how it happened: Jacques Belec of Western fumbled at the Blues' 50-yard line and Dale recovered. Rogers went for three and then Doug Geekie, the third Varsity quarterback to show, completed a 26-yard pass to end Bill Horton at the Western 30. Cheeseman made seven and Geekie sneaked for another first down. Pinkney grabbed four and then Geekie tossed one to Maik who went down to the Western 5. Dale was stopped on a pitchout to the left and then went wide to the right on the same play for the major. The convert attempt was blocked but Haig made up for it when he hoofed a single from the 28.

Western got their only point in the fourth frame when rookie Jocko Thompson kicked a 60-yard single.

The Blues had been on the doorstep back in the third quarter just

Dr. Smith Favors Govt. Aid To Canadian Universities

President Sidney Smith came out emphatically Friday in favor of more state aid to the universities of this country. Answering a list of questions prepared by The Varsity, Dr. Smith said that increasing financial problems were causing universities to lean more heavily on government aid.

He sid that this would not alter the independent status of universities as many people believed. While state aid to the University of Toronto had increased since the end of the war, the President made it clear that no freedom had been lost.

(Earlier this year Dr. F. Cyril James, principal and vice-chancellor of McGill University, stressed the need for state help. He said that McGill faced a deficit of $888,000 for the coming academic session largely because the Quebec government refused to accept federal grants-in-aid to universities.)

Dr. Smith said that about 80 percent of university costs came from staff salaries. He said the Toronto's building campaign had relatively little to do with costs except by adding to the operational costs. Most of the buildings have been financed by private capital.

The fees raised for this session were necessary, the President said. The boosts averaged 13.6 percent. Even with this increase salaries aren't what they should be in comparision with the cost of living, Dr. Smith declared.

He said that the higher fees at Toronto would not have an adverse effect on enrolment. As far as any advance prediction could be made enrolment would be about as high as last year's if not more.

Dr. Smith felt that fees were not too high when compared to fees thirty years ago. He said he was considering cost of living and salaries expected upon graduation. He claimed that when he went to university fees were proportionally the same.

But Dr. Smmth warned that high fees may mean the loss of the rural student to whom $10 meant "a very lot." In this regard he said there was a real need for more bursaries and scholarships and other means of financial aid. He added that this aid should be for the "good" student as well as the grade A student.

Child Study To Obtain New Home

After a feud, which saw Mayor Allan Lamport intervene and defend the Blatz Institute of Child Study, the Property Committee of the City of Toronto allowed the Institute to move into the old Leighton McCarthy residence at 45 Walmer Rd.

The decision, passed earlier this summer required an amendment of the City Zoning By-Law. The Ratepayers Association objected to the move, and said that the Institute would be a nuisance to the residents with its noise, comings and goings, and unsightliness.

The Mayor at the same time had argues that the Blatz' Institute was an important part of the University and that the operations of the Institute would no way deteriorate the area.

He said that the University would not allow the property "to run down". He added that the University of Toronto could not sell the property without bradking the faith of the benefactor who donated the property.

The Ratepayers' Association had proposed as an alternative that the University use President Sidney Smith's present residence on the campus for the Institute and house the president at 45 Walmer Rd.

SAC Sells Thousands of Books

With the volume slightly below last year, the SAC Book exchange has still sold thousands of books this week, Clarke Deller, II UC, in charge of the exchange, said last week.

"Although we have many satisfied customers," he said, "we still need any kind of English or Engineering texts as well as political science and history books."

The exchange, in the Drill Hall, 119 St. George St., will be open for at least four weeks.

Local Rag Introduces Own Staff

All students who are interested in jounalism and in what makes The Varsity tick, will be able to find out Wednesday at one p.m. in the news office. The office is located in the basement of the Observatory below the offices of the Students' Administrative council.

Those who come down, will meet the people who are in charge of one department or another of the paper.

No entrance examinations will be held and the qualifications for becoming a newswriter are a fair knowledge of reading and writing. The third R is not necessary.

The new office of The Varsity is far more spacious than the previous one. Wheras journalists may have had to sit in each others' laps in the old office, the new one is not crammed. Even the husky sports writers don't shove anybody around this year.

Copy paper is gratis as long as it is used for the purposes of The Varsity.

Low Fees, No Exams

Nocturnal Culture

Most students who attend are unaware that there exists another "University" on this campus, with as varied a selection of courses, beginning when daylight students leave and most of the buildings lie deserted.

The Extension courses of the University of Toronto are ready for another year. Among the most popular of these are the Evening Tutorial Classes of which there are about fifty. Their distinguishing feature is that there are no entrance requirements, no examinations, and no awards given. Yet yearly they are filled to capacity because of the opportunity at self-improvement they provide, and because they are more interesting than most lectures. The Classes are held mostly in UC, several Engineering Buildings, the Museum, Art Gallery and The Conservatory.

Two days of registration are still left: Tuesday 24th, and Wednesday 30th, 7.30—9 p.m. in Simcoe Hall or the Mechanical Building.

Forty students are required to organize a class; a few classes Totalitarianism are discussed and consist of only twenty-five persons. Most classes contain twenty lectures a year; the fee is usually fifteen dollars.

One lecture a week is given, and it lasts from one-and-a-half to two hours a night. Lectures begin at 8 o'clock. The subjects of the classes touch on just about every field of human endeavour. Astronomy, with the Solar system and the milky way. Authorship—given by an author and ditor.

There is a lecture on current events—Canada's place in the world of today: Democracy and compared: English for newcomers, especially designed for improvement in diction and conversation, and technical terms. Most modern languages are taught in separate courses, and literature as a whole is gone over in several different courses using different methods. Home Furnishing, Home Gardening. Interior Decoration for the housewife with a yen for skill, and modern magazine writing for money.

The possibilities and the gains are limitless; the cost is so little. It should be worth anybody's while, and it will be time well spent.

UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICE

MEDICAL EXAMINATION

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, MI. 9644; for Women, MI. 2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

CHEST X-RAY

The Health Service, in co-operation with the National Sanatorium Association (Gage Institute), provides chest X-rays, which are compulsory for the following students: All new students, all final year students, all medical and nursing students, dental students in their first and last two years, and all students who do not live in Canada. Appointments for all male students not in Arts are made through their class presidents during the week of Sept 28th. Arts students and all women students make their appointments during the same week at the Health Service, unless they have already done so previously. All other students and staff members may have a chest X-ray if they wish. They are urged by the Health Service to do so.

Student-Rate Football Tickets Hart House Fees For Grads

In response to the requests that we receive every year, we have made student-rate football tickets available to graduate students for the first time this year." said Mr. J. P. Loosemore, Financial Secretary of the Athletic Directorate, last Friday. Graduate students enrolled in a full-time course may obtain the tickets on presentation of a Hart House membership card.

This is also the first year that graduate students have been compelled to pay Hart House membership fees. "All men enrolling in the first year of a graduate course paid the $15 fees this year and in three years' time all members of the Graduate School will be paying fees." said Joe McCulley, Warden of Hart House. "The reason for this is simple;" he said, "graduate students have been taking advantage of the facilities of Hart House for many years without actually helping to pay for these as do the rest of the students on the campus."

"The house attempts to provide reasonably priced meals for men students," he said. "At every check that we have taken in the Great Hall we have found this service being enjoyed by the graduates who have paid nothing towards the upkeep of the Hall. The Board of Governors of the University and the Graduate School accepted our request for the fees to be charged to new graduate students," the Warden said.

Graduate students still pay no athletic fees. "We feel that this would be unfair," said Mr. Loosemoore, "as very few graduate students' football tickets should of the facilities available. A grad may use the Athletic Wing of Hart House if he pays a $5 fee — which includes tote box and towel service." The Directorate felt that the students' foot ball tickets should be made available to grads although games are financed by a budget which includes the athletic fees paid by undergraduates. "Very few grads have taken advantage of our offer," Mr. Loosemore said. Only 17 had purchased tickets by last Friday afternoon.

The Students' Administrative Council did not receive fees from graduate students this year. Grads voted 206 - 158 in favour of membership in the SAC the end of last year but "it was felt that the ballots had not been distributed widely enough for the vote to be representative of that large group and their membership was not authorized," said E. A. MacDonald, Secretary-Treasurer of the SAC.

We Went West

Thumb Summer

Canadian motorists are a pretty nice bunch, three University of Toronto coeds discovered this summer. Eva Kemeny, III UC, and Marjorie McLorn and Norma O'Dell, both 5T3 graduates, made a 6,000 mile trip through Western Canada and the United States on a shoestring and their thumbs. Their conclusions — Canadian motorists can really be nice.

The part about Western friendliness isn't all it's cracked up to be, though, the girls found out. "People were a lot friendlier in the East," Miss McLorn said. This is probably because they were not so used to the idea of girl hitchhikers, she thought. "In the American Midwest they looked downright hostilely at us."

While it never occurred to the girls themselves that a 6,000 mile hitchhiking tour was anything to be brave about, most of the motorists were extremely surprised. They were even more surprised to learn that the girls wee university students. "Most of them thought we were running away from home," Miss McLorn said. They were stopped twice for questioning by the Ontario Provincial Police.

Their main advice to other girl hitchhikers is to avoid Sundays, when all the teenagers and young men are on the road, and can become amorous. Outside of this, the only trouble they ran into was with one overly romantic French Canadian.

Most of the motorists were "very decent" though, pointing out to them good cheap hotels and often going miles out of their way to take them closer to their destination. So many motorists insisted on paying for their meals that they hal to give up eating in restaurants. They had practically no trouble getting rides.

Starting out at the corner of Keele and Dundas on June 8, the trip out to Calgary took six days and cost them $10 apiece. The return trip from Vancouver to Toronto took them 11 days, and cost about $30 apiece. They ate better on the way home, though. Instead of salami sandwiches three meals a day, they just had them for lunch and dinner.

The girls worked in Banff for three weeks. From there they headed — still by thumb — out to Vancouver, where they stayed another month. Although jobs were pretty hard to find in Vancouver, Norma worked in a toy factory for 10 days, Eva in a grocery for two weeks.

"We were always just ahead of or just behind disaster," Miss McLorn said. The highway at Big Bend washed out four hours after they passed over it.

The girls slept in hotels every night, but, to save money, Miss McLorn and Miss O'Dell shared a bed, while Miss Kemeny slept on the floor in a sleeping bag made out of a sewn-up sheet.

Christianity Must Offend To Fulfill Mission—Moore

"If Christianity does not give offence in the world and to the world, it is failing in its mission," claimed Dr. A. B. B. Moore, President of Victoria University in an address given at the Term Opening Service held at Knox College Chapel last night. The Service was arranged by the University Christian Council acting on behalf of all the religious groups on the campus.

Dr. Moore spoke on "Offensive Christianity." He felt that Christianity was offensive in four main respects. First, the life of Jesus gave offense to many people because of his higher standards and the self-revelations of human weakness and frailty that these standards give us.

Jesus also made demands and these demands themselves give offense to many. Christianity offends others because of the breadth and scpoe of the Christian message. It is all-inclusive covering all mankind of every race and color.

Finally Christianity gives offense to many people because of the uniqueness of Christ's life, death and personality. Dr. Moore stated that if persons failed to realize all these four ways that Christianity is offensive, they failed to understand the strength of the Christian Gospel.

The Scripture was read by John Stalker, President of the Medical Society and new President of the Students' Administrative Society.

Man. Univ. Frosh Fire In Theatre

Winnipeg —(Special; — Freshmen ends at the University of Manitoba are a little more exciting than at Varsity.

The show at a Winnipeg theatre was interrrupted recently by about a dozen Manitoba students who dashed onto the stage . . . gave their college yell . . . and excited crying, "Fire!"

The audience was upset by the demonstration — so much so that one elderly patron almost suffered a heart attack, the theatre manager said. He said he was going to complain to the University authorities, and find out why "there was not more control over the weekends."

Student Visitors To India Find Much Unemployment Summer Jobs Non-Existent

A group of Canadian students, four of them from the University of Toronto, visited India this summer. They met Prime Ministers, students, rich and poor alike.

One of the leaders of the group, Graeme Ferguson, secretary of the local World University Service, and a graduate of Toronto, said that they were overwhelmed by the hospitality they found in all parts of Asia they visited.

"We were passing through Madras one day, on our way to Ceylon, when we met an Indian businessman," recalled Ferguson. "He asked if we had seen the city. We told him we had not." He put his car, his chauffeur at our disposal, and invited us to stay with him, "just to make us stay," Ferguson said.

John Hastings, D.P.H. said that even the poorest insisted that they enter their house and have a cup of tea with them and a banana. "We felt as if we had eaten their supper," he said, "but couldn't refuse the invitations. They were hurt even when we tried."

Prime Minister Nehru received the group. According to Hastings he told the students two months before he made it public that he was skeptical about the United Nations. "He said he thought the UN was representative of the Western block only, until all nations were members," recalled Hastings.

The Prime Minister of Pakistan, Mohammed Ali, who also spoke to the group recalled experiences of Ottawa, where he was Ambassador.

Unemployment is terrific according to Ferguson, even among University graduates.

An Arts student, who has failed an exam in his undergraduate years has ruined his career; he can never get a decent job said Ferguson.

He explained that the only chance for an Art student to get suitable employment after graduation was the civil service. But there aren't enough jobs for all students in the civil service. "One whose academic background is not good can't get in. As a consequence, they study harder than we do."

According to Ferguson there is no opportunity for a student to work his way through college. Summer and part time jobs don't exist because of the wide-spread unemployment.

"Some of the students are so poor, that they can't even afford to buy the six-cent lunch offered to them by the University residences," he said. "That diet although considered by the residences to be good, is by no means good according to our Canadian conceptions." We couldn't imagine living on that, he claimed.

There is some resentment against Americans, but not against Canadians, said Hastings. "Probably because Canadians are only known through their good works like the Colombo Plan." He said he observed that while Indians were somewhat jealous of Americans because of their great wealth, they didn't know enough about Canadians to feel the same way.

The students who travelled in India saw some of the equipment donated by students of the University of Toronto. They saw an infirmary at the University of Aligan, a refrigerator at Jamia Millia. They said that a large portion of the library in Krachi is made up of Toronto books.

Underhill To Speak To CCF

Professor F. H. Underhill from the Department of History at the University of Toronto will speak on the Ethical Approach to Socialism on Thursday.

His lecture will be the first in a series of lunch-hour lectures given to the CCF club on the campus.

The club expects to sponsor discussion groups or speakers on Marxism and Fabianism in the near future, said Bruce Batten II UC, an official of the club.

He said that his club will participate in the Model Parliaments again this year. Batten claimed that the campus CCF is an entirely independent organization.

The Best To Come

Above is the new home of the new University of Toronto Faculty of Pharmacy, latest addition to the Varsity scene. Located at Church and Gerrard, it is one of the few buildings of the University located beyond the bounds of the campus and Queen's Park area.

Doctors Mark Opening Of C. H. Best Institute

The red building on the corner looked unhappy. It was standing there in the benign sunshine of early autumn, surrounded by proud edifices of learning and research, facing a quietly busy hospital, and flanked by the stateliest street in Toronto. Still, all it could do was dream of its coming glory, of all the learned feet that would trample its bare floors on the needy errands of research.

The Charles H. Best Institute that is, now a building at the corner of College and University Streets is in honor of its famed namesake, and for the preservation of mankind. The end is set for late this fall, the end that will be a beginning. Because then the Institue will cast off its wraps and face its rivals in all its million dollar splendor.

There was another reason for the building to be unhappy. On Wednesday, Sept. 16, it had been given a brief foretaste of that splendor when a platoon of world famous doctors, including Dr. Sidney Smith, attended and assisted at the "official" opening of the Institute.

Golden keys were turned in its gates by Nobel prize winners, honorary degrees were handed out by the President, and speeches rang through its empty floors. Now that it is all over, and the underground tunnel which leads to the sister Banting Institute Building is blocked up again, it is a little difficult returning to lettered floors, holes in the walls, and the scrape of shovels in the yard. Most of the electricity has been disconnected, all valuable equipment locked up in the only finished laboratory, and glass removed from the front doors for safekeeping.

But the building can wait. After all, when it is really opened it will join the Banting Institute in becoming one of North America's foremost centres of medical research. And it will be fortunate enough to have the man it is named after, insulin co-discoverer Dr. Charles H. Best, as director.

Art Review

Toulouse - Lautrec

University students are always doing ridiculous things. Apology rendered. May we now go on record as very much in favour of Mr. Lautrec, now exhibiting at the Toronto Art Gallery.

The tortured little lush with the penetrating eyes and the powerful, delicate hand has been enjoying a new immortality lately. In this he has not much cause for rejoicing. We have. Lautrec has preserved, in all its beautiful seaminess; the Paris of the 1890's; a Naked City, without shame, without scruples, but with a certain charming impenitence. A city luminous with the iridescense of decay, now dead at the hands of Germans with rifles and Americans with Argus C-3s.

Lautrec was too much a part of his world to be a harsh critic of it, like Daumier. But his involvement makes his treatment a more sympathetic, and even a more accurate one. He records mercilessly; he does not condemn. His caricatures are unkind at times, but cruelty is reserved for himself.

However, the art of Toulouse-Lautrec is more than an archive. His genious is in the breathing life which he gave to his friends on paper, and which survives intact. They chat, argue, dance, make love, rest, ride and dress with complete naturalness. They exude perfume, cognac, tobacco and sweat.

Landscapes and still life failed to impress Lautrec as fit subjects for art. His interest was in anything that moved, and nothing moved too fast to be trapped by his restless hand. Lively horses, dogs and people inhabit his pictures. Undoubtedly it is his own lost mobility which finds expression there, but the joie de vivre he shares with his subjects is at least as great a factor in his interest as the grace he envies in them.

The tragedy of Toulouse-Lautrec has been played up in recent studies, but his work shows another side of his story: a comedy, which he is perfectly capable of appreciating, and of enjoying. He finds himself and his society extremely funny. A frog-faced gentleman, fleeing a bull; a delicate kiss, on a most indelicate nose; all manner of comical faces and comical figures, and everywhere a bearded, bespectacled little man taking it down, more comical than all.

The famous photographs for which Lautrec was so fond of posing are exhibited and they aid the drawings in revealing the man's keen sense of the preposterous. Lautrec as a Muezzin, hailing the faithful to worship from his balcony. Lautrec posing smugly for Lautrec, in one of the first double exposures. Lautrec as a Samurai, solemnly fondling a Japanese doll.

Unable either to obtain or to house all the better known work of so prolific an artist, the Gallery has had to be selective. It has done this at the expense of some of his most "characteristic" work. The little red gin mill with which we have all become so familiar of late is neglected. But some very revealing, and seldom reproduced, items are on display.

A chronic doodler, Lautrec turned out his sketches by the hundreds, on menus, napkins and programmes. We may thank the leisurely waiters of the day for some of his most engaging glimpses. It is only to be regretted that he did no telephoning.

Those of our fellow snobs who speak of "Artists" and "commercial artists" as mutually exclusive animals will have to reckon with Toulouse-Lautrec as one who was both, not alternatively, but simultaneously. Paradoxically the young nobleman, with a sizeable unearned income, welcomed advances from the advertising racket while poorer, prouder men starved on "pure" art. He gave his employers full value for their advertising dollar. The posters are among his best loved and best technical works; cartoons and portraits of colourful entertainers whose paid publicity has outlived them. Burly, dashing Aristide Bruant, gaunt, sensitive Jane Avril, bouncing, ski-nosed Yvette Guilbert and many others are still entertaining, because he found them so.

The pictures of Toulouse-Lautrec represent documentary art at its self-explanatory best. To those who have been tantalized by movies and reproductions, we can only recommend a speedy visit to the Art Gallery (before October 18). Your ATL card gets you in. It cost you plenty; you might as well get some value from it.

Stratford Festival Vital Experience

The new famous Stratford festival was for a long time only the dream of Tom Patterson, a Stratford, Ontarioi, journalist. Mrs. D. Mavor Moore of Toronto's New Play Society made it possible for Patterson to discuss his ideas with Dr. Tyrone Guthrie, formerly of London's Old Vic Theatre. Dr. Guthrie was interested in the challenge of a Shakespearian Festival at the Canadian Stratford, and agreed to investigate the possibilities. After a preliminary survey in July 1952, he went back to England and began scheduling the actual productions.

Eventually enough money was raised to form the Festival Foundation, and with the announcement that two of England's leading stars, Alec Guiness and Irene Worth, had been engaged, the Festival seemed to be on its way at last. Behind the scenes there was an equally imposing group of English specialists. Foremost among these was Tanya Mosiewitch, who was to design not only the costumes and properties, but also the unique stage. From The Old Vic came assistant producer Cecil Clarke, well known throughout England and Europe for his production genius. His wife, Jacqueline Cundall, property maker for the Old Vic, was engaged to head that department in Stratford.

A circular concrete theatre was built in Stratford's Queen's Park, designed so that none of the 1475 seats is further than 45 feet from the stage. The stage itself has many of the features of the Elizabethan theatre. The audience is seated on three sides of the projecting apron platform, with nothing, not even footlights, between them and the players. It was designed this way, not as a copy of the conditions of Shakespeare's day, but because this type of stage has proved freer for the actors, and more rewarding for the audience than the traditional picture-frame stage. The audience is no longer staring at puppets in a box but becomes part of the play itself—ducking and gasping in battle scenes as if they were watching a Hollywood thriller in 3-D. But this type of stage is not merely a novel means of putting over theatrical tricks; it is primarily a stage where the poetry and dramatic truth of Sahkespeare's plays can be more immediately and intimately understood by the audience; where theatre at last becomes the vital experience it is meant to be.

The whole approach to the project was fresh and inspired, for Dr. Guthrie is a producer who bubbles over with originality and ingenuity. Most of the younger members of the cast haunted the rehearsal hall even when their scenes were not called for the privilege of watching Guthrie's amazing technique. No one who was connected with the Festival in any way, could fail to be fired with enthusiasm and faith in the eventual success of the production, when confronted with Dr. Guthrie's dynamic personality and energy.

Charlotte Holmes.

Film Society

Film As An Art

The University of Toronto Film Society is probably the only organization on the campus that has never had a deficit since it came into existence. It was founded seven years ago by a group of undergraduates who considered film-making an art.

Since then the group has shown many pictures which were not shown in commercial theatres, and also some that were. The Film Society gave the academy award winner Neighbors its world premiere. It has produced some pictures with its own 16 mm camera. One of these is As the Twig is Bent, to be shown later this year. It portrays the lives and troubles of the children at the University of Toronto Settlement. Another film made by the society, Parking on this Side, directed by Michel Sanouillet, a member of the staff of University College, has won two homorable mentions at the Canadian film awards.

Although originally an undergraduate organization, the Film Society has graduate members too. "We do try to give our memberships to graduates, but we can't turn down the application of someone who is interested in films just because he is not a student," said Bruce parsons, this year's president.

The group shows the great classics of the silent cinema, modern films of historical importance, and foreign films. They bring in films that members would probably not have other opportunities to see.

Among the pictures to be shown this year are Earth, a silent Russian film; Trouble in Paradise a comedy made in the United States in 1932; Panique, a French version of the psychological drama, Le Milion, a satirical French comedy, and The Strong Man, made in the United States in 1926. They will also show The Wind, a silent abstract American Film made in 1928; Bombshell, with Jean Harlow, the first "it girl", and Louisana Story.

Discussion groups and lectures are sponsored jointly with the Toronto Film Society. Lectures have been given by Norman McLaren, Director of the National Board and the producer of "Neighbours"; Maya Deren, a producer of abstract experimental films and Pare Lorentz, authority on experimental films.

To Avoid Duplication Second Play Changed To 'The Male Animal'

There has been a last minute change in the series of plays that Robert Gill will produce at Hart House Theatre this year. The Shaw comedy Misalliance, to have been performed in November, will be replaced by James Thurber's The Male Animal.

Mr. Gill only found out two weeks ago that a road company is bringing Misalliance to the Royal Alexandra at nearly the same time that he intended to put it on. He decided to change to another play. The Male Animal is about communist scare at a mid-western American university.

The original selection of plays represented, although partly by coincidence, a direct response to the student survey which requested plays by Shakespeare, Shaw, Ibsen, and the Greek Tragedians.

The opening production in October is an English adaptation by Lewis Galantiere of Jean Anouihl's Antigone, a modern French version of Sophocles' classic. Written to meet the requirements of Nazi censorship, it contrasts the plight of the dictator, forcefully argued by Creon, against the single purpose of the tragic heroine. Last produced on the campus by the UC Players Guild in 1947, it was adapted for CBC Wednesday Night last spring.

Since The Wild Duck was the most popular play in the student survey, Mr. Gill has included it on his playbill. Written in 1884, it marks the introduction of symbolism in realistic drama. Of all Ibsen's plays, The Wild Duck with its perfect balance of characterization and irony is, in Gill's opinion, the most suitable for student production. Trinity College presented it during the 1947-48 season.

These three plays, together with the traditional Shakespearean production (The Merchant of Venice is this year's choice) promise an outstanding season. Readings are now being held for The Male Animal and The Wild Duck.

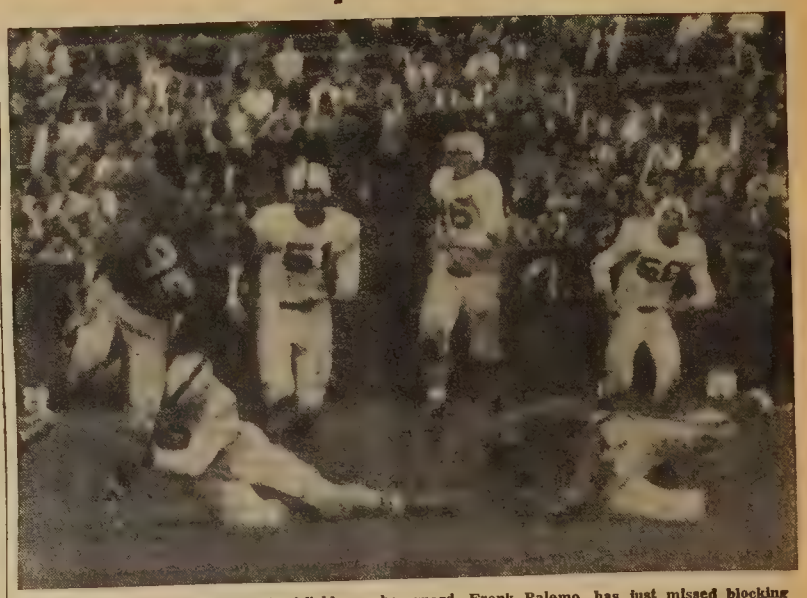
Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

The Blues have the kind of explosive attack that the paid customers are going to like and the fumble is still the best play in Canadian football. At least that is what the Mustangs seemed to be trying to prove in Saturday's pre-season game at Varsity stadium. Those were the only conclusions any normal sports scribe could come to after Shirley Eckel led the band out of the north-east gate.

Our statistics reveal that Western made six fumbles, recovering three themselves, and the Blues helped the Mustangs out by recovering the other three. But the significance lies in the fact that Varsity capitalized on two of the recoveries to score. The first was the third quarter fumble that Bobby Dale recovered and finally turned into a TD by going around the right with room to spare. Again in the third, Gino Fracas, who played a great game in a losing cause for John Metras, dropped the ball with Don Mattason recovering. Al Haig ended a Blue drive by kicking into the end zone for a single.

To add to the misery of John Q., the Blues intercepted three of the twenty passes that Don Getty and Bill Fowler tossed.



But the most encouraging note of the whole afternoon was the offensive that the Blues unleashed. Given the line support, lads like Bob Pinkney, Bobby Dale, Steve Oneschuk, Pete Maik and Mad Man Muntz steamed for big gains. Gains rushing read 215 to 159 for the purple and white. Compared with last year's efforts this is something to write home about.

To make things complicated for coach Bob Masterson, the candidates for the quarterback spot served notice that the final selecions are going to be tough. All three Blue field generals deserve medals on their play of Saturday afternoon. A lot of fans got a big kick out of seeing Doug Geekie handle the ball, in the air and on the ground, as well as anyone on the field. Some fans had already sold Geek down the river since Olie Mandryk and Ed Skrzypek came to camp. Geek was the mastermind of the drive that resulted in Bobby Dale's touchdown.

The big disappointment, as we saw it from our spot in the loft, was the inability of Blue receivers to hold onto soft passes. Twice, Bob Leeming was in the clear with the ball on his fingertips and he dropped the ball. Both times, completed passes would have meant big gains if not TD's. Murray Hadlow was the other Blue who let the easy one get away from him.

All this tub thumping for the home side might make you think we are looking down our long noses at such men as Jacques Belec, Don Getty, Murray Henderson, and Ted Roman. But we are not. In spite of the expected wailing noises that you will hear from the office of the head coach down in London-town, the Mustangs are still a powerful force. No, they are not out of the race. At a matter of fact we think they are still to be reckoned with. The next meeting of the two teams is at home for the Westerners and they haven't lost a game to the Blues in London since the war. Besides in the last few years, the Mustangs have been starting weak and finishing strong. They are still in the league.

Hop Scotch

Pete Maik, one of the rookie backfielders who sparked Varsity's newly-discovered running attack in Saturday's 11-1 defeat of Western Mustangs, is just about away here but not quite as he is being downed by Western's Gino Fracas. Blues' guard, Frank Palemo, has just missed blocking Fracas out of the play, while Westerners, Bob Turner (51), Ted Roman (46) and Don Killinger (50) watch.

Blues Surprise

before Haig's single. They drove for two first downs after Mattason recovered Fracas' fumble on the Mustangs' 39. Cheeseman broke through for 15 and Oneschuk took it to the 13. Geekie hit Bruce Johnson in pay dirt but the play was offside and Johnson was banished from the game for rough play. Varsity was penalized 15 yards and, after another pass failed, Haig kicked the point.

Coach Bob Masterson didn't solve anw quarterback problems as the three he used tured in good performances. Olly Mandryk and Doug Geekie both had the ground attack rolling well and threw plenty of passes, Geekie's clicking particularly well, especially during the touchdown drive in the third when he passed for two downs and picked up another himsef to set up Dale's major.

Eddie Skrzypek's passes were slightly off the mark but he ran the team efficiently. The other QB aspirant, Bill Stevenson, didn't get into the game.

Western looked as though they would sharpen up with a few weeks of training. Don Getty filled the air with passes, most of them right on the mark, but he was the victim of inept receivers. Gino Fracas and Jacques Belec topped the Mustangs backfield which didn't penetrate past the Blues 25-yard line. Captain Jack Thompson was a tower of strength along the line and Jack Wyatt was in for plenty of tackles.

Centre John Wismer went most of the way effectively, as he will probably have to do all season. Don Mattason and Baz Mackie went well in the guard spot while Jack Meaker and Roy McMurty, before he retired with a badly bruised back, were the pick of the guards. Don Smith went well as a defensive end.

Whistlestops: There was a fair turnout of Western fans but they were without band or cheerleaders as UWO classes only open today . . . The Blue and White band was on hand, though, along with majorette Shirley Eckel and a group of last year's cheerleaders . . . Confusion was rife as only three of the Western numbers in the programme were correct . . . Only serious injury of the game was rookie centre John Bodrug who suffered a badly-dislocated shoulder. Steve Oneschuk was hit on the eye in the third quarter and was temporarily blinded and rested for the remainder of the game . . . Tony Andrejicka, who did some fine running for the visitors was a Varsity student last year and failed so he apparently won't be eligible for regular games with the Westerners . . . Some 8,000 fans were at the game, a prelude to the season which opens Saturday with Queen's the visitors at the Bloor Bowl.

Tennis, Any One? Racqueteers Begin

Grab your raquets amd it's off to the courts. Tennis is hitting is hitting the campus again and lists should be up in all colleges for all prospective players on the intercol squad. Four women players from each college will soon be trying out in the semi-finals which will determine the lucky four who make up the big team this season

The Toronto squad put on a very good show last year in the big match which was held at Western, when they tied with McMaster and McGill for first place. This year, we are hoping there will be no tie and that the T.O. ladies hit the top all be themselves. Daph Walker and Ann Innis of U. C. will all be out in the preliminaries plus Ann Kilgour who transferred from Mac to Toronto, in P.O.T.

Right now, listings are open. Matches will be played off during the week any time in the day. Taking a look around the campus, the courts are in pretty good shape and since the summer has not quite worn off yet, players should be in good shape also. Courts are located behind the Vic Union and Saint Hilda's on 'devonshire Place.

The final tourney is scheduled for the 23rd and 24th of October and will be placed of at Queen's. Be prepared for rain; it is a tradition in intercol tennis meets. Last year the whole tourney had to be run off in an afternoon due to interference by the old H20. Teams from Toronto, Queen's, Western McGill and Mac will be competing.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

Well, the rugby season is in full swing now and it's hats (bloops that is) off to our vivacious cheerleaders who were out there on Saturday afternoon. We never could figure out just why people wanted to be cheerleaders. Let's face it, it does seem like a pretty thankless job. But after talking to Ann (Teddy) Taylor, short, dark — P.H.E. 3, we found a far more refreshing viewpoint.

Does the fun one gets out of having such a position make up for the work put into it? Well apparently it does. How would you like to get up in front of thousands of spectators and throw yourself about like that? And how about these nightly practises? No thanks! But when it comes to out of town games (free transportation, ticket and room) — well that's a different story.

Do you realize we didn't have girl cheerleaders around these parts until seven years ago. Up until the year of 1946 the men looked after the rah rah angle. That year, six young ladies were recruited to assist and since then the tradition has been carried on. Strangely enough there was little fuss about the inauguration. Of course a few private protests were put forth that it added too much of a high school touch to the game. But never has there beer any open push to ban the practise — which does seem unusual for such a diligent campus. McGill has managed to keep femininity out of the cheerleading ranks. Apparently the feeling there is that it is "not quite seemly." We wonder how long this can go on.

Selection of the squad which is now in the hands of the Blue and White society is based on behavior as well as ability. They have always managed to make good choices in that girls who could do credit to the University have always been selected. We have never had a showoff in the crew. The same uniforms have always been worn and to us they are far smarter than sloppy old sweaters and jazzy skirts.

We were glad to see such a good turnout for the trials on Thursday and even more pleased to see our four old timers, Ann Taylor, Gail Lowther, Jean McNeil and Dianne Connacher out there at the Saturday tourney. Four "newies" will be added to the ranks by next week. With Shirley at the head of the band and such a fine crew of rah rah'ers it looks like a great year ahead on the sidelines.

McGill Over Marauders Tricolor Upset Beaches

Two mild upsets featured the out-of-town intercollegiate football action Saturday afternoon as McGill Redmen opened the college season with a 13-12 win over McMaster Marauders at Montreal while Queen's Gaels were whipping Toronto Balmy Beach 20-10 in an exhibition encounter at Kingston.

McGill got the drop on the Marauders, who were making their debut in senior competition and led them 13-1 before the Macmen rallied in the last quarter to give the Redmen a scare. Ken Wright passed to Hal Biewald for a McGill major and Fred Wilmot converted, as well as kicking a single to give the Redmen an early 7-0 lead.

That was all for the first half. In the third quarter, Marauder veteran Lorne Wrigglesworth booted a single. Opening the fourth period, George Klein bulled over from the McMaster four, Wilmot converting, to make it 13-7.

The McMaster's quarterback, Joe Kosakowski began to find his receivers. From his 42-yard line, he got away a 27-yarder to Wrigglesworth, who scampered the other 39 yards for a TD. Jim Dodds hit the post with his convert attempt, the play that gave McGill the game as Kosakowski hit Max Woolley in the end zone for another major which Dodds converted, making it 13-12.

Down at Kingston, 14 big points in the third period enabled Queen's to double the score on Balmy Beach 20-10. The Tricolor had led 6-5 at the half.

Political Pot

Already that part of the editorial page devoted to student opinions is active in political debate. This year we find a new party taking the initiative.

If beginings are any indication it would appear that the University of Toronto campus is headed for some earnest campaigning and some individual hairpulling. After the pitiful attempt at a campus election last year, it is surprising that anyone would want to organize another this fall. It takes but one club, treading on the toes of all the others, to waken all to the situation that political clubs are here for a purpose.

Students should not need to be reminded that only by openly condemning that with which they find fault, can interest in the fate of Canadian politics be developed. If political interest drops on this campus again this year, and surely it cannot, some of our present students may not wake up until they find they are so wrapped in an autocratic democracy that they will spend their life of complacency in peace.

The Way Is Paved

Just recently a new building was opened on this campus. That building was named after one of Canada's most brilliant medical scientists, Dr. Charles H. Best.

While the Best Institute on University and College honors an individual, it also stands as a monument to the advances that medical science is making in Canada. Adding to the limited facilities of its neighbour, the Banting Institute, it holds the hopes and prayers of the millions of sick people throughout the world.

Co-discoverer with Sir Frederick Banting of insulin, Dr. Best is deserving of no smaller tribute. It is fitting that medical research has materially benefitted in this tribute.

The way has been paved for more scientific progress; the tools have been offered to many more of those workers who inhabit the domain of research. Research is teamwork, and it goes without saying that the team of Banting and Best realize their indebtedness to the many unknown docors who contributed to the final discovery of insulin.

While man, the patient, is the principal object and concern of medicine, no science is complete without its army of researchers. To the friends of Dr. Best who recognized this and made possible the Institute we offer our praise. To the friends of Dr. Best who will make use of the Institute we offer our deepest hopes.

Above all, it is of significance that our University has made available the field upon which these two groups of friends could meet.

Our Political Future

The Liberals are again forming a government at Ottawa. They were returned with a decided majority. No one seriously contented that the Liberals would not be returned. However, a decidedly stronger opposition was expected. But to say that the election was a major defeat for the other political parties is a misconception. Though no party gained substantially, they all increased in strength at the expense of the Liberals. The Conservatives were the only ones that were considered as an alternative and they still retain that consideration.

WE ARE ESSENTIALLY a two party system and will remain so, we hope, for many years before the chaos of multiple parties overtake us. The LLP are a mere lobby of frustrated individuals in Canada and have no significances whatsoever in the federal political scene. The CCF are a left wing branch that are often referred to as "Liberals in a hurry." However the moderation in the CCF at present is illusory as the heart of the CCF is embedded in the pericardium of socialism, as they will readily demonstrate when circumstances warrant their doing so. The Social Credit are described as a right wing branch of non-conformist conservatives. Here again their present moderation is misleading for the old monetary theories of Douglas and Aberhart are still dear to the hearts of their leaders as we also will see when the soil is more fertile.

SHOULD EITHER OF the minor parties make substantial gains it will be at the expense of a major party. Should circumstances favor them, they may some day replace the major parties, though that possibility is remote at present. The valient effort of Social Credit to emerge a political power has failed to make any substantial gain.

The increased popularity of Social Credit in some areas is a result of a number of factors. They are building a very strenuous organization, the tingle of religion in the party appeals to nonconformist religious groups, and the novelty of the party appeals to many people. Despite their increase in popularity only two out of forty-four candidates were elected to the Legislature in Manitoba recently, and none to the House of Commons from that province.

THE GAINS MADE BY the CCF reflect increased support from labor, primarily the CCL. The CCL are taking a greater interest in the party both in organization and contribution. However their marriage to labor discounts the CCF from seriously challenging the government as an alternative. Canada is too diversified a country to be ruled by labor. It is wise to note the CCF movement in Saskatchewan was not a labor movement but an agricultural movement. The primary source of gains in both the CCF and Social Credit are the comprehensive party organizations in their respective provinces.

THE CASE OF THE Progressive Conservative Party is more difficult to comprehent. To any thinking and informed individual the PC sixteen point program was the soundest in the election. There are various reasons for their small gains. The powerful guns of political propaganda of the Liberals were almost solely aimed at the Progressive Conservatives. The myth that Bennet was responsible for the depression is seared on the minds of the older generation and especially among ethnic groups, even though the logic in this belief is the same that would hold Mr. King responsible for the third world war. The propagandized threat that returning the Conservatives spelled a return of the depression left many people without an alternative. The PC's were also posed as high tariff people. People fell for this in spite of the fact that tariffs today are the highest they have ever been in the history of Canada and are mainly responsible for the crisis in the West. The case of leadership has been put forward by many. Leadership is an important factor in politics. The George Drew of 1953 it is acknowledged is a much finer leader than the George Drew of 1949. Still too many people personify G.D. with Ontario entrepreneurs.

THE FUTURE OF THE PC party is not as grim as many make it appear. The people of one major province will remain primarily Conservative so long as the people of the other remain Liberal. The positions of the parties may soon be in transition. Should the leadership of the party change, the prospects of that change are twofold. The leadership may be removed from Ontario which would strengthen the party. Secondly, if it is retained in Ontario it will be by a person who will find a greater measure of favor with the French. Either way the outlook is favorable.

THE PEOPLE CLEARLY DEMONSTRATED their endorsation of the Liberals for another term. The extent of that endorsation is often overrated considering the percentage of the popular vote as compared with the number of seats. The Liberal victory is a result of several factors. We have seen in the provinces that people loathe to change government during prosperity. That feeling prevails right down to constituency levels. With a French Canadian, and Catholic, leader, a large block of votes were automatically assured the Liberals. There is no denying, as well, that Mr. St. Laurent with his unassuming and paternal bearing does appeal to the people. More mechanically votes were won by political strategy. The redistribution preceding the election is a well known gerrymander. The election was called at a time when many people lost their franchise because of vacation. This was not deliberate. The object of an early election was to capture the farm vote before the farmers found themselves in their present crisis. It cannot also be overlooked that the Liberals are estimated to have spent five times the amount of money the Conservatives spent in the election.

WHAT ARE THE PROSPECTS for the future? One important factor will be a change in leadership. Mr. St. Laurent, it is strongly rumored, will retire. He will be succeeded by an Anglo-Saxon leader in line with Liberal tradition. We have already seen Mr. Pickersgill being pruned for that position. However, because of certain developments, it is not likely Mr. Pickersgill will be given the leadership. The Liberals will wisely await deveopments in Conservative party leadership. The Conservatives can find a leader that will outshine any Anglo-Saxon leader the Liberals can put forward. Should this occur it is more than likely that Mr. St. Laurent will be retained to fight another election. The Liberals are autocratic in one respect, democratic succession is subservient to political strategy in leadership. This fact has paid political dividends for them and means that political fortunes rise and fall fall with the flick of a finger. Another important factor is the level of prosperity. The recession in agriculture at present may spread to other fields in the next few years. If it does the Conservatives are likely to again take power. Should history repeat itself and the Conservatives inherit the country during the onset of a depression which will hold during their term of office, it may well be the death knell of the Conservative party.

Calamity Of Calamities

The Editor,

Scarcely have the pages of The Varsity consumed the last dying echo of lamentation over the English standards at the University, than, they regurgitate with dissension. After a mild case of indigestion, we find ourselves almost completely confused.

We are advised to conform to mass movement. This is enough to cause indigestion in itself. We must dissent.

As a result of this, in general we may expect the mass movement of conformity to dissension in the majority, with dissension to conformity in the minority. (Commonly referred to as the vicious circle.)

Calamity of Calamities. Think what this would mean to university education. The engineers might repeal the law of gravitation.

It is quite possible that interpriters would be needed at all lectures to translate the variation which would spring up in the English language. (Many students already feel the need for such assistance, particularly in English lectures.)

Guards will have to be placed around the Hart House, pool since females are most prone to the distates of conformity and mass movements (i.e., Dior.). Alarming as it may seem, at least one female has invaded Hart House disguised as a male undergraduate. Indeed, this is backed up by the statement by Emerson that: "Whoso must be a man, must be a non-conformist." Or vice versa.

Final Standing

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Apropos of Friday's article on Joe Slogan's candidature in the federal election in Springfield riding, we feel that the following facts are relevant:

1) Party standings in Springfield:

Lib.	8,953
C.C.F.	4,418
Cons.	3,494

1953

Lib.	5,975
C.C.F.	1,837
Socred	1,049
Cons.	991
Ind. Lib.	948
Ind.	280

Slogan was fourth, (not third), in the election standing. He reduced the Conservative poll from 3,494 in 1949 to 991 in 1953.

2) In 1952 in his final year at University of Manitoba, Joe Slogan was President fo the U. of M. C.C.F. club and was the President of the Manitoba Provincial C.C.F. Youth Movement.

In 1953 he is the President of the U. of T. Conservative Club and Vice-President of the National Conservative Student Federation.

3) He held only two election meetings and refused help from the Conservative headquarters in Manitoba.

Mass Movement In U C Residences When 73 Razed

A recent game of musical chairs has succeded in shifting the University College men's residence from 73 St. George to 85 Grenville St., formerly school of nursing residence and School of Nursing students, to Hutton House, a UC women's residence.

The Grenville residence accommodates almost all the men who lived at "73". "It's too far away." None of the men has collapsed from the strain of walking to the campus, but it does have its disadvantages, Bull said.

"What we miss most is the common room," he said. Since there is no dining hall at "73", we could depend on the common room for a place where all the men could get together, he said. Unfortunately the space in the Grenville St. residence will only hold half the men.

Although most of the men will be eating out there is a kitchen in the house where the men will be able to get their own meals if they wish. However, Bull said, this will not take the place of a common dining hall, which would normally function as a general meeting place for the residents. The men will probably be in Hart House, in the time that would otherwise be spent in the residence, he said.

The men are using the furniture that was always in the Grenville house. At present the furniture from "73" is in storage except for the ashtrays which are being used in the Junior Common Room.

Although the temporary residence has its disadvantages, we are fortunate that we were able to find a place, with accommodation so short on the campus, Bull said.

The dispossessed School of Nursing students are now living in Hutton House (a women's residence). Their old residence at 7 Queen's Park has been taken over by a department of the provincial government.

"We are glad to be closer to the campus, but miss our common rooms at Greenville, which were more secluded for lovers," said Donna Parr, V Nursing, "Also, in Hutton House we have fewer opportunities to meet our international graduate students because this is a purely undergraduate house."

"We feel more a part of the university being right on the campus, but as yet have found it difficult to fit into the plan of university life," Miss Parr said.

The nurses enjoy the meals at the Women's Union, but are not used to cafeteria style, and miss the midnight snacks provided for them in the Grenville residence, she said.

They Sing For Glee

All it takes is a voice and a will. The members of the Hart House Glee Club reply with gusto and in unison when asked why they belong to this group: They like it. From the opening stag party to the Final Sunday Evening Concert in Hart House they do nothing but have fun — and sing. And for the membership fee of one dollar they do see a good bit of this country, and the other country, they appear on TV, get rave reviews and let their carolling be heard right across Canada on the CBC Trans-Canada Broadcast at Xmas.

The happy fraternity of those who sing for fun is open for new members again — at least forty of them. Freshmen especially will be welcomed with open arms, and no particular experience is necessary.

The ability to read is an advantage, of course, but many singers of the past could not read (music, that is) and still enjoyed it just as much. Any one who thinks he has a voice (and even some who don't) should turn up for one of the auditions. These will be held Wednesday, September 30, and Thursday, October 1, in the Music Room. Just ask the Hall Porter where it is.

"It will not take much of your time, after you're in. Only one evening a week and one afternoon for rehearsals. And it will be time well spent, as on the list of the Club's activities for this year are two out of town concerts (possibly at McMaster and Cornell), a CBC radio broadcast across Canada, carol singing at the Christmas Tree, a joint concert with McMaster and Cornell Clubs, a Sunday Evening Concert in Hart House. The Club is also sponsoring the publication of the HH Series, a group of original Canadian Compositions for male glee clubs.

The selections of the club are as varied as its members' tastes. Some examples of this year's program are: All the things you are, Vittoria's Ave Marie, Shenandoah, Holt's Drinking Song, and Morley's My Bonny Lass.

Among other appearances last year, the Glee Club travelled to Ithaca, N.Y., and to St. Catharines. They also presented a joint concert with Cornell and Rochester. Everywhere they drew reviews like "unusual proficiency . . . a well trained and forceful group" (Rochester Democrat and Chronicle), "It is comparable to that of the best US Glee Clubs!" (The Varsity), "Their diction was exemplary . . . the body of tone firm and mature" (Toronto Telegram), "Unison and harmony singing of excellent, unforced quality" (Toronto Daily Star). The commercial recordings of college songs which the Glee Club has made, are to be released.

So if you have ever thrilled to a rousing chorus of Vive la . . . etc., and want to add your voice to it, step up to the Music Room this Wednesday or Thursday, and, as the Hart House circular will inform you in an exultant crescendo: JOIN THE HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB. SIGN FOF FUN.

Five members of the Hart House Glee Club enjoy an informal singsong, while a watchful baton keeps them from straying.

Some Price Changes At Hart House Meals

There have been a few economic changes around the Great Hall in Hart House this year. "The price changes affect a few commodities," stated Mr. Wilkinson, chief comptroller of Hart House "but the changes are not alarming." The two major changes (if they may be called that) are selling all food a la carte and the addition of sandwiches to the menu.

"Some meals may now be a few pennies more than last year but we feel that they are not crippling to the boys' wallets," the comptroller said. The Great Hall serves so many meals per day that the extra few cents per meal will go a long way to wipe out its deficit. Last year's deficit was a staggering $10,500, the largest in many years. He added that the Great Hall has been operating at a loss since its inception, except during the war years.

"Meat meals will vary this year according to the daily market price," stated Mr. Wilkinson. As the price of meat goes down the the student saves money. Students may bring their lunches and can purchase soup or milk so they can eat in the Lower Gallery.

Here are the new prices: milk in the Great Hall has risen from five to eight cents, pancakes from ten to fifteen cents a plate and bacon from ten to fifteen per cents per serving. Those who like fried eggs will be paying the same price but will be charged a nickel extra for bacon. A bowl of soup has jumpjed five cents to fifteen cents and a cup of broth three cents to eight cents. Ice cream is up one cent to six cents. One half pint of milk in the Tuck Shop is now nine cents. Most other prices in both the Great Hall and Tuck Shop are the same as last year.

Mr. Wilkinson stated that the Great Hall now offers and will continue to offer the men students of this university the most nourishing and lowest priced meals in the city. Prices will continue to be advantageous to the student and the Great Hall will not make a profit on him.

High School Rugby Fee Half Price

"Half-priced football tickets were again made available to High school students this year, announced J. P. Loosemore, Financial Secretary of the Athletic Association, yesterday. "We used to have such a policy in the old days," he said, "but the increased enrollment at the university forced us to discontinue the system." Construction of the new stadium has made space available for us to offer reduced prices again."

High school students were able to purchase tickets for the three Varsity home games for $1.50. Their seats, located in the southern knock-down bleachers, are regularly priced at a dollar each. Tickets were purchased through high-school athletic directors using special envelope forms.

"The system was intended to introduce the high school students to the Varsity games. We have received very fine co-operation from the high schools but the number of tickets purchased has been disappointing," Mr. Loosemoore said. The offer is now closed.

Mr. Loosemoore announced that Students who were unable to purchase their football tickets last last Thursday and Friday will be able to do so at Varsity Stadium on Thursday Oct. 1.

St. Mike's Centennial Building Features Original Stonework

Work on the St. Michael's College Centennial Building, which started last spring, is now near completion. Students will be able to move into the building in January, Father Shook, Superior of the College, said yesterday.

A successful campaign held after the centennial celebrations contributed much of the money needed to finance the project. The other buildings on the St. Mike's campus date back to 1856.

The centennial building will be along the same lines as Teefy Hall, built in 1935, with a few modern touches. In the main rotunda of the new building will be a carved statue of St. Michael.

On the ground floor will be a large student common room, with accommodation for the popular St. Mike's co-operative coffee shop. Also on the ground floor will be an auditorium two storeys high, for public lectures.

The second floor will hold chiefly administrative offices. On the third floor will be a new library, which will add greatly to the present seating and shelving accommodation. The library will contain 50,000 books. Four modern lecture rooms will be on the top floor.

"The stonework is of an oriental design and I think it achieves a certain delicacy of effect for a large stone building," said Father Shook.

The architect is Ernest Cormier, who built the University of Montreal and several other buildings in Ottawa and Montreal.

The library and common room will be used beginning in January, and are expected to be of great advantage to the students. Some of the St. Mike's fellows went so far as to acquire jobs with the construction company working on the building, and spent their summer helping build it.

Upon completion, landscape work will be done on the building's frontage on St. Joseph's Street and in the rear of the building.

HELP!

There are still openings in the Sports Department of The Varsity for reporters and make-up people in men's and woman's sports. No experience is required and invaluable experience will be gained from your associations with the newspaper. Prospective workers are asked to leave their names with someone in the office located in the basement of the SAC building any morning, night or noon.

THE VARSITY

Thursday, September 29, 1953 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO VOL. LXXIII, NO. 4

Do we use all our nickel in Canada?

"No, son, we don't. Right now a great deal of our nickel is going into defense equipment. Here in Canada we produce about 90 per cent of the world's nickel. So we share it with Great Britain, the United States and other peace-loving countries to keep the defense program going in those countries as well as in our own."

"But when the threat of war is over, will we keep all our nickel at home?"

"We can't do that either, son. If we did, this country could use only about 10 per cent of the nickel we produce. There's another reason too. We bring in a lot of things we need from other lands—things like cotton, oranges, china, tea and coffee. The nickel we export helps provide the money to pay for these things."

Miss Darroch The Dean Of Saint Hilda's College

Varsity students are the same as their comrades in the British universities, according to Miss Katharine Darroch, M.A., B.D., the new dean of St. Hilda's College. She feels that Canadian university student is more mature socially, and is better-poised in the company of his seniors, but the English college student is more independent among his own contemporaries.

In Britain less time is spent on such pranks such as dressing up freshies in haloes and sandwich-boards (a favourite St. Hilda's initiation custom), said Miss Darroch, because the rules for admission to University are becoming increasingly stiff, and consequently, there are fewer butterflies. All is not work, however, she said, since there is a great deal of sporting and social life, but there is more private and less organized entertainment.

Miss Darroch was born in the Highlands of Scotland, and until the age of eleven, she lived on the Clyde. From that period on, she went to schools in England, and returned to Scotland for holidays. She attended a high school in the town of Cambridge, and later went to Wycombe Abbey School, whose buildings were "strawberry Gothic", and which had the proud tradition of "Pitt stayed here", engraved over one of the rooms. Afterwards she studied classics and theology at Newnham College, Cambridge. She taught for 5 years in Yorkshire, and 9 years at the Godolphin School at Salisbury, and then, during the war, she travelled for the women's services. Her last job, before coming to Canada, was at the Training College at Crewe, which educated girls for primary teachers.

"I came because of the college itself" said Miss Darroch, "not because of Canada." She felt that the job sounded interesting to be dean of a college that was a church foundation, and yet part of a great university.

"There is less publicity in England than in Canada," said Miss Darroch, who has also been interviewed lately by reporters from other well-known newspapers. She admitted that she had never as yet read The Varsity, but said that British universities had newspapers, too, although on the whole they were less serious efforts, such as "The Cambridge Granta".

She felt that it was too soon to compare British and Canadian students, but thought that the world over it, it is only surface manners and customs that vary.

New Bi-Weekly Leaflet Published By Students Boosts Current Events

A new publication made its appeadance in the campus yesterday morning.

Published by a group of university students, Comment, a four-page leaflet, is designed to "produce in students an awareness of the significance of current events", according to an editorial in yesterday's issue.

The new bi-weekly declares that "its editorial policy is based on affirmation of the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights."

"It is the duty of students to work for the realization of the social order which they believe to be the most desirable," the leaflet explains. "If the students are to fulfill this role they must interest themselves in public affairs, and this interest must be turned to action."

To help make students aware of the significance of current events, Comment "will draw on every possible source to obtain the information necessary if the students are to form an accurate, rational outlook on public affairs."

The publication declares itself in favor of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, but affirms that "the means of attaining the practical application of the principles in the Declaration must not involve the negation of these principles."

Other articles in this issue favored increased aid to less fortunate countries of the world, commented on the recent election, and called on students to "campaign for greater aid to universities by all levels of goverament, for a lowering of university fees, and for the introduction of a really adequate system of financial assistance to students."

Handbooks Will Be Out Wednesday

The SAC Student's Handbook will be ready this Wednesday, September 30 the Students' Administrative Council announced yesterday. They have been delayed at the printer this year and were not ready for the start of term.

The Handbook usually includes a map of Toronto, announcements of the major social events of the season and various club meetings and phone numbers of the residences and club executives. Some advertisements in the Handbook allow a 10 per cent. discount to Varsity Students.

Hart House Members Get Cards

"Hart House membership cards are being issued for the first time this year," announced Garth MacDowell, Assistant to the Warden of Hart House yesterday. The last time any attempt was made to certify Hart House members was in 1934 when men students had their Admit To Lectures card stamped on paying their fees.

"These cards will be used as a protective measure in an attempt to ensure that only members of the House attend certain functions, such as the Sunday Evening Concerts and the dances arranged by the House," Mr. MacDowell said. "These functions are well attended usually and we would prefer to feel that we are not turning members of the House away while others are enjoying the entertainment." he said.

"We hope a card will make more obvious the fact that Hart House is a restricted men's club on the campus," Warden Joe McCulley said. "Although the card will be one among the many that each student is presented with, we feel that it will still add a little prestige to a routine membership," he said.

These cards will be presented to obtain tickets for concerts and dances. Only graduate and occasional students who have paid their Hart House fees will be able to obtain them. All men undergraduates may obtain their cards on presentation of an ATL card.

Members of the House Committee, which introduced this system, will be issuing the cards in the main hall of Hart House from 11.30 a.m. to 2.00 p.m. for the rest of this week.

Mock UN Council Is Club Fall Plan

The United Nations Club is almost certain to have an outstanding delegate from New York as a speaker at one of its meetings this fall, president David Turnbull said yesterday.

Such a speaker was on his way here last spring, but when his proposed visit came too close to the beginning of examinations here, it was postponed until this fall. The delegate is nameless as yet, as contacts are still being made, but president Turnbull hopes to be able to divulge the speaker's name and the date of his arrival soon.

Eleanor Roosevelt, among others was suggested as a possibility, but as she has another speaking engagement in Toronto she declined the invitation.

There will definitely be a New York speaker at the Club's Caledon Hills week-end, Turnbull said. Last year, eleven universities were represented at the annual week-end seminar and the Club executive is hoping for an even large representation this year.

Also included on the Club's full agenda for this year are a repeat of last year's highly successful week-end tour of New York and the United Nations, and a meeting of regional students of the United Nations at which Toronto will be host. A new feature will be a mock Council of the U N in which the atmosphere of the original Security Council will be recreated as closely as possible. Students will take the part of delegates and try to incorporate the view points of the countries involved.

SAC Exchange

Book Bargains

Books are objects to be loved; so don't swear at yours! And the books you'll want to love, or hate, can now be bought at less than three-quarters the price at the Book Exchange.

The side door at 119 St. George leads to the Students' Administrative Council's enterprise entitled S.A.C. Book Exchange.

For the books you want at the price you can afford—it's the Book Exchange. Exchange policy allows the books to be priced up to only three-quarters the amount paid for them.

To sell your texts the Exchange offers, (and all this is free) 1—a card to write on; 2—table and chairs for your convenience and 3—congenial surroundings including band music between 5 and 6. Where else can you get a band concert et al. free while buying and selling your texts?

Will the person who filled in a card full of books without leaving his name or address please contact the Book Exchange immediately. Thank you.

This year the Exchange is offering service beyond compare. Besides being open 9-5 weekdays, it is also open Saturday mornings from 9 to 12:30.

A new and exceptional service is the telephone service offered for the first time this year. Any information will be supplied. As for books wanted, the staff will see if they are in stock and reserve them for you for a reasonable period of time. The phone number (for your black book) that will save you money is KI. 7007.

"Goods satisfactory or money refunded" is another service like Eaton's or Simpson's, now offered at the Book Exchange. However, no goods will be exchanged without the bill.

Besides texts, the Book Exchange has dissecting sets, drafting sets, slide-rules, molecular models, drafting outfits and triangular rules for sale, all at bargain prices. If you are interested in "Protective Body Mechanics in Daily Life and in Nursing" the Book Exchange has it.

""We need all kinds of texts", says Clarke Deller, H U.C., amiable Exchange Manager. There seems to be a great demand for English; Political Science and Engineering texts; but books for any and all faculties are in demand. The Book Exchange is in its fourth year as a Students' Administrative Council sponsored enterprise. The S.A.C. is satisfied in its operation that your support in buying and selling is an indication of your satisfaction.

If you want Wiener's "Cybernetics or Control and Communication in the Animal and the Machine" or the "Book of Job" for five cents the Book Exchange has it. Diversity and completeness are the Book Exchange's key words.

More books are always needed as the demand for used texts always exceeds the supply. The Book Exchange will be open for four more weeks—but the sooner your books are in, the sooner you'll have your money

Payments for texts that have been sold are arranged for certain days called "Pay Days" which will be announced in "The Varsity." The first "Pay Day" will be in approximately two weeks.

So, if you're interested in "Scientism, Man and Religion" or in

Registration Is Higher This Year

Though final registration figures are not yet complete, it appears that first year enrollment at the University of Toronto is a shade higher than last year. Figures from the offices of the individual faculties indicate that although a few show a slight decrease, there are more significant increases.

"New Canadians, immigrants into Canadian High Schools, are more evident in this year's enrollment," said Father Lavery of St. Michael's College. "Certainly the increase in fees has had no apparent effect," he said.

Dr. Eddison of Trinity said there were deffinitely more enrolled in first year. He expressed an opinion that conditions were getting past the depression, and enrollment was in for a sharp change.

Pharmacy and Forestry faculties showed a slight decrease. A drop in the former would be the result of the change from the two-year course to the four-year, said Registrar Corbett of the Faculty of Pharmacy.

W.U.S. Visit To Canada Is Planned

Students of the University of Toronto will have the opportunity of meeting Doug Aitken, General Secretary of World University Services. He is coming to Canada from Geneva this week. This visit is for a W.U.S. assembly meeting at the University of Montreal Thanksgiving weekend.

Aitken's aim is to tour universities world wide. Last Spring he visited the universities of Asia and the Middle East. Everywhere collecting information for W.U.S. to ensure proper distribution of money and international aid. He was National Secretary of Britain two years ago.

Post Game B W Dance

The first football dance of the year will be held after the Queen's-Varsity game on Saturday in Hart House.

Tickets will go on sale today at the Students' Administrative Council Office, in the old Observatory building, the Engineering Stores and Hart House from twelve to two p.m.

A tea-dance will be held immediately following the game in the Drill Hall on St. George St.

Both dances are sponsored by the Blue and White Society of the SAC.

Enrolment Increased In Prairies

Saskatchewan, Sept. 18 — (CUP) — Registration at the University of Saskatchewan is up slightly from last year. 2,056 students enrolled last year and about 100 more are expected this year.

Saskatchewan is low man on the academic totem pole as far as numbers of students go in Western Canada. Past years show British Columbia had most students enrolled with Manitoba second, and Alberta ranking third. However in both B.C. and Manitoba the universities have many students completing their senior matriculation, who do not continue in an undergraduate course.

Two new courses have been established for nurses who have graduated from a three year hospital course with their registered nurses diploma. One is to train public health nurses and the other is to train administration and supervision officers for hospitals.

The largest increase so far is in Arts and Science with 38 more freshmen than last year. Home Economics and Education have also registered sizeable gains.

The biggest drop in enrollments occurred in Agriculture with ten less frosh than last year. Commerce and Pharmacy also suffered a slight decline in freshmen enrollment.

Extra Police To End Rowdiness On Kingston - Toronto Rugby Trip

Kingston, Sept. 25 — (CUP) — The Athletic Board of Control at Queen's University has moved to end drinking and destruction on the Kingston-Toronto football train. The Canadian National, Railway was asked to place extra police on this year's train — to run Friday.

The Queen's student council body is also considering selling tickets only to students with identification cards, and the names of the purchasers are to be kept on file.

This action was planned to prevent recurrence of the damage caused by Queen's students on the CNR Toronto train last year. Destruction of property at that time amounted to $514.97.

This total was finally paid by a 15 per cent general student levy and a $175 donation from the Football Committee, sponsors of the train.

"We've been babying these fellows too long," Col. D. M. Jemmet, Athletic Board chairman declared." If we let the law take its course we should get rid of this thing."

Every student had to pay in the general levy last year. It was reported that even two students who proved they were in Detroit during the football game had to pay.

The Queen's council will also make final ruling on whether railroad officials should put unruly passengers off the train before it reaches Toronto.

"If proper precautions are taken, the students should be able to handle the whole matter themselves," said council president Gail Ward. About 1,800 tickets will be sold for the football weekend. Last year only 1,300 were sold.

15 Freshies Vie In Contest At Manitoba

Manitoba, Sept. 23, — (CUP) — One of the few Canadian freshie student beauty contests will be run off in the next two weeks at the University of Manitoba. Fifteen faculties will be represented in the contest while four other faculties did not run candidates.

The Manitoban, the undergraduate daily at the University of Manitoba, had the front page of its second issue ringed with pictures of each of the beauty contestants.

The Freshie Committee refused to accept the Commerce candidate when it was learned that she had been an Arts student the year before. Commerce then declined to nominate another queen.

The Freshie Committee also planned to have the faculty queens featured in the freshie parade. This parade is similar to Toronto's Homecoming Weekend float parade except for the presence of the 15 beauties.

Benefit Grant To Carpenter

Professor Carpenter has been released from his teaching duties this year, and has been engaged in working on language development, and other projects. This has been made possible by the grant of $44,250.00 from the Ford Foundation to the University of Toronto.

He is working in association with Professors W. T. Easterbrook, H. M. McLuhan and J. Tyrewhitt, composing the five faculty members enlisted to work on this project by the University.

"The University has proportioned the money so that it will be almost wholly given to graduates on the Phd. level in the form of fellowships," said Professor Carpenter." "I am delighted with this arrangement," he said.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

From Rome To England

By now it must be apparent to everyone that the most important thing about Roman Holiday, at the University, is not that the film is the first excursion into comedy by director William Wyler and star Gregory Peck, nor that it was filmed (quite felicitously) entirely in the streets of Rome and on the sound-stage of Cine-citta, but that it provides a rising young Dutch-born actress of British parentage with a role which is finally worthy of her quite extraordinary talents and personality.

Audrey Hepburn's stage career, though meteoric, is distinguished: author Colette herself chose her for the leading role in Gigi, on the stage. But her film performances, briefly in The Lavender Hill Mob, and as the young dancer in Thorold Dickison's The Secret People, were largely ignored. As Roman Holiday's ice-cream eating princess, however, she has finally achieved both stardom and a legendary aspect.

Her performance itself is excellent: delicate and rowdy, imperious, yet wistful. All the artifices of the actress, however, could never have done for Princess Ann what the indescribable personality of Miss Hepburn has. She's going to have a difficult time surpassing her present performance, unless she also proves to have that other necessary quality of the superior actress, the ability to continually extend herself beyond her present achievement.

Though it may be anti-climactic to say so, the film itself is above average. The plot (about the princess who spends one day in the arms of a commoner) may be a little ancient, but Wyler's perceptive direction and reserved, thuogh sprightly sense of the comic bring it new life. But the feeling of the tragic which underlies all Wyler's work, and which was typefied in last year's Carrie is present even in Roman Holiday. Perhaps it would be impossible for this director to make a funny film on the strictly superficial level Roman Holiday is very enjoyable, but only completely so if the viewer accepts the adult implications of the plot, and the inevitable unhappy ending which Wyler had the integrity to produce.

Fraser Fairlie, a former campus type who, as the "Varsity Policeman" used to ride at the head of the float parade, spent last summer in Great Britain making a film about England in Coronation year. Unveiled last Thursday evening in Hart House Theatre, Age of Elizabeth proved to be an unpretentious technicolor tour through English History and the England of Elizabeth II. Between shots of the Coronation procession going and coming in Trafalgar Square, the camera outlines the history of England under her various queens (aided by shots of the pageant of St. Alban's) and visits places and people in Britain today. The sequence on Wales is especially good, and a visit to the home of one Colonel Pilkington, whose dozens (literally) of King Charles' spaniels kept dashing in front of the camera at every opportunity. Fairlie's engaging commentary aids the film immeasureably, which is not often the case with such commentators.

Saskatchewan U. President Urges Higher Enrolment

Saskatchewan, Sept. 16 — (CUP) — A call for a sharply increased number of students at Canadian universities was made by Dr. W. P. Thompson, president of the University of Saskatchewan. The ratio of the higher student population to the general population in Canada is one to 232. In the United States it is 70 to one.

Ath the University of Saskatchewan in particular the number of full time students has this year been 2183, said Dr. Thompson. Though a steady decrease has taken place since the peak of the veterans' attendance in 1947-48 when the enrollment reached 4310, the student population still remains larger by several hundred than the highest prewar number.

In Saskatchewan especially, the need for higher enrolment in institutions of upper education is great since this province has fewer students in proportion to population than any other province except Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, which is just establishing its university. The highest proportion is in Nova Scotia where the ratio is one to 138, almost twice that of Saskatchewan.

The fact that some institutions of higher education in Nova Scotia and some other provinces admit students with Junior Matriculation of grade eleven makes for a higher studen. ratio, where in other provinces the students are still in high school.

Though it is often argued that the reason for failure of eligible young people to attend university is that they can't afford it, the one million dollar revolving loan fund established by the Saskatchewan legislature to assist needy students should make this argument invalid. In reality, some are prevented by family responsiblities. Some lack sufficient ambition or other motivation. Some lack the native ability necessary to meet the entrace requirements or to carry on college work successfully. Some dislike study and books. Some default because of an immediate job. Some are simply unaware or uninterested by the advantages and benefits of a university education.

There is abundant general evidence from the achievements, and reputations of our graduates that our honours and postgraduate courses are not excelled elsewhere. This also goes for training in professional skills and techniques in several of our professional colleges.

On the other hand, we must be concerned about the high rate of failure in our first year and the high percentage of people dropping out. In a recent year only 43 to 66 percent ultimately graduated. Whatever these results are to be attributed to, one thing is clear: We cannot allow our great concern for the large number of failures to lower our standards of achievement, unless a really scientific study can demonstrate that those standards are too high.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Bob Masterson, the Varsity Blues' sleek and slim mentor, never had it so good or, to paraphrase the metaphor to apply it to the situation, he never had so many good quarterbacks. The new Ollie Mandryk, the new Doug Geekie and Ed Skrzypek, the discovery, all blossomed into prominence last Saturday afternoon and sent Big Bob home with his first smile since November, 1951, when the Blues walked off with the Yates Cup.

Last night, while trying on a new pair of cleats, in the Blues' bailiwick, Mandryk was doing a spot of reflecting about the 1952 football season which he spent with Toronto's ORFU entry, Balmy Beach.

(Right here, let it be noted that Ollie, along with Blues ends Fred Smale and Gene Chorostecki, managed to play the whole season with the Beach and shows no signs of professionalism or any other malignancy. Although there are a few imports who, obviously, don't move to Toronto because they're crazy about the sport, the Balmies are classified as amateurs and college players can operate for a year in their company and retain their status).

"Well, I played lots of ball anyway," Ollie recalled. He was thinking of the simple arithmetic which shows that Beaches' 16-game schedule represents about four times as much football as the college teams play. And, he wasn't just listed on the program, either; he was regular defensive quarter and, after coach-quarterback Gerry Tuttle was hurt, he directed the attack as well.

As for a comparison of college and ORFU football, Ollie thinks that, with the exception of the powerful Sarnia Imperials (that's last season), the circuits are about even. The facts bear him out, too. In their exhibition games over the past few autumns, the Blues and Beaches have split the decisions pretty evenly. Then you had another illustration last week-end when a Beach squad, which, a week earlier had dumped Varsity 23-16, was thumped, but good, 20-10 by Queen's Gaels who are expected to be one of the weaker sisters of the intercollegiate this year.

Ollie made a couple of finer distinctions. "The players here are in far better condition and I think th coaching is better. There's more team spirit."

In case you wondered where Ollie developed the throwing arm he exhibited last Saturday against Western, he spent last summer up in Midland pitching for the local baseball team which won its group championship but was ousted in the OBA playdowns. And the Toronto high school javelin record he set back in his Parkdale Collegiate days still stands. With an arm like that, he's liable to start throwing field goals.

As for that 1952 semester Ollie spent with the Argo farmhands, you can't help but conclude that it was a mutual benefit arrangement. Beaches got themselves a mighty fine quarterback and, since academic troubles made him ineligible to play for the alma mammy, where else could he play senior ball and stay in Toronto? Sixteen games he played in senior company, experience that would have taken roughly four years at school to match, and, thus enlightened and eligible again, Ollie returned for a final year of football, ready to go out in a spotlight, if not a blaze of glory.

Practices In Swing As Archery Begins

BY ANN STARK

To date, in this "informative column," we've tried to brief the girls on their own baseball, tennis, and in general, college sports. The purpose of this next "breezy little article" is to help you on the art of archery

But first of all—we feel that it's a pretty sad state of affairs that so little attention is paid to what might be termed the "lesser" sports on the campus. In past years they have received practically no publicity. This means that the people promoting these sports in order to provide a wider scope in the field of athletics for women are fighting a harder battle than is necessary. We feel that extra effort on our part will pay off in wider interest and greater participation in women's sports.

Now back to archery. Practices began yesterday and will continue every Monday between 12-2, and Wednesday between 1-2 at Varsity Stadium. Competition is strictly inter-collegiate. Last year's team, headed by Mary McDonald, shot its way to second place behind O.A.C. This year, according to June Collard, Toronto, with its new crop of female Robin Hoods, has a good chance of coming out on top. So here's the chance for you budding archers to start bending the bow.

After the inter-collegiate meet, the University Archery Club holds practices twice a week in the Drill Hall to precede the "Telegraphic Meets." This is an arrangement whereby individual shoots are held by college in their own cities and their results sent on to a "headquarter" college. In past years, the meets have been with American schools, and last year, the H.Q. was U. of M.

Since this is a sport that is played right through the winter season, it should catch the interest of loads of women on this campus. Unfortunately, archery is virtually unheard of in Toronto. We're hoping that as it receives more publicity it will gain more of the enthusiasm it deserves.

Redmen Lack Reserves Starting Line-up Strong

By MARTY GOODMAN
Sports Editor, McGill Daily

The McGill Redmen came up with a new formation Saturday that gave them a 13-12 victory over McMaster Marauders in the opener of the intercollegiate football season at Molson Stadium. The Redmen sported a T-formation through their exhibition win over the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds a week earlier and Vic Obeck added a double wing for the Saturday opener.

The Redmen seem to shape up as a question team in the Intercollegiate union. As has been their weakness the past few years, they have a good first string but no depth. Veterans make up what should be one of the best first lines, but many untried players and former intermediates complete the roster.

The game against the Thunderbirds, won by McGill by a big score, also showed a lack of passing power in the Red backfield, a situation coach Obeck hopes to improve in practise this week.

Len Shaw, veteran half back, has been going very well in the tailback spot in the new double wing which allows more time for passing. To back him up, Ken Wright, second string quarterback for two years, has also been working out at the position.

Most of the running plays will work off the T, with either Jack McMullan or Emil Bosacki doing the quarterbacking. McMullen previously starred with Montreal's Loyola College Warriors, while Bosacki played for the Intermediate Indians last year after coming up from Hamilton Cathedral High School.

Shaw at left half, Herb English at full, and George Klein at right half made up the first string backfield. English also came from Loyola and scored one major against U.B.C., besides piling up considerable yardage along the ground. Klein played for the Redmen two years ago, but was ineligible during the 1952 season.

Hal Biewald, a great pass catcher for the past two years, goes at wingback, backed up by Whitey Schutz, an all-star hockey player.

Bob Hutcheson from the Indians, Lionel Quinn, a pile-driving full back, Bob Losch, another Indian graduate, and Wright make up the rest of the backfield.

End is a weak position, and place kicker Fred Wilmot has been moved there from his regular wingback position. Don Stirling is the other offensive end. Manny Paumann and Ed Olszeski are the two defensive ends. Sarl Merling and Ed Klark, both from the Indians, complete the lineup at that position.

Clyde Whitman and Ted Toporowski are back at tackle, while Garnet Bertrand and Vince Capogreco are two veterans at guard. Gerry Hogan, MVP on the Indians, is also at guard, while Norm Hall and Bob Reid are another two holdovers.

John McGill is first string centre, backed up by Bob Emery, a big boy hailing from Edmonton.

The consensus of opinion around McGill seems to be that the Redmen will either do very well or very poorly. They completed only one in nine passes against U.B.C., but put on almost as bad a show in last season's exhibition opener against Loyola. The ends are admittedly weak, but the double wing gives them a lot more time to elude their checks than the T, and most of the halves along with the quarterbacks are good passers.

The line shaped up fairly well in their one performance, but are a lot better defensively than on the offensive. Another week of training undoubtedly has done a lot of good.

Shaw handled the kicking chores and got off many good boots, kicking two singles. Wright in his sole effort also picked up a point.

The line was weakened immensely when Wally Kowal and Don Keproh, both eligible, decided that pressure of studies was too much and called it quits.

Outlook Is Good J. V. Coach States

By MOISHE REITER

Varsity's Intermediate football team, which last year humbled all its opposition by an average game score of at least 20 points, will again be the team to beat for the Shaw Trophy, according to coach Johnny McManus.

Despite the mass movement of intermediates to the senior Blues this year, the gaps in the Baby Blue line-up are being adequately plugged by new talent with some last year hold-overs. Surprisingly enough, coach McManus feels that this squad is better than the '52 bunch, and can only get stronger. Reason for this is the fact that the senior Blues, now carrying 44 men, must cut to 30 this week. This move will send 14 players down to the intermediates.

Great improvement over last year is in the line which this year is bigger and blocking better than '52's and if the prospect of two more tackles from the Blues materializes the front wall ought to be really solid.

Behind the big line, McManus has put a backfield of great speed with Al Wong, John Sopinka at the half spots and former High School flash Wally Bulchak fullback. Wong might have played senior but for an injury at training camp and Sopinka who was with Queen's Senior team in '52, just transferred to Varsity and won't be eligible for the Blues till '54. All three backs are 10-second men for the hundred yards.

There are no quarterback problems with two good men, Bill Stevenson and Harry Wilson sharing the job. Both are good passers and will have sure receivers in freshmen ends Bill Karpinski and Vic Kurdyak.

Want of a good kicker can turn a coach's hair grey and, unless Bob Masterson sends an educated toe or two his way, McManus will have real worries in that department.

The three teams testing this Baby Blues' new strength are Western Colts, Ryerson Tech. and O.A.C. Western will be first on the Intermediates' list, as the Colts come to Varsity Stadium Friday, Oct. 9, at 2 o'clock.

Lawn Tennis, Golf Begin Annual Bouts

One of the largest intramural programs on the continent will get under way tomorrow morning when the Varsity senior interfaculty tennis championships open at the Toronto Law Tennis club, 40 Rowanwood Ave.

There's bound to be a new champion, too, as last year's titlist, Ken Lawson, is in Europe and won't be back in time. Entries will be accepted this afternoon and there is room for a few more players as provision has been made for 64. The team to represent Varsity at the intercollegiate tourney to be held at the Toronto Lawn Tennis club on Oct. 14, 15 and 16, will be picked from the results of this interfaculty meet.

Meanwhile, entries are now being accepted for the junior intramural tennis championships which are carded for Oct. 6.

Intramural sports director, J. E. McCutcheon, pointed out that they are using a different system of receiving entries for the tennis tourneys. "Instead of taking entries through the various colleges as we did last year, we're receiving individual entries at the intramural sports office," Mr. McCutcheon said.

Meanwhile, in the world of golf, the only interfaculty competition will be an 18-hole tournament at the St. Andrew's course on Oct. 7, 8 and 9. Entries are now open. The intercollegiate team, however, will be picked on the basis of a 36-hole round played on Oct. 1 at St. George's on Thursday. Aspirants for the squad to make the trip to Kingston must have a certified handicap of nine or better.

Interfaculty Footballers In Training

One of the busiest spots around Varsity these days is the backcampus, where the various interfaculty football teams are practising diligently already, even though intramural league play doesn't open until the first few weeks of October.

The football committee has not held its annual meeting as yet so groupings aren't known.

Last year, the Scarlet and Gold of Victoria College swept through Group One of the league without losing a game to their opponents, Senior S.P.S., Senior Meds and U.C., and then whipped St. Mike's, the Group Two winners, in the final game for the Mulock Cup, symbol of intramural football supremacy. The St. Micahel's squad was opposed in Group Two by Trinity, Forestry, Junior S.P.S. and Dentistry.

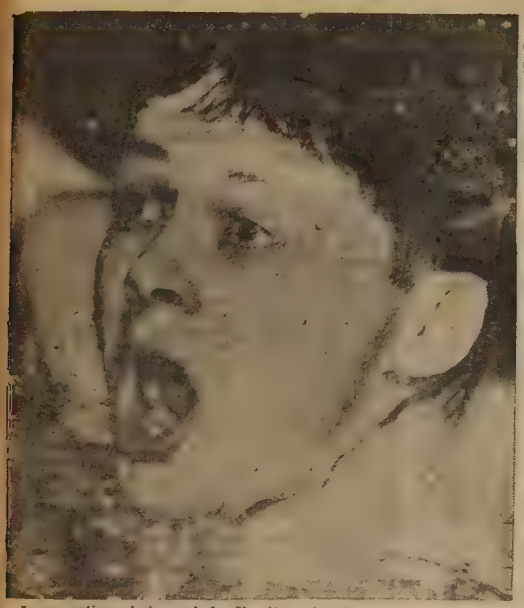
The interfaculty loop has served as a good training ground for intercollegiate players in other years and some former intramural players now with the Senior Blues are centre John Prendergast,a fullback with St. Mike's last year, and end Bill Horton, who was an all-star quarterback with Junior Skule two years ago. The league has the reputation of being one of the roughest anywhere.

The interfaculty doesn't suffer by comparison with intercollegiate matches in the razzle-dazzle department, either, with most schools, notably Vic, St. Mike's and Trinity, sporting a cheerleading section.

In past seasons, some noteworthy men from the world of football have been imported to mastermind interfaculty teams. Two years ago, Ulysses Curtis and Stretch Whaley of the Argonauts coached the University College team and past year, Argo end Al Bruno guided St. Mike's into the Mulock final.

This fall, a former Balmy Beach player and Varsity hockey star, Joe Kane, takes over the reins of

With the exceptions of Trinity, Vic and St. Mike's, who work out on their own college fields, the various teams practise every afternoon at five o'clock on the back campus. The coaches concerned will undoubtedly be happy to see as many prospects as possible.



Soccer

Varsity's intercollegiate soccer team continues its practises this week with workouts this afternoon and Thursday and Friday at 4.30 on the front campus. There are still openings on the team for new players.

The college schedule opens Saturday at noon, with the Blues playing host to Guelph's O.A.C. team on the front campus.

the defending champion Vic team.

Crippled Swimmer

In an action photograph by Varsity swimming coach Cressy McCatty, Hart Devenney displays the freestyle form which brought him two intercollegiate championships and two records last year. A victim of polio, Devenney is now confined to an iron lung in Winnipeg General Hospital.

Varsity Swimming Star Is Victim Of Paralysis

Hart Devenney, described by Varsity swimming coach Cressy McCatty, as "the best swimmer ever to compete for the University of Toronto," won't be gathering points for the Blue and White this year. A victim of last summer's polio epidemic, Devenney is at present in an iron lung in the Winnipeg General Hospital.

The 21-year-old athlete, who was unbeaten in nine meets in the 220 and 440-yard freestyle races last year and established Canadian intercollegiate records at both distances, was stricken with polio in mid-July and was completely paralyzed. Latest word from Winnipeg reports that he can now swallow, move his hands and is able to be out of the iron lung for intervals of 30 seconds.

Swim coach McCatty, in talking of his prize athlete yesterday, said, "It will be a long time before we have another like him."

Devenney, a student of the University of Manitoba in 1951-52, came to Toronto in June, 1952, to compete in the Canadian championships and placed fifth in the 220-yard freestyle and fourth in the 440, and then won the Canadian two-mile and the Ontario one-mile titles at the CNE in August. After enrolling as a second-year student at Victoria college, he proceeded to be a one-man team for the U. of T., leading the Blue swimmers to the intercollegiate championship.

Devenney repeatedly bettered the existing records in both the 220 and 440 freestyle events and the marks that finally went on the books were two minutes, 14.7 seconds in the 220 and four minutes, 58 seconds in the 440. He capped a successful season by winning the college championships in both events in the intercollegiate meet at McGill on Feb. 28th.

Coach McCatty pointed out that "Hart's times were improving steadily last season and we were expecting him to be really at his peak this year."

We'll certainly miss Hart on the team this year," U. of T. athletic director Warren Stevens commented yesterday. "He was one of our oustanding swimmers last season and would have been again this year. And apart from his athletic ability, Hart is one of the finest boys we've had around the campus."

Not Fully Informed

Editor,
The Varsity:

I have read with interest the letter to you "apropos" my candidature in Springfield for the Progressive Conservatice Party. It is flatterering to find my honourable friends interested in my biography. Indeed they are well informed, but unfortunately not fully informed.

Regarding their first allegation, my friends are correct. To make them more correct may I present you with the correct figures as presented by the returning officer on Form 150:

Biberonich, L. (Ind. Lib.)	293
Biliski, A. (L.P.P.)	469
De Graff, F. J. (C.C.F.)	1878
Sinnott, J. S. (Ind. Lib.)	1064
Slogan, J. (P.C.)	1201
Trapp, P. C. (S.C.)	1221
Wiselak, A. B. (Lib)	6240

Regarding their other statement here, let me point out that though the Conservative vote was reduced, so was that of every other party, as drastically.

My friends in their second allegation are also quite correct. Should they desire a list of other positions I have held in the past they will find that I could add very substantially to their list. This I would be pleased to furnish on request, with sanction to make public. I might add that in my undergraduate days I took pride in the fact I was not born privileged with political opinions as some people may appear to be. I was born a blank page. The only privilege I achieved before I entered politics was taught me by my parents. That teaching, was to respect everyone's opinions, to weigh all sides of every question objectively, to form my opinions impartially, to hold those opinions until I was proved wrong, to have the courage to admit I was wrong, and to change my opinions when I was proved wrong.

The reason I took part and held office in other political parties formerly was to find out for myself who and what constituted those parties and to find out to what extent their ideas coincided with those I held.

In political party membership one is ethically obliged to abide by that party's policies and decisions. I am a member of the Conservatives and ran for them because my political philosophy coincides most closely with theirs. If it did not, rest assured, that the Conservatives would not have me and I would not be a Conservative.

My friends do not rate so highly, I am sure, as to credit me with political precedent. Sir Winston Churchill, the greatest political figure of our day, was not always a Conservative, but that does not make him less a Conservative or less a great man. He had the courage to change parties as a political figure.

When I come to their third allegation I am sorry I must disagree.

The last few words, "refused help from Conservative headquarters in Manitoba," is a very grave statement. It appears to me that my friends would like to create the impression that I and the Conservative party are at odds. If they conjured this up from my hesitation in running, I can only say that I hesitated only because I felt my education would be jeopardized if I were elected. I am sure my friends will prove their serious insinuation that I "refused help from the Conservative headquarters in Manitoba."

If they cannot prove that statement I am sure they will publically withdraw it and apologize.

I may point out that my campaign headquarters was situated at provincial campaign headquarters, that much of my help came from the Y.P.C.'s in Manitoba, and that most of my expenses were met by the "Conservative headquarters in Manitoba", as anyone can see by examining my election return.

If my friends care to enquire they will find that I was very persistent in seeking more help from Conservative headquarters in Manitoba.

Joseph Slogan, III Dents.

Let's Wait And See

The Editor,
The Varsity:

No one will argue that the back page of the Varsity is not opposite to the front page. The Missourians will find proof of this in last Friday's edition.

An editorial on the back page states that three innocent coeds were kidnapped "in an act of 'Childishness'." But a feature article on the front page of our daily rag, informs us that three Vic coeds were "escorted" to their classes and were given a fitting "Good-Bye" as they joined their class.

However the purpose of this letter is not to criticise the editorial policy of The Varsity, but rather to uphold the character of our freshmen engineers. The Varsity editorial would have people believe that the three Vic coeds were seized and carried off. Whereas the Skulemen, unaccustomed to the sight of feminine forms during school hours, actually went out of their way to attract the attention of the young coeds.

The incoming class of Skulemen has been accused of removing some scarlet and gold ties from the necks of their contemporary artsmen. The truth of this accusation is not doubted. The reason for their removal seems to stem as much from the reception given the engineers by the Vic freshmen as it does from the tie-collecting mania of a few of our freshmen. Our 450 freshmen had marched through the halls of U.C. to the J. C. R. and through Trinity's halls to the Buttery previous to their Vic Vic tour, and not one artsman was touched nor were any attempts made to secure any freshmen ties.

The engineers of class 5T7 will be around our campus for another four years. During their stay here they will be taking part in activities in all phases of university life. If one wishes to appraise the trend of character of this class of Skulemen it seems only fitting that he views their activities in retrospect once these men have received their iron rings.

exposes me to an undeserved risk. If I sell my Saturday ticket to an unprincipled person, he may keep the whole book. Since it is no good by itself, he must also keep my A.T.L. This A.T.L. represents a large investment. It admits me to museums, parties, final exams etc., and I should be inconvenienced by its loss, even more than by the loss of my ticket-book. I therefore feel that the UTAA should revise its pointless decision. What difference does it make to them, who sits in the space I pay for?

Please withhold my name, in case the UTAA is pig-headed about this. It is a decidedly masculine name, which makes things doubly hard for feminine customers to make use of my tickets, and they might just be dirty enough to watch for it.

Fees – The Screening ?

Everything is on its way up. But in the field of educational costs, both to student and university, this poses a serious problem, the solution of which can no longer be delayed.

President Smith of Toronto, and Principal James of McGill, have made it clear that their universities face difficult financial days in the future. Perhaps the troubles are a little heavier in Quebec since the Duplessis Government has cut off all federal aid, but they are there nonetheless, in most Canadian universities. And they are increasing.

Where does the student come in? Without adequate government aid to universities he must bear some of the increased cost through higher fees. Already loaded down with higher living costs and text-book costs, the University of Toronto student this Fall is faced with a 13.6 per cent fees boost.

It is absolutely ridiculous to measure merit by one's ability to pay for a higher education. Yet, though there are bursary and scholarship funds, they are of a sufficiently small number to conclude the same young people of limited means do not receive that measure of education which their abilities might warrant.

A brief of the National Federation of Canadian University Students last year reported that only seven per cent of high school grads entered university. What assurances were there that the seven per cent comprised the "best qualified students"?

The cultural life of Canada suffers if young people are forced to abandon their studies because they cannot afford an education. Every effort must be made to provide the assistance necessary to keep students of ability at university. Higher fees is not the answer.

What is needed is an extended program of scholarships and bursaries. And this must come from provincial and federal government sources.

The Massey Commission proposed a system of national scholarships. And NFCUS last year urged the national Government to implement this recommendation. No action was taken.

If it was needed a year ago, then it's certainly needed today. Sure, the governments are on the spot, but if they fail to tackle the problems now, they are guilty of turning their backs on their greatest potential asset — the educated individual, prepared to make his full contribution to the nation's health, welfare and development.

Gone Far Enough

Understanding First . . .

John R. Lee, II Psychology, and treasurer of the campus Civil Liberties Club, expresses hope for a Freshman course co-relating the arts and sciences.

By JOHN LEE

A specialist has been defined as "a person who knows more and more about less and less until he knows nearly everything about almost nothing." And the more men specialize in different fields, the less they can understand each other. Herein lies one of the greatest problems our civilization must face. As science and learning advance, men understand progressively less of what their fellows are saying and writing. Democracy becomes progressively more difficult.

THE NEED TODAY is for synthesis. If an individual is to be rational, he must synthesize his ideas and eliminate inconsistencies. If society is to be rational, men must learn more about each other's way of thinking, and all must work together to resolve the great paradoxes of society. Hunger in the midst of plenty, knowledge surrounded by fear, corruption amidst morality, these are some of the paradoxes we must resolve if our society is to endure. If we fail, another social order will replace the one we know.

SYNTHESIS IS THE NEED. What better place for synthesis to be arrived at than the university? But the universities, far from trying to bring men together, are busy driving them apart. SPECIALIZATION is the watchword. Out of the mortarboard mills pour forth graduates in law, medicine, engineering, forestry, nursing, social work and so on — and each a specialist in a narrow field. Arts graduates are strangers to architecture, lawyers ignorant of forestry, engineers have never heard of anthropology.

CERTAINLY THE STUDENT can't study everything — bue he should have an awareness at least of the existence of many other subjects, and a general idea of what they are about. For example, every student need not study the physical sciences — or the social sciences — but he should know a little of what each is concerned with, and its importance to society. But more important, he should acquire the SCIENTIFIC ATTITUDE. The world is sorely in need of individuals with a scientific outlook on life — men who reject the superstitions and prejudices of the past.

Again, many students would not study mathematics, but they should understand the uniqueness of the mathematical methods of thought, and their philosophical aspects. Certainly no student should graduate without being aware that the Euclidian geometry is not the only geometry!

LANGUAGES ARE AN especially outrageous example of the blind stupidity of our universities. The first year Arts students, and many of the General Course students in other years, are forced to study an other language than English. For 1 or 2 or 3 years they collect a number of words, phrases and rules of grammar which they promptly forget when they graduate or drop the language. Most of such study is an unpleasant waste of time. Language is substituted for literature. Students don't know the language well enough to enjoy the literary beauties of the readings — they are too concerned with the mechanics of translating. Some students want to make this their work, and for them it is not wasted effort. But there is little sense in everyone learning how to use the tools to build a car, if there are already sufficient persons who build the cars. Words too are tools — the product is thought. The learning of foreign words as a value in itself should be distinguished from the acquiring of the ideas expressed, which can be done through the use of translations with much better results.

THUS THE STUDY of language for itself should not be compulsory. But every student should take a course in languages—note the 's' — and he should learn how languages differ, in alphabet, structure, etc., and how these differences affect the pattern of cultures. But the student need not express himself well in two languags any more than a student of comparative religion must be both a Christian and a Buddhist.

BUT THE MAIN THREAD running through all these examples is the importance of synthesis. The solution to the problem of the gaps in the Arts course — gaps which make it possible for a student to graduate in Arts with no understanding of, say, archeology or psychology; and, indeed, the solution to the tremendous gaps between the Arts faculties and the professional schools is the adoption of a general lecture which might be called "The Human Adventure," in all first year courses at the University. In six hours a week this course could cover the range of human knowledge — very sketchily, yes, but well enough to show the inter-relation between areas of knowledge, and so enable the student to use this course as the skeleton for synthesis. It would have the added use of helping students to decide what subjects they would later specialize in (this course would replace the options in first year).

It is essential that the university recognize the importance of this problem of specialization, for the endurance of our democratic society may well hinge on its solution.

The Varsity:

Though the editorial article "Our Political Future" was unsigned—as it certainly should not have been—it was obviously written by a Conservative. Witness "To any thinking and informed invididual the PC 16-point program was the soundest in the election." Was it? That's news to the other political parties. Do the PC's claim a monopoly of "thinking and informed individuals"?

As a matter of fact, the 16-point program was a new high (or low?) in political demagoguery. "No reduction in defence or social security—but a $500 million tax reduction." Reduction for whom — the corporations or the low-income groups? Nor are the PC's above promising a Socialist Health Plan when it's expedient.

The author calls the Liberals "autocratic" for their lack of democracy in the election of a leader—but he fails to mention that the PC's are equally autocratic. After the recent election Drew said his political future depended on the EXECUTIVE of the party (not the members!).

The author says that we have essentially a two-party government. But the choice between the two parties is solely one of party—not of policy. The only difference between the two old parties is that one is in and the other is out. Voters realized this even more in the last election, and the eventual result will be the death of the Tory party. The next alternative to the Liberals will be the CCF.

Bootlegging

The Editor,
The Varsity

On Friday I bought a little book of special, cheap tickets to the Varsity home games for this fall. My A.T.L. entitled me to buy them for $1.50. Now I would not attend any football game, and particularly any Varsity football game, for several times that small sum. But there are many who love football, even so much that they will suffer through a Varsity game in the hope of seeing some. It is for these, and especially for those unfortunate enough not to attend this University, that I bought my tickets. These tickets mean that, for the duration of each game, a square foot of concrete in Varsity Stadium is at my disposal. Subletting it to one who would appreciate it more than myself should be my privilege. But the UTAA, taking a dog-in-the-manger attitude, insists that the holder of my ticket present my A.T.L., along with the attached ticket book. This

New Hope

The Editor,
The Varsity

Your editorial, "Political Pot," seems to indicate that the Varsity endorses such organizations as the various political parties on the campus and a new club, the Political Economy Club. Last spring the latter club was built out of the remnants of the now-extinct Political Science Club. This new and active club hopes to be able to interest the students in discussion of political and economic problems. The members of the club believe that it is important that University students approach practical parties with a rational and informed outlook. To this end we intend to conduct Campus Elections for a Model Parliament.

We hope that students of various political affiliation will join us, and we especially desire that the large group of politically indifferent students will participate in the Club's activities.

Bickers and Snicker

The Editor, The Varsity:

Friday's editorial "Diaper Kids," seemed to me to indicate perfectly not Skulechildishness, but Associate thickheadedness. The prospect of another weary year of such infinite and infinitesimal bickers and snickers appalls me. From what I know of the Victoria raid, everyone had a great time. The co-eds no doubt enjoyed no end the prancing and leering of 450 Engineers, the dignified old lady probably got a kick out of ripping off her few old Artswives' tales, and Ken Cork did not waste his glorious chance to have a jim-dandy deplore. But then the blind, crawling journalistic moles appeared on the scene, grubbed about briefly, and threw up a hill of stinking dirt. Witlings! It is this lack of sensitivity and perspective that explodes border incidents into all-out wars!

On the other hand, if Friday's editorial was only a tongue-in-cheek effort to stir us all up, then I am a sucker.

S.A.C. To Meet Tonight Begins Coming Session With Added Members

The Students' Administrative Council will have its initial meeting tonight. Twenty-nine representatives of the various faculties and colleges will get together at Falconer Hall at 7:30 p.m. to open the 1953-54 session of the student governing body.

The new SAC will be headed by a fourth year Medical student, John Stalker. Different from last year's Council in that the old External Affairs Commission (EAC) has been divided into three committees, the new SAC has still to decide upon a chairman, who is picked from outside the Council.

A constitutional amendment last spring split the EAC into the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) committee, the NFCUS Weekend committee, and the World University Service committee.

Vice-president, Jennifer Rickard, Trinity IV, will have a vote on all committees of the SAC in accordance with another amendment. Miss Parkes and E. A. MacDonald, associate - secretary and general secretary-treasurer, will return to the same posts they held.

Along with Stalker and Miss Richard will be: Don Lowe, SPS, Finance Commissioner; Horace Krever, Law, Publications Commissioner; Bill Baldwin, UC, Student Service Commissioner; Roger Talbot, Knox, Men's Athletic Commissioner; Miss Bernie Russell, Med, Women's Athletic Commissioner.

Added to these are: Paul Lorch, St. Mike's, Blue and White chairman; Scott Symons, Trinity, NFCUS committee chairman; Douglas Hamlin, Vic. WUS committee chairman; Miss Joan Sinclair, Music, Music Committee chairman; Miss Elizabeth Scroggie, UC, Weekend Committee chairman; Britta Fredrickson, Physot, Radio Committee chairman; John Kuusisto, Arch, Student Union Committee chairman.

Ministry Students Get Financial Aid

Simply by signing a contract, certain students at the University of Toronto get one half of their fees paid for three of their four undergraduate years.

These grants are made available to undergraduates at Victoria College who intend to enter the ministry of the United Church after receiving their B.A. degree.

The Church Board of Colleges of the General Council of the United Church of Canada makes grant to candidates for the ministry. The candidate must first be accepted by the Presbytery to which he belongs, and he is then recommended to the College.

In return for this financial assistance, the student signs an undertaking to work for the Church for five years after receiving his Bachelor of Divinity degree. If he does not fulfill this contract, the student is obliged to repay the grant. There is no fee at Emmanuel College for the degree of Bachelor of Divinity.

Professor K. H. Cousland, registrar of Emmanuel College, said that the general intention of this aid was to encourage young men to serve the church as ordained ministers. He estimated that approximately thirty-five Victoria College students are aided by this plan each year.

Trinity students who plan to enter the ministry are aided in their undergraduate years by Diocesan grants. These grants are made on the basis of need. Trinity College also has a series of bursarie and scholarship ranging from $50 to $300.

A unique system aids students enrolled in divinity at Trinity. Each year, the students are sent out to do field work for the church and the churches pay the salaries of these student assistants into a work-scholarhip fund. The total sum of this fund is paid out to various students on the basis of need.

"On the whole," said Dean C. R. Feilding, Dean of Divinity, "We encourage our student ministers to spend their summers among the working men instead of requiring them to do mission work. In that way they can earn most of their year's expenses and also learn the layman's attitude towards religion."

Certain bursaries are awarded to undergraduate students who wish to become Presbyterian ministers by Knox College. These bursaries are awarded to students all over Can-

Queen's Building Library

Kingston, Sept. 25 — CUP — One of Queen's long-standing needs will be filled next spring with the completion of the new administration building on University Avenue.

The total cost will be $600,000 including furnishings and the price of demolishing Muir House, a university residence which formerly occupied the site. It is hoped that the new building will be ready for occupancy by next June.

All of the University's administrative offices will be housed in the building, giving the library additional space for expansion. Three storeys, in height, the building will be approximately 100 feet square.

The Queen's post office, maintenance, and public relations offices will occupy the ground floor. The registrar and the treasurer will each have corner suites on the first floor with the accounting offices in the rear.

The top floor will house the offices of the principal, the vice-principal, the faculty deans, and the department of extension.

English Exam. On Thurs. For All First Year U. C.

All first year tudents registered in University College will be required to write a remedial English examination Thursday, October 1st, from 8:00 to 10:00 p.m. The examination which tests the students in spelling, punctuation, vocabulary and in general comp rehension of the language.

Taking of the test is also required of first year students of the professional faculties (Music, Nursing, P and H E) who are taking a pass course in English at the college.

It was felt by the College Council that the level of English expression was unsatisfactory, and that instruction would be beneficial to the undergraduate pursuing his studies in all fields.

"That is not to say that high school teachers are to blame," said Professor Woodhouse, head of the department of English at University College, "rather the level is not as high as it was twenty or thirty years ago."

The examination pass mark is fifty per cent. Those failing to obtain a pass mark will be able to consolidate their English background by attending tutorial classes. A second examination will be given some time later following the instructional period.

"This is not meant to tyrranize over the students," Professor Woodhouse stated. The remedial English is designed to aid and benefit the students in his studies. A comprehensive knowledge of the language will assist the student in his reading, writing and self-expression of his ideas.

Last year, of those Arts students enrolled in English, 63 percent passed, of those not enrolled in English, 50 per cent received a passing grade. In the professional courses, 45 per cent of the students passed. After intructional clases to those who failed a second exam was given in which 93 per cent of those enrolled in English passed.

SCM Favours Association Of NFCUS, IUS Bodies

Delegates from 16 Canadian universities at the National Conference of the Student Christian Movement in London last week decided to recommend closer relationship between the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the International Union of Students.

The Council's recommendation will take the form of a letter to the National executive of NFCUS for consideration at the annual Conference next month. It will advocate that NFCUS become an associate member of IUS. Formerly national unions had to be either NFCUS members or non-members of IUS and associate membership is a new status allowed.

The resolution resulted from a report submitted to the Council by its three observers at the IUS United meeting and World Council which convened 12,000 students in Bucharest, Romania, between September 1 and 16.

Legal Students Removed From Court Proceedings

Second Year Students from the School of Law were cleared from the Supreme Court of Ontario last week by the Chief Justice. The incident occured just before the victim of a criminal assault was about to give her testimony. His Lordship said that the students' time could better be spent listening to the able argument of senior counsel in other courtrooms rather than the testimony of the unfortunate girl.

Representation by the Crown Attorney on the students' behalf was brushed aside by Chief Justice McRuer, who cleared the whole courtroom.

The law students who were on a three week tour of the courts and court offices had to content themselves with a case dealing with the theft of a television set.

Syncopated Rhythm

The Lady Godiva Memorial Band, the pride and joy of the Engineers have failed so far for this year to contribute to the cultural life of the University. However, it should not be long before they appear along with the Skule Cannon to announce that the Engineers have arrived. Lady Godiva, it should be remembered is the patron saint of the engineers and will no doubt be seen in the Homecoming Parade in the flesh. Other famous institution of the Engineers also include the Annual Chariot Race for the Jerry P. Potts Memorial Trophy which was recovered from the offices of the Varsity last year. The race is to advertise the Annual Skule At-Home.

Originally printed in a six-column size lay-out about one and a half times the size of The Varsity, the Manitoban has now been reduced to the five column, tabloid size of The Varsity.

The Manitoban has actively taken part in all Canadian University Press activities. The Canadian University Press is an association of all student newspaper across Canada dedicated to the speedy ex-

Blatz Child Study Institute Moves Into New Building

A modern building, the size of four SAC buildings, at 45 Walmer Road is the new location of Dr. W. E. Blatz' Institute for Child Child Study. "We intend to keep our new home looking the smartest house on the street" said Dr. Blatz yesterday, in answer to the complaints of the Annex Ratepayers Association who opposed the move.

The president of the association had suggested that Dr. Blatz move into President Sidney Smith's residence on Queen's Park as an alternative. "I personally think that is a splendid idea" said Dr. Blatz. "We have been forced to move as we are extending the

For The Books

Although there has been a shortage of applicants for the jobs at the bookstore this year, there is no shortage of quality, as Arlene Lehman proves. Max Balshen demonstrates the new system which has been put in this year. There are also FREESH cigarettes in the vending machines.

Book Racks Removed For More Efficiency Not Safety Measure

The removal of the book racks from where the soft drink vending machine is presently located in the campus bookstore is not due to the theft of books [illegible] seem to be about the same here as in any similar store, [illegible] R. E. Saul, manager of the book department of the University Press.

A new system of selling books has been introduced in the bookstore this year, which has facilitated greatly the handling of the early rush for books. "We have come upon a good system and we are going to hold on to it," claimed Saul.

Complaints over stale cigarets brought about the removal of the cigaret vending machine in the store. Lack of business often caused the cigarets to stay in the machine for long periods, and they thus became stale.

This year there were not as many applications from university students for part-time jobs in the store. Very few students applied this year, compared with dozens in former years.

Commenting on a poster advertising a social evening in one of the store windows, Mr. Rankin said "we don't mind putting up a notice for one of the recognized college organizations when they ask." He added that as many students pass through the bookstore, it is a good spot for such an advertisement.

The volume of sales in the bookstore has been high to date this year. Seven thousand persons have passed by the two cashiers, who can handle approximately five persons a minute.

In Quest Of A Feature

By MANI THALER

So there it was. Somehow, somewhere, sometime between now and ten thirty a feature was to be written, and a single disgusting thought kept wriggling in my stomach, like a ten point by-line on a spree: I had to write it. I, and no other I, without an idea in my head (or anywhere else, for that matter), and with only one desire: sleep. So there it was.

Well, there is always Hart House. Thousands of words have already been written about it, and it has been the salvation and the final refuge of many a frustrated feature writer sniffing around for ideas. Let's see.

There is the book with the signatures and it says: "Elizabeth" and "Philip." How about "Famous Visitors of H H"? That might be something, but it's under glass and key like the crown jewels themselves, and the key is probably locked in a vault.

The Reading Room. Wouldn't it be fun to stretch out on a couch, open a magazine, and go to sleep. But that feature, that . . . feature. Three people reading in the journals of today about the world of tomorrow, while faces of the past stare at them from the picture-portraits on the walls. They're happy. The three readers, that is, because the "Dark Girl" and "Young Canadian" seem to feel as bad as I do.

I see the Map Room has acquired a new look. Everything except the map. It still hangs there, impressive and meaningless after twenty years of university expansion. That green dale behind the building marked "Library" full of trees, and plump white nondescript birds would be a nice spot to rest, except for the mess of cement and bulldozers that fills it now. This map is at least good for the birds! And I could rest here on this modern upholstery, studying the old, while enjoying the new. But first the feature. Feature. Whoever invented that word?

In the East Common Room the new furniture competes with the old ashtrays. The wooden propeller over the door looks like it would like to get away, but it's stuck and has to stay there just because it has been presented. I'm stuck, too, and no feature in sight.

Up the stairs (of which in HH there are too many) I go and bump into a venerable German machine gun, and the trophy case. There is only one name I can recognize: L. B. Pearson, one of three on the interfaculty squash championship team of 1926-27. I'm sure I've heard the name before somewhere, but it's no good for a feature.

There is the Debates Room, row on tow of chairs, waiting in wooden silence for the noise of arguments and feet. On the walls, pictures of famous debates led by famous men hang on each side of the clock, and the hands of the clock blacken the space around nine thirty. It's late in Hart House, and lonely, and I've got a deadline to meet. The overarching wooden ceiling of the Debates Room looks down, and looks impressive. Maybe "The ceilings of HH"? That could be good. Let's see the Library ceiling.

In the Library the light is soft on the red broadloom, and Alice Massey stares at you with a pained expression. On the table lie two books: "Finnegan's Wake," 300 pp.; "Key to Finnegan's Wake," 600 pp. The labyrinthic plaster ceiling is white against the bookstalls, and it makes me even sleepier than I am, trying to figure it out.

People are softly talking in the Chess Room. I walk in and someone flies at me with arms outstretched, yelling: "Kriegspiel! Do you know Kriegspiel?" Staring glumly from behind a loaded chessboard, the other one explains the game. I shake my head. I wish I could play the game with them, but I have a krieg of my own, and its no spiel. At least it's no feature. But I'll wait. I still have fifteen minutes to go. And there is always Hart House.

R. Russel Awarded Fellowship

Mr. Richard Russel of the University of Toronto has been awarded one of this year's Imperial Oil fellowship for advanced scientific Research. The award was one of three made this year to students from Canada, and is valued at $1,250 a year for up to three years.

Imperial Oil has awarded four such fellowships each year since 1946 to encourage post-graduate research in chemistry, physics, and (or) engineering, and one in economics, industrial relations, or business administration.

Married, and living in Mimico, Russel was recommended by the University of Toronto where he has been studying, since 1946. He now holds his B.A. and M.A. degrees, and is studying for his degree of Dr. of Philosophy at Toronto. However he will spend his '53-'54 session at University of Chicago's Institute of Nuclear Studies. His investigation involves the determination of the ages of minerals, and of the earth.

The other fellowships were won by students doing postgraduate work at Queen's University. One, G. W. Taylor, of Ottawa, was born in England, and will return to England to do his Phd. work. The other, W. D. Wood, of Palermo, a graduate of McMaster and Queen's, will study industrial relations and economics at Princeton University.

A special committee, formed in association with the National Conference of Canadian Universities, selects the winners. The fourth winner this year is Eric David Morgan, a Rhodes scholar who has studied at Memorial University.

Student Organization Reviews Activities

The International Students' Organization is one of the few on the campus which have year-round activities. As it provides the important common ground for meeting people with experiences, people with different political and cultural backgrounds, its activities are mainly social.

The main features of the past summer's activities were the camps at the university farm at Caledon Hills. There were four camps during the summer and about 150 members attended them. The week-ends were spent hiking, swimming, playing ball or generally loafing. Each time a group was employed on a work project to improve the present condition of the farm.

In early summer, ISO made a visit to the Danish folk dance festival at the John Madsen Farm near Unionville. Originated by the late John Madsen and now carried on by his wife, this annual festival is one of the most successful performances of New Canadians.

The club was invited twice during the summer to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tucker in Port Credit. Later in August a group made a trip to the Indian Reserve near Brantford to attend the Annual Pageant. This pageant proved colourful and informative and provided the visitors with a good insight into the life of the first Canadians.

With their very active summer now over, ISO members are busy working on an equally active winter program.

Raid Warning System Developed At McGill

Montreal, Sept. 29 — CUP — Scientists at McGill University have designed a continental air raid warning system that may form a major part in North America's protective system against invading aircraft.

The system, known as the McGill fence, has been in the planning stage for some time at McGill's electronic laboratory, and is under strictest secrecy on orders from the federal government. The plan will be submitted to a joint meeting of Canadian-US defense boards in October.

The McGill Fence, if accepted, would replace the Lincoln Line, designed by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, to protect the vast northland of Canada. The Lincoln Line was designed to link a radar network being built around Alaska with the warning system of the U.S. Air Force base at Thule, Greenland.

McGill scientists, under Professor Garnet A. Woonton, director of the laboratory, drew up a new plan calling for an intermediate line of plane spotting aided by new technological developments made by McGill.

Dr. Baron Will Be Guest For Annual Hillel Lecture

Dr. Salow W. Baron, of Columbia University will speak on "Jewish Survival — An Historic Challenge" on Tuesday, October 6 at 8.30 p.m. at the YMHA, 750 Spadina Ave. He will deliver the Annual lecture sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at the University of Toronto.

Dr. Baron was educated in Vienna, where he received an extensive rabbinical as well as secular training. In 1926 he was appointed visiting lecturer of history at the Jewish Institute of religion and subsequently served as Professor of History and Acting Librarian.

Since 1934 Professor Baron has held the chair of Jewish History, Literature and Institutions of the Miller Foundation of Columbia University. For many years he served as visiting lecturer of history at the Graduate School for Jewish Jewish Research. In 1944 he served as Rausenbech Lecturer at The Rochester-Colgate Divinity School. He also received an honorary degree of Doctor of Hebrew Letters from the Hebrew Union College.

He is author of "The Jewish Question at the Congress of Vienna"; "The Political Theory of Ferdinand Lasalle"; "The Historical Outlook of Maimondes" and "The Jewish Community: Its History and Structure to the American Revolution."

Dr. Baron also edited "Essays on Maimondes" in 1941 and is editor of the quarterly "Jewish Social Studies."

ART REVIEW

From Barbados

Barbados is a tiny green and white island surrounded by very blue Caribbean, touched lightly with the purple waste from rum refineries. "Bajans", its polychromatic inhabitants, speaking an unprecedented and beautiful bastardization, love to affirm that "Bahrbedohs is de wuhrld, Mahn." And an excellent little world it is. Some of its freshness, warmth and colour have found their way through the watercolours on display at Hart House.

These paintings are the work of rank and frank amateurs. Though unimposing as art, they are interesting as a glance at the island and its people. Hart House gallery is to be commended not only in that is occasionally shows excellent art work but also in that it gives amateurs, students and other poor but honest painters a chance to hang their wares. It is a miserable, flabby society that consists of a few experts and a large number of complete incapables, whether in sports, science, entertainment or art. The backyard ballplayer, the bathtub singer and the Sunday artist may never be immortal, but all of them are healthy, and the worst of them is a better man than the critic. The Bajans had fun doing these things. They sat on their coral island in the temperate outdoors and tried to record its beauty for their own satisfaction, and for the less fortunate Canadians It was a job to frighten more skilled men, but they attempted it. Let him who has done more cast the first stone.

Must Sign Ed. Letters

The editors of The Varsity appreciate getting opinions in the form of letters to the Editors from any students on the campus. However, all letters must be signed in writing, and delivered in person to the Varsity office in the basement of the old Observatory building. There, any Varsity staffer may check your ATL card and initial your letter certifying your bona fide existance.

This may seem a lot of trouble to one who has something to say, wants to say it, leave it at the first post near the Varsity office, and be on about his business. In the same vein, too many people are likely to make libellous allegations, and sign fictitious names to be rid of the blame. Though we hope there are not many at Toronto of this calibre, there are enough to make it difficult for those with constructive opinions.

Prelude

There are moments when
No sound but ticking time
Passes over mind
And books are flung across
A bed, the covers torn
The pages worn
With searching glances
And restless fingers
Sifting the sands of adventure.

The morning ripens
Slowly into afternoon
And afternoon fades
Slowly into evening
And beauty fades
Slowly into decay.

The earth is warm
The soil is damp
Between the fingers of time
Rocks crumble into sand,
Close to the earth
There is no human voice
To drive the worms to surface.
The smell of soil
Is clean
And always there is Protection for thought.

The streets are lit
With eyes that watch
The shapes of men
Who march at night
Until the bats fold their wings

And sleep the sunlight into the evening
And tired eyes
Survey with clinical analysis
The remnant of revelry
And windows opened wide
Admit the afternoon
And coffee at four
Cleans the mind before
Starting all over again.

MARAUDER SOPHS LEGAL

The McMaster Marauders won't be playing any exhibition games with the teams in the Senior Intercollegiate this year, they will playing for the Yates. And they can thank their friendly little Athletic Director, Ivor Wynne, that they are in the senior loop.

About a year ago the men from the Mountain city played a series of exhibition games with the members of the college circuit to prove whether or not they were fit to play in the big time. As it turned out the Marauders didn't even win a game but it wasn't because they didn't try. Here in Toronto, the Blues worked real hard to edge McMaster 16-12. It was the same story in the other Hamilton games. The powers that be in the Intercollegiate were so impressed that they voted Mac into the league.

So far this year the Marauders have been living up to expectations although they haven't yet broken into the win column. In their initial start of the season McGill edged the Hamiltonians, 18 - 12, but it was the clock that ran out that really beat them.

McMaster is handicapped by a enrollment of 1000. But the team that they fielded last year was picked from a great bunch of freshmen and sophs. The result is that graduations haven't played too much havoc with the roster. The most notable absentee is Lee Munn who is playing for Regina in the Western Interprovincial.

It was a great day when Lorne Wrigglesworth returned to the fold this year. The boy from Runnymede Collegiate in Toronto made a great name for himself in his two years of Intermediate ball and with his year of experience in the exhibitions last year he will be a definite plus for Coach Al Smith.

The team is actually intact. Ed Parente and Ed Kosakowski are back to handle the passes like they did last year. And John Pelech, Max Woolley, and Wimp Crawford will look mighty good on the half line. Jim Dodds is also back to run from the full back spot. On the line Burt Kellock, Danny Pugliese, Captain Ken 'Steamer' Stanley and Rosti Radchuk are all veterans. Last year's team was a freshman aggregation and this year's team will be mostly sophs.

Newcomers are Jim Hughes and Glenn MacLean on the line with Jack Rome at half. Rome is a good defensive half from Humberside Collegiate in Toronto. Jim Hughes is also a Toronto boy who starred as defensive tackle for Lawrence Park. Glenn MacLean, also from Humberside Collegiate is the big boy on the team standing at 5' 10" and weighing 240 soaking wet.

There is a familiar face on the Maroon and Grey coaching staff. Don 'Leaky' Fawcett is assistant coach. Leaky played some defensive quarter and great basketball for Coach Bob Masterson last year.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Every now and again we hear about the lad who thinks that Intercollegiate ball is dead and not worth the hard, cold cash that people spend on tickets and football weekends. We hear about people that think that way but we never have met them. It would be interesting if we did. We would cage them so that we could study them.

The popular theory that college ball is a dull spectacle got its inception several years ago when coaches like Bob Masterson and John Metras began to stress the fundamentals of the game rather than pass attacks and other features of the game that would draw in the paying customer. The result was that teams, and particularly the Blues, developed into top defensive teams. But the fans don't appreciate a good defensive team as much as a team that will fill the air with passes. And when a team is good defensively, the opposition's offense gets to be something less than spectacular.

All this would lead you to think that there is something to this yakyak about college ball being dull. But let's look at a few statistics and facts before we run out to find a buyer for our books of tickets.

If college ball has no offensive thrills how would you explain the fact that last year the Blues gained 1152 yards rushing in six games for an average of 192 yards per game. Admittedly the Blues didn't have much of a pass attack. They tried 58, completing 14 which is a lousy record over six games. While the Blues were doing all this, the loyal opposition gained 996 yards rushing for an average of 166 yards per game, and they tossed 86 passes completing 31. If it's action you're after, these statistics would seem to indicate that the boys aren't out there for their constitutional.

Look at it another way. If college ball is dull, it might be because of the personnel. We can't buy that though because after all the main source of Canadian pro talent is the Intercollegiate. You just have to read down the lineups of any Big Four game to see familiar names. Names such as Marsh Hames, Ted Toogood, John Shore, Pete Bennett, Jack Roberts and Jack Gray are in most every Argo lineup and we aren't so old that we can't remember these lads wearing the Blue and White. And this state of affairs exists in all of the Big Four teams.

As far as the style of play is concerned, we admit that teams like the Blues are not as good at the T as the Argos. How could they be? There are no Wyrkowski's or Bruno's on the Blues. And that takes nothing away from Ed Skrzypek, Olie Mandryk and Doug Geekie.

Applied to this year's version of the Blues, the argument doesn't hold a heck of a lot of water either. The Blues held Western down to 150 yards rushing and only allowed the Mustangs to complete five of twenty passes while intercepting three of Don Getty's specialty. You can't go wrong in thinking then that Toronto is a power defensively again this year. But they are a real power offensively as well. You saw the stats in your Monday's Varsity, for Saturday's game. 218 yards rushing and eight of twenty passes completed. That is comparable to a working day with the double blue as far as we are concerned.

So where does that put your argument about college ball being dull? Say that's a mighty nice spot on the wall over yonder.

Buddies

Brotherly love. Isn't it great? At least you would get that idea from the two gents above, Coach Bob Masterson of the Blues on the left and Coach John Metras of the Western Mustangs on the right. Don't let them fool you.

Gal Grad Claims PHE Useful

This article was written by Joan Rogers, a graduate of Physical and Health Education, now attending O.C.E.

Dear Mr. Editor,

The Physical and Health Education Department can help interfaculty sport to be less specialized than any other course on the campus, because we are trained to be leaders in this field.

We are taught how important it is for every girl to participate in competitive sports. The "physeder," each year, has done more than enough in arousing the spirit of participation in every corner of the campus. A girl does not enter interfaculty sport primarily to win. She enters it, I hope, for her own enjoyment to meet girls from other faculties, and to develop further, physically and emotionally. A great percentage of the coaches are physical and health education students. They are helping other girls to develop skills and team play.

The physical education student is not preparing to "mangle the other teams," she is preparing to be a teacher. There is only a minority of students who excell in all the interfaculty sport. Of the four sports mentioned (baseball, swimming, basketball and hockey) there are only two we even begin to study in our course. We are coached to be coaches, and how to teach beginners, not how to be outstanding players ourselves. If one is keen on basketball she tries out for the interfaculty team, and then she is practising the drills to better herself.

The timetable consists of a 30 hour week, and in this there are only eight to 10 periods spent in the gymnasium. As you see this is a very full schedule. How is it possible for the student who is taking everything from English Modern Dance to be preparing to "mangle the other teams" in interfaculty sports? As you see we do not have as much time to specialize in any one sport as a pass arts student, who may be keen on only one sport, and therefore practise it intensively.

We need the interfaculty sports as much as other faculties. They are necessary to bring out our individual interests, to allow us to mingle with other students, and to increase our sportsmanship qualities. We may show more enthusiasm but it should not be resented, because it is our chosen profession, and it is only natural.

scope of our studies."

The Institute will now be able to study school children up to the grade six age level. The house, donated by the late Senator Leighton McCarthy to the University has already been remodelled and equipped for its new occupants. The fenced yard, filled with seesaws, swings, and monkey bars provides one-quarter of an acre for the fifty children that will be playing there at one time. Two hundred children in all will attend the school.

Mayor Lamport defended the University's attempt to move the school into the neighborhood in opposition to the complaints that the school would bring the usual ordinary nuisances—"noise, coming and goings and unsightliness." Dr. Blatz felt "the school will in no way spoil the atmosphere of the neighborhood."

The old quarters of the Institute at 98 St. George St., have now been taken over by the Department of Psychology of the University.

ada and vary in amount according to the need of the student.

Recipients of these bursaries are expected to work in the mission field for a period of one year after graduating from theological college.

Like Emmanuel College, there is no fee for divinity students at Knox College. Trinity has a small tuition fee.

Principal J. S. Glen of Knox College explained that from 25 to 30 students a year are aided by church bursaries. Church students in residence also receive a special rate for room and board.

Soccer Blues Work

Varsity's soccer Blues are now laying plans for their campaign to regain the Blackwood Trophy which they lost last year. Presented to the Senior Intercollegiate Soccer champions the Blackwood Trophy was won last year by Western and O.A.C. from Varsity whose powerful squad had won it in 1951 for their eleventh consecutive championship. The Soccer Blues are out now to make it an even dozen titles.

Bobby Auld, a man well-known in T and D Soccer activity, is coaching the soccerites of '53. So far there is no manager for the team but any volunteers are invited to see coach Auld. Since there are games scheduled for this week-end for both the senior and intermediate teams those interested should apply immediately.

All oppenings on the teams are not yet filled. Practices are scheduled for Thursday and Friday at 4.30 on the front campus. New candidates for the teams are advised to report to Mr. Auld at those times.

The Blues were not seriously affected by graduation or academic difficulties this year. Of '52's group there are four stars back in uniform for Varsity. Wally Eze, Jose Atucha, Bill Leach and Karl Tamburg are back for the Blue and White. Coach Auld is at work now urging these veterans and the newcomers to surpass their dull record of last year.

Swimming Squad Needs Speedsters

Women's intercollegiate swimming practises got rolling Monday night as 38 hopefuls turned out to the first practise. According to swim coach Miss W. (Freddy) Baxter, there is still a shortage of enthusiasts in the speed and diving trial.

Last season, Toronto headed the intercol swimming by a margin of eleven points setting a record in the medley. Beryl Lewis, who is back this year won the backstroke event as well as setting a record in the same class in interfaculty competition. Back again at practises are Clare Mcmullin, Jenny Crawford and Mary Crowther, all members of last year's winning squad. Patty Evil who did the honours for McMaster last season was also out Monday. We regret that Anne Walters, last year's manager cannot be with us again. Ann has been at the Weston San since last January and has just udergone an operation for TB of the bone.

The intercol meet, to be held at Hart House, November the 28th will feature a one hundred yard free style event, new to women's intercol ranks. Those who wish to make the big squad will be required to attend at least five of the scheduled practises — and MUST have medicals!

Sailors Recruit — UNTD

Every year the University Naval Training Division recruits about forty cadets. These naval students must be sound academically. After completion of three successful school years, the cadets are commissioned to the rank of sub-lieutenant.

During their summer they receive training at the east and west coasts, and ship to sea frigates, destroyers, cruisers or possibly an aircraft carrier. The cadets receive $170 a month including their room and board. A uniform is also issued to them. On these ships they receive instruction in navigation, gunnery, anti-submarine weapons and seamanship.

This summer cadets who were stationed on the east coast had combined operations in Norfolk, Virginia with United States naval cadets from Annapolis College Twenty students from the University of Toronto crossed to England to take part in the Coronation proceedings.

During the winter months they take lectures at H.C.M.S. York one night each week and when they parade for a couple of hours at night, they are paid one-half day's wages.

Caledon
Hills Of Relaxation

If you enjoy a weekend in the country remember this:- That the Caledon Club is a group of people who, like yourself, enjoy spending some time out of the city. They are fortunate in having acquired a farm right in the heart of the Caledon District only forty miles from here.

They go out there for many reasons, some for hiking, others just to be out of doors and yet others just to loaf and relax. They don't have any creed or political affiliations or faculty preferences other than the spirit of friendliness and good will. The farm is operated and kept up by club members which requires some work. But you probably want to know more about the physical characteristics of the place.

It is unique in that its 158 acres has cliffs and caves, quarries, two natural swimming pools or skating ponds (depending on the season), woodlots and a very old apple orchard. The farmhouse and the barn are its main buildings although there is another frame house that houses quarters for the young ladies who visit the farm. These (the ladies not the buildings) may come up with club members or with the various University Clubs that now use the farm..

The house itself is well equipped with kitchen facilities, sleeping bunks and a record player with a set of classical as well as modern records. It also sports a slide projector and a piano.

Fine, you say, but what can you do? A helluva lot, I'd say. The place lends itself to skating, cross country skiing, hiking, swimming, rock climbing and ornithology (that's bird watching). There is a lot of material for painting especially, but also for photography or botany study. Or, if so inclined, just wandering around some most picturesque Caledon countryside.

It is simple to join. It only costs you a buck and a half (colloquial for a dollar and fifty cents) which in turn gives you a year's membership and reduced rates for staying at the farm. This you can get from the Grad Office, Second Floor, Hart House. But whether you want to join or not at the moment, you are welcomed to attend our open meetings at Hart House throughout the year. If you want to visit the farm, go to the Grad Office and see them up there.

Nonrapid Transit Gotta Chance It

By CLIFF JOE

I live one h.... of a long way from this school and if there is one man I have gotten to know it's the man who drives those busses. Everything that goes on wheels and bears the name TTC is a bus. At least that will do for simplicity's sake—and believe me, one can get simple spending as much time as this lost soul.

So they built a new subway. So what! It's just ducky for you rich northerners. But I don't go North! Anyhow the whirling rapid transit isn't working yet but I hear the hitch hiking is pretty good that way. Every night you see the northbound caddies and MGs slowing to pick up fatigued students. But I could stand at the corner of Bloor and Avenue road for a week before such luck would fall.

The only solution to this problem lay in the dear old TTC—a blessing to the rude public and myself. I voyage to town with them—half the city at a time but at night—gad! It shouldn't happen to a dog. Mind you, it's a wonderful way to meet people. At last it's a quick and violent way. Just the other day I was standing here (you're lucky if you can sit, and by Avenue Road you never do) eyeing some tall dark stranger when I felt a brutal blow to the left shoulder. Before I knew it, there I was and there he was, locked in the most romantic embrace! During the clamour, various books fell to the floor and it was most disconcerting to say the least, to have to untangle myself from my newfound Romeo and recover them myself.

"U. of T., huh?"

"Geez, I thought I did good to pass dee entrance".

Yes, you meet them all! Another woman (the quarterback) was overheard to yell to an unknowing teammate.

"Nehru, yeah it's some province in Denmark."

We were nearing the end of the carline when the mob dwindled to a few. I rose to struggle to the door and playing the part of a sweet young thing, proceeded to tiptoe down the aisle. I nearly made it—nearly. But someone's foot foiled the attempt. First went the books, then me. The car halted and the owner of the foot stooped to—tie his shoelace. I always wanted to see the end of the line!

ideal or belief has permanent value for us until it is completely understood through personal experience.

In the words of Indian author-teacher, Krishnamurti: "You can discover whether there is truth, immortality, only in the completeness of action itself, not through the authoritative assertion of another. Only in the fulness of action itself is reality concealed."

Talk

I venture to assert that no amount of talking about God can make His existence more real to us and the most eloquent sermon is valueless unless it stimulates us to think abstractly, uninfluenced by accepted texts.

In the poetic language of the East Kahlil Gibran expresses it thus:

"The teacher who walks in the shadow of the temple among his followers gives not of his wisdom but rather of his faith and lovingness.

"If he is indeed wise, he does not bid you enter the house of his wisdom, but rather leads you to the threshold of your own mind."

What, then, makes us so certain that God is really "backing" the attitudes and activities of the Church? One wonders, furthermore, with what misguided optimism many of us view the increase in church attendance as a measure of the Church's success —as though attendance at a church service were an end in itself.

Church Fails

From my own understanding the Church fails where it attempts in organised religious services, to do more than:—

1. Present the Bible teachings for interpretation by the followers.
2. Provide an opportunity for praise and an outlet for worship through the very best in musical talent and beauty of service.

One wonders, too, with what dull persistence we open and close our churches on particular days when we might fling wide her doors that man might worship there as and when he is moved.

Most important, I believe, is the spirit we bring to every con cious act; the spirit in which we live and move and worship.

For "Is not religion all deeds and all reflection?

"And that which is neither deed nor reflection, but a wonder and a surprise ever springing in the soul, even while the hands hew the stone or tend the loom? Who can separate his faith from his actions, or his belief from his occupations?

"Who can spread his hours before him, saying 'This for God and this for myself; This for my soul and this other for my body?' All your hours are wings that beat through space from self to self . . .

"And he to whom worshipping is a window, to open but also to shut, has not yet visited the house of his soul whose windows are from dawn to dawn." — (Kahlil Gibran, "The Prophet").

A Decent Formula

God And The Church

This article, by Julie Wollaston, of Adelaide University, Australia, is reprinted from the Adelaide University, Students Representative Council newspaper, "On Dit".

"Religion," says Whitehead aptly, "is tending to degenerate into a decent formula wherewith to embellish a comfortable life."

The dreary sameness of our church services, the narrow and personal interpretation of the broad and eternal truths of Christianity, the failure to look beyond the letter of the law into the spirit of the teachings—these are the factors which are slowly yet inexorably driving men from the church doors and the increasing tendency of modern man to think for himself is hastening this process of his separation from an institution which so obviously fails to satisfy his needs.

Lost Touch

It is apparent that the church has lost touch with life, and in place of the concept of religion as the centre around which the patterns of life evolve, we have the habit of church-going with its handing-down of traditional concepts about God and prescribed attitudes acceptable to the church.

While modern man tends to separate the realms of the sacred and the secular, some aspects of life have permanent value for him and continue to be permeated with religion. Perhaps now, as never before, man needs spiritual reawakening and renewal of faith in God as the one steadfast, purposeful and abiding power in an existence shot through with inconsistency and a world fraught with change.

And how many of us, when caught up with that "sense of tears in beauty" which we find at the highest in music, fragrance and vision, can claim that we have not felt wtih Wordsworth:—

"A presence that disturbs me with oy
Of elevated thoughts a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man;
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things . . ."

And the intuitive is so much more convincing than the rational.

There is, I believe, no more disturbing revelation than the recognition of the fact that no

Our Readers Write

The Liberals – How They Did It

Here are a few of the reasons that the Liberal Party won on August the tenth.

Perhaps the first would be the date itself. It was picked so as to defranchise many of our voters—as the results clearly show. The Liberals felt that the people would rather be away in the cool vacation lands than at home examining the state of their government. They hoped that the people would be indifferent, for their government as was clearly demonstrated many times could not stand close attention.

Another reason might have been the glorification of their leaders which closely resembles that used in countries which at present are not friendly with the West. It should be remembered that Mr. St. Laurent was a rather high pressure corporation lawyer before the Liberal public relations men turned him into "Uncle Louis." It might be very educational for some doubting students to watch his behavior in the House of Commons. Here one beholds a very different man from the one which the Liberal publicity men try to make us believe is their leader. We behold a ruthless autocrat trying to stifle all opposition and, of course, always under the direction of Canada's foremost political entrepreneur —C. D. Howe.

Another reason might be the Liberal Party's philosophy that the end justifies the means. In many ridings the Liberals were actually caught trying to take votes notwithstanding how they went about it. Here are a few examples. Hundreds of people who were not qualified to vote, mostly new Canadians, were put on the list by the Liberals. These new Canadians were told that the Liberal Party had brought them to Canada and therefore they should show their appreciation by voting Liberal. Some to these were preciation by voting Liberal. Some of these were exist or who had moved years ago, people who were living in houses that did not even exist; all were found on the election list. And sure enough on election day these "voters" would show up and vote Liberal. I can assure you that if you walked along Queen St. on election day you would have been propositioned to vote Liberal. You would have impersonated one of these imaginary voters. In one riding the Liberals phoned every house in the riding during the last few days before the election. They asked how many people in the houses were expected to vote. If the answer was two and they saw there were five on the list then sure enough three impersonators would be there to vote Liberal on election day.

These stories might sound incredible to you but I can assure you that they are the truth and these facts can be proved. These are only a few of the many illicit election practices which I have personally witnessed used by the Liberal Party in the last election.

Ted Rogers,
II Trinity.

The SAC And . . .

This is the annual SAC editorial. It comes up every year, and it usually appears on the morning of the first meeting of the SAC.

What is the SAC? It's the Students' Administrative Council — the representative body for the students at this University. And the most important word here is "student", for the SAC is the organ of "student" self-government.

But this is a different kind of editorial. Surprisingly this is about the first time in the last four years (at least) that a Varsity editorial is able to say that the SAC "can do something." Last year's Council can show with a bold point of its forefinger that it accomplished something concrete.

The new SAC building, the old Observatory, is the proud result of piles and piles of reports by the Student Union Committees. What the more than a score of this year's reps hold in store for us, nobody knows.

We're not going to say these reps are brilliant or above normal. We think they're an average bunch of students who are willing to do a lot of hard work to make sure that student self-government is no fantasy. And they never come close to getting the credit they should.

But behind them is the general body of students. No governing group, be it student or otherwise, can function properly if it hasn't the support of the governed. And support implies interest.

There is ample room at every SAC meeting for observers, and there are plenty of seats, too. The Council meets tonight at 7:30 in Falconer Hall; it meets every two weeks after. The idea is to make sure that the Council members are not alone and that what they have to say or decide is representative of student wishes.

It only takes a couple of hours every second Wednesday night. That's not much when compared to the time spent by the SAC members on seemingly endless committee meetings.

Then there is also the humorous side of some of the Council meetings. But we'll leave that for you to discover.

Remember: Falconer Hall, 7:30 tonight.

Bookstore Posters

The new University Bookstore has been blessed with beautiful picture windows on both the front and one side of the building. They are located at what is probably the busiest intersection on the campus. No doubt about it, it is the perfect place for student posters

Though only one club has had the privilege of this space for publicity, certainly this sets a precedent for other enterprizing organizations. In no time at all the bookstore front would look like the show-window of a bankruptcy sale.

If it goes on, it won't simply be a sale, and there an end. Maybe some people don't like what they see either looking in the Bookstore, or looking out of it. Nevertheless, the windows, expensive ones at that, are there to see through. And the present policy of the Bookstore, whatever it is, should have been made public in advance, and perhaps a few students asked.

Sane ?

Kat scratched his head. What to do? Here was his pal, Kidney Myth, advocating a certain degree of non-conformity. Why be a conventional mediocrity when you can be an unconventional mediocrity? Mmm. Something there! Don't succumb to mass hysteria, try individual hysteria. Mmmm. To conform to the old pattern of conformity or to conform to the suggested pattern of non-conformity? Ugh! At this point, Kat decided to pay no more attention to the letter and continue with the spirit(s). Why so? Kat realized that non-conformity excludes any conformity whatsoever, and that it therefore excludes sanity, which essentially involves the conformity of activity to a purposive pattern. (The booby-hatch is crammed with boobies who can't account for their actions.) Even a certain degree of non-conformity, since it completely involves feline activity, would exclude sanity.

STAUNCH CONFORMIST.

Worse Offense

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The first issue of The Varsity this term carried a complaint on the desecration of Hart House, and elsewhere on the University grounds. Since then even a worse offence has been perpetrated by the cutting down of some beautiful elms on the Elm Walk to make room for the new University College residence.

The damage is done, and there-fore it is useless to voice a complaint. But why could not the Authorities have planned the residences so as to leave the trees which were abutting the walk. Need the building have come so far to the east? It takes less than a year to build a residence, but the growth of a fine elm takes a lifetime. And which is the more satisfying to the eye? Oh, Jeanneret, why have you done this? The Hamadryadi weeks!

Hart House Admittance By Cards

"Hart House Membership Cards will be necessary this year for admittance to many of this men's club's activities," Garth MacDowell, the Assistant to the Warden, said yesterday. These cards will be obtainable the rest of this week in the front hall of Hart House from 9.30 till 6.00. By going between 11.30 and 2.00 however, members will have a chance to meet their Hart House Committee members. The cards are issued on presentation of Admit to Lecture Cards or Academic Fee slips certifying that Hart House fees have been paid.

Mr. MacDowell said, "The main purpose of these cards is to emphasize the exlusive character of Hart House and the facilities which are available.

Regarding one of the many interesting features of this year's programme, Mr. MacDowell said that the first Sunday Concert will be held October 25th.

Hmm . . .

Miss Ferguson, the Dean of Women of University College and Miss Ilene Dyson the Don of Mulock Hall, inspected the remnants of the suitcase which was burned. "Very, very wise studenst discovered the fire," said Miss Ferguson.

Suitcase Set On Fire Due To Violated Rule Was Threat To Mulock

The damage was estimated at about $50 by the district fire chief Norman Caskie.

It is illegal to use ironers in the Whitney Hall Residences, Miss Ferguson, the Dean of Women pointed out. She said there are enough laundries in the residences.

The fire was discovered by a group of "very wise" students, said Miss Ferguson.

"They saw the smoke, peered through the transom, and got a master key, trying to get in," she said. They called the fire department immediately when they saw the flames inside.

One of the caretakers, Mr. Cole said "he didn't wish to b in the shoes of the girl who started the fire." Miss Ferguson, on the other hand, declared that the girl had enough punishment while she was being interviewed, and that she was not going to punish her any further.

This is why she declined to release the name of the girl, she said.

Some of the coeds who discovered the fire were Greta Tienkamp, III C and F., Marg Yardley, I Gen. Ann Harris, I Mod. Lang. and Lit.

Pep Rally Approved By Council

The Blue and White Society lost no time last night in bringing up the question of a pep rally for this year's football season. In the report of the Society presented at the Students' Administrative Council meeting yesterday Paul, Lorch, chairman, asked Council approval on a suggestion that a rally and street dance be held on Friday, October 16.

Lorch asked that Council members have no divided opinion because, in the long run, it would "hurt the success of any rally." He said that decision should go one way or the other.

The Council voted by a big majority to support Lorch in his pep rally plans.

The Blue and White chairman said that "success of a rally comes from the enthusiasm of the student body" and informed the Council that no formalized program had been decided upon. He said it would probably follow the regular pattern of other pep rallies.

Scott Symond, Trinity, spoke against the Society plans. "There has never been a successful rally," he declared. He added that he would be very hesitant about going on with a rally.

UC rep, Earl Berger, suggested that perhaps the pep rally and dance would interfere with the University College centenary celebrations in Hart House. Lorch stated that the Society had thought of the complications and had decided to move the rally from the back campus to the front. He said this might solve the problems the UC centenary committee might encounter.

Last year the SAC approved the pep rally by the slim margin of one vote. Dick Davies, the Blue and White chairman, called it a failure. But Lorch felt the reason for this was the fact that it was held so late in the season. He hopes to remedy that this fall.

Chorus And Orchestra To Rehearse Together

Rehearsals for both University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra and the All-Varsity Mixed Chorus will be held on Tuesday nights in the Conservatory from 7.30 to 10 this year, Professor R. A. Rosevear, of the Faculty of Music, told the Students' Administrative Council last night.

Holding both rehearsals in the same building at the same time will afford greater chance of combined effort during practice and will also allow access to the library of choral and orchestral music, Prof. Rosevear said. Rehearsals were formerly held in the Drill Hall and the P and OT Huts.

Since membership is obligatory for all School of Music and for the first year of the honor arts mussic course there is already a good nucleus of students to provide a backbone for the organization. "Between 80 and 90 students have already applied but as applications are still being received, we hope to get many students from other faculties," he sair," as we are now in the process of heavy auditions".

An Assistant-Conductor has not yet been appointed and it has not yet been decided whether there will be a single conductor for both the orchestra and the chorus. Th. conductor will help out at rehearsals and conduct one number at each concert program. Librarians, property men and publicity people are also needed, he said.

In other years the orchestra and chorus has given free concerts at Convocation Hall and last year for the first time participated in the Inter-University Choral Festival. There was also a concert made up entirely of Canadian music. Two of the composers, James Guthro and Charles Wilson are graduates of the Faculty of Music. The first concert this year will be given in December.

SAC at a glance

In addition to hearing the plans for the University Orchestra and Chorus discussed by Professor Rosevear, deciding to hold a Pep Rally on October 16th, and discussing the preparations for the University Service's conferences in National Federation of Canadian University Students' and the World Montreal, the Students' Administrative Council at its meeting last night: discussed for 40 minutes whether the SAC's public Relations Committe should censor all letters written by members of the Council and released to the newspapers, magazines, and radio and TV stations. The question was raised by Earl Berger, III Vic., who stated when questioned, "I shall censor my own writings"—as Public Relations Commissioner.

— Re-elected Gordon Gwynne-Timothy as SAC Chairman.

Intramural Finals At Lawn Tennis Club

Intramural tennis was on for the men at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club yesterday and the second round was almost completed. Third round for the racket men starts

Bruce Sonley, a seeded man, was defeated by Bill Smith, 6-3, 7-5. George Lukk easily defeated Larry Yeigh, 6-0, 6-4. Robin Arnold took Bill Corcoran, two of three games, 6-4, 4-6, and 6-3. Ralph Hubbs topped Bob Walker 6-4, 8-4, in a straight set.

Flight finals are scheduled at the Tennis club on Friday with the championship to be decided on Monday, also at the club.

East-West Reactions Presented

Dr. John Hastings and Lewis Perinbam will speak on the Indian Seminar in Hart House today at 5 p.m. The meeting will be held in the Debates Room. Coeds may attend the meeting.

John Hastings will present his reactions on the seminar. The Human Implications of Planning Development. He will be followed by Perinbam who will comment on Hastings' speech and give the Asian viewpoint.

Perinbam, a Malayan, was the advisory secretary of World University Service in the United Kingdom. He attended Glasgow University, worked for the Indian embassy in London, and came to Canada on an invitation from WUS. He is now the local assistant secretary in Toronto.

Just Gargoyles

Four-Headed Girls

By MANI THALER

Interested in gargoyles?

If you are, University College is just grinning with them.

Gargoyle—"Grotesque spout, usually with human or animal mouth, head, or body, projecting from gutter of (esp. Gothic; building, etc." Anyway, that's what it says here, in the dictionary, that is.

Well, we wouldn't call the front hall of University College a gutter, not exacty, but we suppose it's close enough. If you have a queer feeling of someone looking over your shoulder, relax, it's only the four-headed girls with the sixteen pigtails.

But where the gargoyle-carver really got carried away is in the West Hall. We counted them once, was it 171, or 271? Anyway, pink elephants have nothing on the things that man must have been seeing in his sleep. Frogs seem to have been his special mania. They play banjos, flutes, and just sit around in a portprandial stupor. His name was William McCormick in the nineties.

That was just after the fire, fortunately, or otherwise.

The dragon is the most famous (or infamous) of all these efforts at decoration. Somebody was even crazy enough to steal it one dark night when the evening students were looking the other way.

Over the door of lecture rooms, and other rooms you will find a space, and it's a good thing to look off into, considering; a queer bird chewing away on a bunch of wooden grapes, and its about time it went on a new diet; a dog looking as if he just swallowed a wooden bird eating some wooden grapes, etc.

There is also an abundance of musical frogs playing flutes and trumpets, melancholy choir boys, ugly monks, and uglier carvings of nothing at all in particular.

Going out, four miserable lions are holding a ribbon in their mouths. Undernourished, that's all. The last thing that strikes you as you leave in a hurry are four pairs of vultures making love over the heads of an equal number of male hags. Anyway, Mr. McCormick had fun.

Student Handbook Belated Arrival, Fault Of Printer

The annual Students' Handbook appeared yesterday, a month behind schedule. "This year's deal with the Alger Press was a great disappointment," said E. A. MacDonald, Secretary Treasurer of the SAC. The Alger Press of Oshawa was contracted this year to print the handbooks, since they charged $600 less than the printers who did it previously.

When the Alger Press fell behind in their contract, MacDonald made a trip to Oshawa to investigate, and give them a final spurt.

There will be two thousand fewer of the handy pocket books this year. Last fall 5000 were printed.

The Finance Commission of the Student Administrative Council brought before the meeting a suggestion that the whole handbook situation be reviewed at a later date. It was proposed that if some of the books are not sold, the Council should not be held responsible for the loss of money involved. This loss should be absorbed by Alger Press, which was responsible for the delay.

Student Group Reports On Seminar

Indian Seminar Delegates Tackle Social Implications Of Development Planning

The Indian Seminar which was being planned for the last two years at least, materialized this summer. The title of the seminar was "The Human Implications of Development Planning."

About thirty Canadian delegates attended, at least as many Indians, and there were a sprinkling of others, Americans and Europeans.

One of the delegates was Lewis Perinbam, a Malayan himself, who is the assistant secretary of the local World University Service in Toronto.

He found that the greatest difference between the attitudes of Canadians and Indians was their approach to their studies.

Whereas Canadians seemed to regard their studentship independent from their citizenship, the Indians having been brought up in a more political-conscious tradition, had a different attitude, said Perinbam.

He said all the students to whom he has spoken seemed to have grasped remarkably the problems of India and Asia with which they were confronted.

He did not think that there was any sharp division between Canadians and Indians on any specific issue.

Each day a speaker came to the seminar and delivered a lecture on a topic which was afterwards discussed by small groups of students. The opinions of the groups were later presented to the whole seminar by one member of each group.

According to Perinbam the Indians are fully aware of the human implications that go with technical progress.

Most people felt democratic process should be employed in making Asia wealthier. He felt, however, that some of the Indians preferred a quicker way. "To some of them a totalitarian method would be acceptable," he said. He personally favours a democratic process. "It is lasting and it gives us a freedom of choice," he says.

John Hastings, another Torontonian who attended the seminar, thought that the seminar was "a successful venture".

One of the topics which he thought most interesting, was Social Education. The lecture and the discussion following the lecture revealed the differences in the family structures of the Indians and Canadians, he said.

The Indian family system fosters the co-operative factors in human personality, and gives Indians a sense of security, he explained. Large families live in groups. "When a father dies, there are still uncles left, in the family. The family is still large," he said.

He contrasted the Indian system with the Canadian system, of which he said it fosters individual initiative, and creativeness.

He thought that both systems have gone too far in their respective directions. "We could both learn from each other," he said.

Another one of the topics discussed at the seminar that intrigued Hastings was that on Commonwealth relations. A lecture was delivered by George Bennett, on the staff of Colonial History at Oxbord. He used to lecture in Toronto.

"Some Indians couldn't see what advantages could be derived from being a member nation of the Commonwealth. Some, on the other hand thought it was a good idea", he said. He was pleased to hear Nehru approve of the idea of the Commonwealth. Strangely, mostly Ceylonese delegates were supporting the Commonwealth most, he said. Hastings found that anti-British feelings, which may have been strong a few years ago were now dying out.

One of the burning questions discussed at the seminar was whether or not India could produce enough food, providing that she had all the necessary modern farm implements, according to Elizabeth Scroggie, IV UC.

Dr. Vintley, a Colombo Plan administrator, told the seminar "No", said Scroggie but recalled that some, on the other hand, said that India could support twice as large a population as she has.

She said that of the five Indian girls, three were extremely shy, who did not take a very active part in the seminar, and went to bed at 9.30 p.m., and locked their doors, while the others sat discussing the current topics of the seminar.

The seminar was organized by the Indians, who provided the hospitality. The money came from the American Ford Foundation ($40,000) about the same amount from World University Service, and some from provincial grants. The students paid for their travelling expenses in India.

Although WUS made no stipulations about the trip, they expect the students who attended the seminar to give lectures and generally discuss their experiences with Canadians, said Graeme Ferguson, the secretary of WUS.

The Seminar was held in Mysore, Mysore State, in India.

Employment Service Anticipates Positions For 3500 Students

"Part-time, temporary, summer and Christmas season jobs are now available at the Placement Service in Hart House," E. J. Halse of the National Employment service said yesterday. He said that the centre expects to handle and place approximately 3500 students this year.

The application procedure is simple. The applicant leaves his name and other information regarding the type of job he wants with Mr. Halse of the Hart House centre. The agency will then contact the student when a job is available that meets the student's needs. However, the student will find with worthwhile to keep in regular contact with the agency.

The employment agency situated on the second floor of the athletic wing of Hart House opened on the 28th of September and has already placed many students. The jobs that have already been filled have included desk-clerking in a hotel, Y.M.C.A. group leading, compilation of statistics for business concerns, telephone service calls and general factory work. Applications will be received any time between the hours 8.30 a.m. and 4.30 p.m. by Mr. Halse in the Hart House agency.

Rugby Games On Television This Season

All Varsity football games, it was confirmed by the C.B.C. yesterday, will be televised this fall. Last year the first game of the season was televised but the other games were curtailed. When Varsity is away from home, the C.B.C. will televise Canadian and American professional football, T. Coatsworth C.B.C. Publicity Manager said.

Mr. Coatsworth said that as yet no plans had been made for televising other Varsity sports, but didn't mean plans would not be made at some later date he added. Last year the C.B.C. televised intramural lacrosse, basketball, boxing and swimming at Varsity athletic nights.

NFCUS Conference Meets In Two Weeks Stalker Stays Home

The National Federation of Canadian University Students and the World University Service (WUS) will be holding their annual conferences this year in Montreal between October 9 and 17.

The week-long NFCUS meet will begin on October 12. Toronto will be represented there by Jennifer Rickard, vice-president of the Students' Administrative Council, and Scott Symons, NFCUS chairman. Dr. Syd Wax, a Toronto graduate, and Bob Sutherland, last year's SAC president will be present as NFCUS Executive members.

Originally, John Stalker, 1953-54 Council president, was to have attended along with Symons, but he announced, at last night's meeting that he would be unable to go. Stalker explained that the pressure of school and other duties prevented him from attending the five-day conference. He is in his final year of Medicine.

While it had been hoped he could attend for only two days, Stalker said he would "not be doing justice to the Council" if he was present for that short period.

Reasons offered for having only two delegates and no observers were: 1. it saved money, and 2. it showed that Toronto was not trying to dominate the NFCUS conference by sending more delegates than other universities.

Symons asked that the Toronto delegates be given a certain amount of freedom in making decisions at the NFCUS conference. He said he couldn't be making phone calls to Toronto "every five minutes" to get Council approval.

Earl Berger, UC rep, wanted the SAC to give the NFCUS delegates a Toronto mandate on the Russian the Council to give Symons and Miss Rickard a definite decision on whether Toronto should or should not stay in the Federation These motions were not passed.

A suggestion from the national executive office of NFCUS to have General Secretary-Treasurer, E. A. MacDonald, attend the conference was also considered. MacDonald said he would go if other universities planned to send official secretaries.

The question of the rise in the NFCUS per capita fee was brought up. Last spring the students at this University decided in a referendum to approve a fee raise from 20 cents to one dollar. However, it was decided that the delegates tell the conference that this decision was made before the recent University tuition fee raise.

Symons and Rickard were to report back to the SAC after the conference about the adviseability or not of the one dollar Federation fee hike. It has been felt that if NFCUS does not get the raise it would not be able to continue its work effectively.

The NFCUS chairman also suggested that if the Federation was not going to do anything for the coming year, fee raise or not, then Toronto should be the first University to withdraw from that organization.

Decision was reserved on whether Toronto should send a possible candidate for the permanent presidency of the national student federation. That person would have to give up a year of his studies.

World University Service is having their conference on the weekend before the NFCUS meet, Toronto's reps to that gathering are Doug Hamlin, WUS Committee chairman, and Ian Scott, WUS Chairman.

WUS recently sponsored a summer student seminar in India. Four Toronto students attended and were addressed by Premier Nehru of India.

Parade Returns For Homecoming

The Blue and White society announced today its instructions and agenda for the 1953 edition of the home coming weekend float parade. As has become traditional, the weekend October 17th and 18th, will be inaugurated by the colorful and competitive parade.

In a letter to the presidents of all student societies, Ted Desjardins the chairman of the float parade committee has laid down four rules to "ensure equality among the entries and the smooth running of the parade." Each faculty, college or school may enter only one float; the theme for all floats will be "Pioneer Spirit." Any aspect of the theme is permissible, allowing free play for imagination and the inclusion of individual faculty characteristics. The total cost of each float must not exceed twenty dollars and commercial advertising is not allowed.

The parade is to assemble at Devonshire Place at 10:30 a.m., Saturday, October 17. The route is north to Bloor, east to Bay or Yonge, south to College and west to the Wallberg building. It will then move to the front campus and pass three times before a reviewing stand. The climax of the parade will be the presenting of the Alumni Association Shield to the winning float which will appear at the Varsity-Mc-Master football game that afternoon. As yet, neither the basis of judging nor the names of the judges have been announced.

Each student society president has been asked to appoint a representative to be in charge of the individual floats. A meeting of these representatives will be held next week.

Ted Desjardins ended his letter on the optimistic note of "Let us put on a parade that will live long in all our memories."

Freshies To Reorganize Manitoba Student Life

Reprinted from The Manitoban

"Hey! What gives?" I picked up my fourth-hand copy of Milton, glanced momentarily at the pages which had ped from the binding and were now fluttering around the corner, and gazed in astonishment behind me.

Disappearing rapidly through U-MSU's swinging doors was the group of eager young scholars who had just breezed by on the sidewalk.

Standing in my customary place on the lawn beside the largest "Keep Off The Grass sign, I pondered this strange phenomenon. Not only had their stacked books been glisteningly new, but I was sure that last guy had had a tie on! And what was more . . . they were going in the direction of the large arrow; that is: following signs!

Giving a cynical shake to my weary senior's head I plodded, suitably listlessly, towards the caf for consolement. But here another shock awaited me. Instead of the comfortable familiar litter, the dishes were piled neatly on the side tables, chairs were placed in their proper places, and horrors! not one pack of cards was to be seen anywhere.

Shaken, I turned towards the bus stop and home. At least the good old bus wouldn't fail me; it couldn't be. I was being offered a lift . . . without even lying across the highway . . . without even bribing anyone . . . in fact, without even gesturing!

It could only be Freshie registration at the university.—H.S.

Fly Away

Tired of the daily routine? Want romantic adventure? Want to get away from it all? — Try the University squadron of the R.C.A.F. at 11 St. George Street.

The University contingent, headed by Wing Commander Allen, lecturer in the department of Aeronautical Engineering, and Squadron Leader Reeves, has openings for a number of men from the University in the Regular Officer Training Plan, and the University Reserve Training Plan. The R.O.T.P., a recent innovation, resulting from negotiaitions between the Department of National Defence and educational authorities. It provides for subsidization of students otherwise unable to attend University, and consists of a series of Winter lectures, coupled with Summer training which leads to commissioned positions in the regular Air Force.

The U.R.T.P. consists of the same series of lectures and summer employment but does not provide subsidization. Upon completion of this Plan, the student is normally a Pilot Officer, and as such may be appointed to the R.C.A.F. Regular, Auxiliary, or Supplementary Reserve with the rank of Flying Officer.

Medical students have a limited subsidization program available in the later years of their studies, and women also may be admitted to the U.R.T.P.

The present strength of the R.C.A.F. trainees at the University is about two hundred. Last year some sixty applicants were admitted to the Air Force, but this year, recruiting has been slow, and there is a smaller number of candidates applying for the various openings available. Some of the trades and positions offered during the season of Summer employment are suitable for Arts students, but emphasis is placed upon those in Engineering faculties. Branches of the service available are:- Pilot, Navigation Officer, Aeronautical Engineering, Armament, Construction Engineering, Telecommunications, Accounts, Administration and many others.

These opportunities for entrance to the R.C.A.F are not only designed to provide more and better officers for the Force in time of peace or war, but also "to familiarize students with the underlying principles and requirements of National and International Defence, and to afford training in subjects essential to an appreciation of Canada's foreign and defence policies."

They are designed also to develop character and leadership ability and to offer a career of great importance in the service of our country.

It is expected that the series of Winter lectures accompanying the course will be held in the Wallberg building, on Tuesday nights for first year students and on Thursdays for the second and third year men. Some use may also be made of the drill hall at 11 St. George Street.

Adequate Arboretum Hoped For—Wyman

Hope for an adequate botanical garden in Toronto was expressed by Prof. G. H. Duff of the Botany Department as he introduced Dr. Donald Wyman, of Harvard university in a lecture in the Unitarian Church Tuesday night.

Dr. Wyman, horticulturist of Arnold Arboretum, the largest on the American continent, said that the Japanese barberry, now common was once a packet of seeds in the Arnold greenhouse.

The arboretum has developed ornamental trees and shrubs from temporate zones all over the world and is now working on evergreen barberry, not susceptible to wheat rust, he said.

Need Tenors At Glee Club Leader Says

A call for male singers has been sounded by Ward McAdam, director of the Hart House Glee Club.

„Tenors are our big need," McAdam said last night, "but we will welcome all with open arms." Auditions are being held today in the Music Room of Hart House between five and six p.m. "Our need is urgent," he added.

The Music Room is located on the 2nd floor of Hart House.

"Characters"

Do We Need More Of Them On This Campus?

These Say Yes

Do It Now

The President was quite right in advising the students to rise sometimes out of the ruts of uninteresting life to do something on their own, something which they think they ought to, and which perhaps no one else can do. There are some things that one should do before one sleeps. If you wait until tomorrow, caution begins to prevail and the characteristic action is left undone.

One should not deliberately develp character. It should come naturally, being an expression of one's natural self. It comes from independence of mind and resistance to compulsion to think as someone else demands. Characters are very often lonely men, for they avoid the mass-conception of enjoyment. You will not find them joining every club. They can find life themselves.

Characters are often not liked by those in authority for they will not be dragooned into obedience. Authority likes praise and obsequiousness. So a character may not expect much help from above. Many a character lives a poor man because he did not bow to authority.

My advice to the young is you may have. Let it develop. When practically everything one buys or sees is standardized by mass production, let your soul be your own even if your body suffers.

John Satterly
Prof. of Physics (retired)

Good Thing

I think that non-conformity is a good thing. Without characters, how could we have University presidents?

Harold Strom

Flora

Depends on what you mean by characters. If you mean independant, free-spoken, creative and critical thinkers, then we certainly haven't enough. Not nearly. But if you mean the blase, cultured, flora type, or Rah Rah Joe College, then we have an ample supply. Generally we are altogether too complacent, too uncritical, too content to mouth the ideas poured into us by professors who are too eager to make disciples. I think we are too "socially well-adjusted" to have the courage of independent critical thinkers. It is said that hunger and hardship sharpen the mind.

Conservative

Yes! Our modern society requires us either to conform or not to be accepted as one of the group. Today's motto is standartization of minds as well as machines. But, the so-called cranks of to-day are often the leaders of tomorrow. Henry Ford and Graham Bell were not men to blindly follow the fold.

Tedium

"Characters" are indispensable for the sake of progress and the relief of tedium. Without their refreshing quirks, alarming views, and dynamic personalities, life would be dull, stale and stagnant. Yes, I think we need more of them.

FORUM

Unite!

There seems to be no organized eccentricity on this campus at all. I haven't heard of one anarchist group. Why there isn't even a solid bloc of atheists! Dr. Smith was quite right when he said there weren't enough characters on this campus.

H. I. Kerpneck

Slaves

The true characters on this campus are all too few. Instead of developing and perfecting their own characters, most people who aspire to fame or notoriety on the campus are engaged merely in a slavish imitation of other characters.

Cadavers

Is there anybody normal on this campus would be a better question.

If we subtract from the student body the hundred or so that have ever worked for The Varsity, the two hundred or so that have ever read The Varsity and the many hundreds of eager types who spend their time organizing, dissolving, amalgamating NFCUS, IUS, SCM, SGL-IRPB, etc, we are left with just about a dozen cadavers down in the Anatomy building who have been out of college long enough to be considered normal.

Hal. Jackman

Camouflage

There are too many people on this campus trying so hard to be characters that if they have one, it doesn't show.

Shirley Pitts

Mixed-Up

No, no. There are too many characters on this campus and they are all two feet high and purple and they try to look innocent but they are plotting to catch me and reverse my spatiotemporal co-ordinates and if they do we will all be blown to the next world or beyond and I think they should see a psychiatrist.

The Cat

How Long?

As long as there is enough material to fill eight pages of The Varsity, there are enough characters on this campus.

Engrossed

In my opinion, a large percentage of the undergraduate body are too engrossed in working for their degrees to even bother about non-conformity. The freshmen are quite at sea in general, while the sophs are only just becoming orientated.

There are quite sufficient people on the campus who demonstrate their personalities in no uncertain manner. This is quite a good thing. But conformity suggests order, while non-conformity may lead to confusion instead of being simply self expression.

Neville Weston
II General

Enough!

If "characters" are the ones who stand out on all occasions as being those with the viewpoint subtly different but loudly proclaimed, then we certainly have enough. Some leaders urge us to dissent. They see the folly of the sheep's opinions and of habitual routine decisions. Opposition to popular thought is desirable and essential, but not just for the sake of argument. The students of this university have sufficiently varied backgrounds that nearly every possible viewpoint on any subject may be represented. Proper discussion and presentation of views by normal people should eliminate the need for characters.

Dick Hobson

Competition

There are definitely too many characters on this campus. In fact, the competition is killing. If people don't stop being characters, I shall revert to normalcy just to be different.

David P. Gauthier

A Rut

My first week's observation of Varsity students leads me to the conclusion that each is a character. There seems to be no central pride, loyalty, objective or ritual to which all subscribe. The inevitable result it that development or stagnation of the individual personality is carried rates and with infinitely different degrees of determination. rates and with infiitely differet degrees of determination. There is no "Varsity rut" and without one, a dangerous lack of characters would be impossible. I may be wrong, but first impressions indicate that a return to the 1920 spirit of being a character purely for the sake of being one would intensify rather than solve any of the university's problems.

F. E. Ross.

The Question

Today's Forum is the year's first of a regular Varsity feature initiated early last spring. Last year, such topics as communism among professors, drinking on the campus and leave regulations at women's college residences were bandied about by the cross-section of students and staff questioned.

In this issue, students were asked "Do you think there are enough 'characters' on this campus?" This seemed to be a timely topic in view of President Smith's recent address urging students to lose their fear of non-conformity and to dare to develop their own individuality. The Varsity wanted to see just how many of the students on this campus had ever thought about non-conformity, about what went to make up these so-called characters, if they thought they were a good thing or a bad thing, and more specifically if they thought the campus has, at present, an ample supply or needed to arouse more students from the sloth of apathy.

Our survey was hardly representative and it would be dangerous to draw conclusions. By and large, students seem to be fairly tolerant of the more rugged individualities that inhabit the Varsity campus, and feel that they are serving a purpose here. The number of students enthusiastic about importing more of the above mentioned to swell the ranks of "the characters" was slightly less. If we may be permitted to add our own comment, it would be to agree with those people who complain it will soon be necessary to be normal in order to be different. But a view such as this is based more on the colloquial interpretation of the term "Character."

The aim of the Forum page is not to arrive at solution for campus problems, but rather to see that different views on these problems are expressed and laid out in the open for criticism or approval as the case may be.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Every man and his dog would like to sit in the press box atop Varsity Stadium to watch the Blues and their visiting firemen play a bit of football. So a pass to the box becomes a pretty valuable place of paper. Almost anyone would give you a fin or three for a pass to the best seats in the house. Well we know one lad who actually was happy not to be accepting a pass to the press box. We are thinking of Bobby Dale, number 93 on the Blues half line.

Last year when we had the great job of covering the Blue games, Bobby would be sitting, sweating it out, in the next chair. His job with The Varsity's sportswriters was helping us keep the statistics on the game. At that time Bobby was suffering from a gimpy knee that was keeping him out of a game suit. That knee kept a pretty valuable little lad out of three Blues' games. He got back into action briefly in the Kingston game with the Gaels but the injury was aggravated in the final game of the season with Western. In the Queen's game Bob looked like he had the knee troubles beat but it was only temporary.

Bobby Dale

It was tough news for Bob Masterson when Dale turned up on the sick list. The year before in his freshman effort Bobby piled up a great record including three touchdowns against Queen's. Before coming to Varsity he played some great ball for Lawrence Park in the T.S.S.A.A.

So it was the best tonics when we saw him running last Saturday afternoon. And it was even better to see him finish the series of plays that started with his grabbing a Mustang fumble by going around right end standing up for a TD. We remembered those afternoons he sat beside us in the press box.

Bob isn't a big boy as running halfs go. He's only 5' 10" and weighs a mere 165 soaking wet. So it must hurt when a 200-pound tackle hits him. When we were talking to him at Blues practice last week we asked him if he would like to be sitting in the press gallery with us again this year. The answer was a big 'NO' and a big grin. Bobby was happy as a pig not to be.

Back Campus Busy With Football Practices

By FRED GRAY

With only three days of practice behind most teams coaches are almost without exception, unwilling to commit themselves, as to the success of their squads in the coming season. Therefore, scowls of disappointments or smiles of satisfaction become the best indication of their hopes for this year.

Jack McFarlane, working both loud and long with the two S.P.S. teams is fortunate in having Ted Lansky and Earl Ford of last year's Blues as his able assistant. The seniors will feel the loss of half-back Bob Ella and guard Howard Greenly through graduation and end Bill Bruce and guard Bob Naden for academic reaons. With not too much help in sight from last year's juniors as three of their stalwarts of last year, Rich Goliszewski, Ed Chorostecki and John Iglar are making a strong bid with the J.V.s, the seniors will be relying on Bruce Day at wing-back and Geo. Lewis at quarter from last year's seniors. The eligibility of Earl Ford and a hard working newcomer to inter-faculty football, Wally Jaremico at guard, seem to be the bright spots in the future for senior Skule.

With the juniors it is a little more difficult to predict. Unfortunately, John Shortt, who would have a tremendous power on the line in his second year with the team is out with a back injury, but the play of Marv Larsen, a Windsor boy, at quarter, with the running of backs Jim Moulton from Leaside and Art Burns from Etobicoke has been indicative of the team's possibilities. The juniors seem to lack weight and as with the seniors do not have an experienced center. The Skule teams plan to use the T offensively but it seems that a little more of the old Skule spirit among those at practice and physical support from the students would be their most effective play. Coach McFarlane has been disappointed with the spirit and support shown by the boys to date, but looks for improvement in the near future.

McMurtry, Haig Blues' Captains

Al Haig and Roy McMurtry, two of the oldest Varsity Blues in point of service, were chosen to act as co-captains of the team for this season at a special players' meeting last night. The two veterans were almost unanimous choices. They succeed Bruce Miles and Bill Bewley, who held the positions last season.

Haig is playing his fourth year in a Blue uniform while it's McMurtry's third season with the senior squad. Each is in his final year at Varsity, Haig at O.C.E. and McMurtry a fourth-year Modern History student at Trinity.

Haig, who has handled the kicking duties and played at flying wing during his four-year stay at Varsity, is one of the few married men on the team. He graduated last June in Physical Education. McMurtry, a 6'2", 205-pound tackle, came to Varsity in 1950 from St. Andrew's College, played one season with the intermediate team and moved up to senior competition in time to play with the 1951 intercollegiate champion seniors. Last year he was an all-star college guard but moved over to fill a vacancy at the tackle spot this fall.

Meanwhile, the Blues looked to be in good shape to open their intercollegiate schedule against Queen's here Saturday. Latest casualty is guard Frank Palermo who suffered a broken nose in practice Tuesday night. It won't keep him out of action Saturday, though.

Fred Smale, a regular end, broke his nose and cheekbone in the exhibition game against Balmy Beach two weeks ago and won't be able to work out for a while yet. Gene Chorostecki's sprained ankle is coming around and, while he'll miss Saturday's game, he'll be back to practice Monday and should be in shape for the trip to Western Oct. 10. Halfback Ross Woods will miss the Queen's game but will be back next week.

Sidelined for the season, of course, are Bob Kimoff, a fullback, and tackle John Bodrug who picked up a bad shoulder separation in the Western game last Saturday.

Several players were sent to the intermediate team Tuesday, too. Commented senior coach Bob Masterson, "We don't like to think of these boys as being cut but rather that they're being spread out. They're all good boys, show lots of promise and they'll have a chance to get more experience with the intermediates."

Bill Stevenson was sent down to join Harry Wilson on the Baby Blues' quarterbacking staff. This leaves the seniors with three QB's, Ollie Mandryk, Eddie Skrzypek, and Doug Geekie. Halfback Jack Rogers moves down along with centre John Chisholm, guard Neil Gamble and Bob McDonald, a tackle.

Steve All 'Round'—

You often read about the "all-round" student, the fellow who does everything well. Funny part is, you seldom get around to knowing one.

Steve Oneschuk, whose football prowess as a member of The Varsity Blues for the last three seasons has been shouted from the rooftops often enough, is one of these all-round chaps. A dark, soft-spoken fellow, Steve is still looking for something he can't do better than most people.

First of all, he's a natural athlete. There's not a football reporter in Eatern Canada who would deny that Steve is the best backfielder in college competition.

Though he's rather slight for football, packing 172 pounds on a 5 ft. 10 inches frame, he emerged as a star fullback in 1951, his first year at Varsity. He had been a standout the year before for collegiate team at St. Catherines, his home town, and was introduced to Toronto fans at the Red Feather tournament of 1950. In that freshman year at Varsity, Steve gained a total of 385 yards from scrimmage, an average of 6.4 per try. Last year, he was crippled with an injured knee but managed 169 yards, 5.8 per attempt in five games.

In 1951-52, he also earned his senior letter in basketball but gave up the sport last winter to

Women Shape Up In Softball

Practices began this week for women's softball and already things are looking well. To date we've seen some pretty snappy softball, which leads us to predict that the games will be well worth watching. Every day this week, the teams have been out at noon batting balls round the field with the sound of pop flies shattering the noon hour hum. They're working hard and are coming up with some really effective playing.

Pots begin their practices Thursday and St. Mike's have their first tryouts on Friday. Vic and U.C. both started swinging on Monday; turnouts have been [illegible] for them both. Vic lost to PHE I in in the finals last year. Joy Taylor of the Phys-eds says that their three teams are in as good shape as last year and so have high hopes of staying on top. We'll all be impressed by the smooth-running U.C. team. Under the management of Heather Chipman and coaching of Marv Siegal, U.C.'s lone team promises to provide some good active games. The Medswomen have produced a team this year. Previously they've joined in with Nursing in the softball leagues.

Although the schedule isn't out yet, we've been told that the games will start on Monday. Three games are played a day — two in Varsity Stadium, and the other on Trinity Field. And by the way, boys, here's your chance. Helen Saarinin reports that umpires are needed for these games. Perhaps you'll oblige?

Kick or Receive

Al Haig, 71, and Roy McMurtry, 31, are flipping a coin to see what end they will take when the Blues officially get things under way at Varsity Stadium on Saturday afternoon against the Queen's Golden Gaels.

Politics

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Politics should be important at a University. Students should be encouraged to show interest in the government, its deeds, and its failings, but must they be confronted with the name calling and the smear campaigns which are only too prevalent at elections. These things, which are intended for the mass electorate, just confuse the basic issues, and fill the student with disgust at politics, and the politicians who must lead this country.

give his bad knee a chance to mend from the surgery required. This season, he's in good health again as evidenced by last Saturday's game in which he pulled a few good runs and was outstanding on defence, at his new halfback position.

But to get back to that all-round business, Steve came to the Physical and Health Education course at Varsity with a record of five firsts in his upper school examinations, and followed that up by topping his class, something of an unusual feat for a football player. Last year, he slipped to third—most of us would be happy with thirtieth.

Steve moved into the executive field last year when he was elected as one of the student members of the Athletic Directorate.

As for the future, who knows? Most P.H.E. grads wind up in O.C.E. But, ever since Steve first began to bewilder the rest of the football league, Frank Clair and other pro coaches have been casting envious eyes Bob Masterson's way. When the Big Four teams hold their draft of college talent next winter, the stampede will be on.

Gray who is replacing Harry Daniels of last year, feels that inexperience will be his greatest worry. Missing are such last year standouts as Hugh McNeil, halfback, "Tiny" Thompson, guard, and Jim Louckes, quarter. Jim is back with Dents while the other two are grads. With an eager crew of freshmen sparked by halfs Pete Gordon from St. Andrews, Dave Smith from Royal Roads and quarterback John Whyte who graduated from U.T.S., steadied by such experienced players as Bill Sanderson at center, Mike Shoemaker at guard and Wally Kostui at running-half, John feels he has a crew worth rooting for.

The double blue of St. Mike's seems to have received a rather stiff blow from graduation. Gerry Fitzhenry, their outstanding quarter of last year along with Glen Thompson, and Bill McKenna, now with Balmy Beach, have been lost by this route. John Prentergast, now with the Blues, and Dave Winters, suffering from recurring headaches as a result of an injury received last season, are two notable backfield losses. Coach Jim Coghlan who was the captain and playing coach of last year has been very pleased by turnout and feels that there are many good prospects although it will definitely not be the 'eam of last year.

Chess Club Competition October 12

The Hart House chess club will hold its annual tournament again this year, starting October 12. The form of the competition will be the eight round Swiss system with each competitor playing one game a week, win or loose. At the end of the two month period, the competitor with the greatest number of points is declared the winner. The points are given on the basis of two for a win and one for a draw. The 1952 winner was Jack Kagetsu IV SPS.

All Varsity students, including women are eligible for the tournament. Entry can be made by signing the sheet posted in the Hart House chess club room or by contacting Dave Rostoker at HU. 9-1049.

HOW THEY DID IT

accusations, we should go on to see why the Liberals did win. The plain reason was that the people believed that the Liberal government had done a good job, on the whole, and that the Opposition parties had nothing to offer. And it is not difficult to understand that decision. The famed "Sixteen Points" were a hodgepodge of pipe-dreams and plain impossibilities, which promised more and asked for less, and were an outrage to the common sense of all but the dullest. The charges of corruption and extravagance were an even wilder excursion into the realm of fancy, an airy mansion flimsily constructed on the pitifully inadequate foundations of a few isolated thefts, and the stockpiling of items which would be speedily necessary in case of war, though now seemingly useless. The C.C.F. and Social Credit appealed mostly to radical district and special-interest groups, not to sensible, moderate-minded men.

In short, the Liverals won because they are the only truly national party, not chained to the interests of a section or a group, because they were doing a good job, and because there was no satisfactory alternative.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION

All new undergraduate students, all students taking part in organized athletics, any graduate or undergraduate whose home is not in Canada, and all other students for whom it is considered necessary, must have a medical examination by the Health Service. Regulations regarding times are as follows: First year students must make their appointments at once and should complete their examinations by October 15th. Other students, before October 15th, until their examinations are completed, may use their previous categories, providing they have had neither serious injury nor illness in the interim. Intramural athletes should report to Miss Boyd, Intramural Athletic Office, Hart House, for their medical appointments. Women students who wish to play basketball or baseball must make their appointments before the end of September. Women students of other years who wish a medical examination should make their appointments after November 1st, unless there is some immediate urgency. Appointments for examination must be made either by telephone or in person at 43 St. George Street. Telephone numbers are: for Men, MI. 9644; for Women, MI. 2646. If you are unable to keep your appointment, notify the Health Service in advance.

CHEST X-RAY

The Health Service, in co-operation with the National Sanatorium Association (Gage Institute), provides chest X-rays, which are compulsory for the following students: All new students, all final year students, all medical and nursing students, dental students in their first and last two years, and all students who do not live in Canada. Appointments for all male students not in Arts are made through their class presidents during the week of Sept. 28th. Arts students and all women students make their appointments during the same week at the Health Service, unless they have already done so previously. All other students and staff members may have a chest X-ray if they wish. They are urged by the Health Service to do so.

Squaring Off

Scarce Courage

Today The Varsity begins the "Forum" page. It's not a new idea but we think it has its part to play in stimulating thought and discussing important questions.

The Forum editor has chosen a question which people are coming to realize, is perhaps the most vital of modern society. President Smith made clear in his Convocation address the menace of the "insidious pressure" to conformity. The growing acceptance of mass standards in society is definitely alien to "the concept of liberty that we cherish."

What this world needs is more dissenters, more sceptics, more heretics and non-conformists. There are far too many who are complacent with things as they are, and who take a suspicious view of the innovator and the critic.

Such are the characteristics of immaturity, of smallness of mind and spirit.

The fear of being different or out of step with the majority is the paralysis of a country's progress. It is the ones not afraid to think for themselves and speak for themselves who are the valuable members of society.

The words of the President should be impressed on the minds of every student, here and across the country. "I am calling for an independence of mind, a critical spirit that can stand up against all the dreary platitudes and pallid inanities that assail us."

That is not to say there should not be some kind of cohesive and collective spirit to hold communities together. It is evident there must be some degree of conformity. But it is equally evident that this can, and is, being abused.

A downtown daily reports, editorially, that certain professors — not at Toronto — have been denied promotion because they voiced unpopular political opinions. This, while individuality is the very stuff that universities are made of.

It is far easier to talk of "characters" and non-conformity, than to be a non-conformist. The man with courage and something to say cannot be shut up, no matter how mad his superiors might get. But how scarce the courage is.

We need some re-thinking on a number of things including religion, politics and educational systems. We need people who will stand up against greed, selfishness, and systemization which masquerade in the guise of progress.

These things take a special sort of courage, but that courage is the difference between freedom and thought-control, mass conformity and human individuality. The contributions of the "character" to development, in any field, are precious.

This entire question is a problem. Not close to enough people have have thought about it, and it is to President Smith's credit that he has stressed it.

Non-conformists, arise!

An Open Letter

To The Chaplain

The writer takes particular exception to the recent statements by Hart House chaplain, the Rev. John Rowe, which appeared in a downtown daily.

Rev. John Rowe,
Chaplain,
Hart House,
University of Toronto.

Dear Mr. Rowe:

I note with surprise, sir, a statement credited to you in today's (Wednesday's) Telegram. It quotes you as saying that Toronto students "fail to integrate academic work, on the one nand, with lal other activity on the other," and as condemning Toronto for "the lack of discussion of academic and intellectual questions outside lecture halls."

I DON'T KNOW HOW much experience you have had discussing questions with Toronto students. And I ma sure you do not mean what the Telegram quotes you as saying. But I suggest the comment — as it is worded — falls into the same category as the oft-heard complaint about student apathy. Although both are a problem, neither complaint is really true.

I have not had the benefit of coming into contact with the Harvard system of education with which you compare Toronto. But to suggest that Toronto students do not discuss academic or "intellectual" (whatever this means) questions outside the lecture halls is not only unfair, it is ridciulous.

YOU CAN CALL TORONTO students many things, but never barbarians. Certainly there is as high a percentage of them who prefer to talk about subjects other than sex, sport and beer, as at any comparable North American university.

The problem often is to avoid people who want to discuss so-called intellectual subects. The campus crawls with these pseudo-intellectuals. The main trouble with them is that, outside of some bad verse, they rarely accomplish anything.

Furthermore, I have not yet left a stimulating lecture without hearing some of my classmates discussing the lecture's contents — often quite heatedly. Perhaps the fault lies, not in the students, but in the fact that so few lecturers at Toronto are stimulating.

IT IS POSSIBLE, sir, that you have not had suffciinet opportunity to overhear, or engage, in these discussions. The opening days of term are never a very calm period. But there are many opportunities during the year. This weekend, for example, a group of students and faculty are going to Caledon Hills farm — a Hart House property — to discuss a question which I think could be considered both academic and intellectual. This is an example of organized discussion far more common is the bull-session over a cup of coffee, or a glass of beer.

IT WOULD NOT BE very hard to present you with a long list of people with whom you could hold discussions on what (to avoid the word "intellectual") I will caller a higher plane.

BUT IT IS NOT necessary to consider individuals. Leaf through your handbook, sir, and you will find many clubs dedicated to academic pursuits beyond the classroom — the Political Science Club, the French Circle, the Russian Circle, the Modern History Club. Or take the Hart House theatre, the drama circles at the college level, Hart House debates, the music clubs and Arts and Letters Clubs, and you must papreciate that Toronto students really do have an opportunity and interest in "intellectual" activities, quite beyond the lecture halls.

I REALIZE THAT IT is hardly fair to open fire on you during your first week at the University, sir. But I feel that the problem is by no means a lack of intellectual and academic discussion among students. Nor is there any lack of organized facilities for channelling such discussion. If there is any lack, sir, I would suggest it lies in hte field of student-faculty relations, in the tendency fo so many lecturers to expound their views uninterrupted in the lecture hall, and in their failure to take part in the far more important discussions which go on at all times over the coffee cups and beer glasses.

Yours sincerely,
Tom Lane, Grad.

How They Did Do It

Editor,
The Varsity

In Wednesday's Varsity, there was an article signed by one "Ted Rogers", purporting to explain why the Liberal Party won the recent election. This magnificent work seems to me to require some answer, as it was composed chiefly of poppycock.

The instances which he alleges of election fraud should have been referred to the proper authorities for investigation; at any rate they do not constitute a damning conviction for nation-wide election malpractice, and by no means explain Lieveral success in perfectly correct contests.

Mr. Rogers charges the Liberals with glorification of their leaders. This is a charge which cannot, alas, be hurled at opposition parties, who have very few indeed worthy of any sort of glorification. For youth, strength, and efficiency, the Liberal cabinet will stand up to any in Canadian history, and it is a measure of Liberal superiority that they have men worthy of pride. One of these men, Louis St. Laurent, one of the great Canadians of our time, has come under the lash of Mr. Rogers would-be scorn. It is tru that Mr. St. Laurent's ordered, coherent and concise manner of address may seem autocratic to those who admire the pompous platitudes and vague meanderings of Mr. Drew. That amiable and handsome man, after stumbling through two crushing defeats, continues to give us an admirable lesson in how not to conduct an intelligent and successful opposition; his ineptitude was in no small measure responsible for the Liberal victory.

There is certainly a strain of impatience and reprehensible brusqueness in Mr. Howe's brilliant character. This is, however, much more than over-balanced by his extraordinary ability—ability with which, I fear, the "opposition parties are seldom embarrassed. At any rate, to say that he "directs" the Prime Minister is just one more piece of the Opposition "blather" which the people have twice refused to countenance.

Again, the charge that the election date was chosen purposely to disfranchise as many voters as possible rests entirely on the assumption that the people were profoundly anti-Liberal, an entirely groundless assumption.

Having answered Mr. Rogers'

Political Morality

The Editor,
The Varsity.

It seems that after every election, the swarm of political pundits converge on the scene and interpret the aftermath in terms of apathy, Uncle Santa Claus, and summer vacations. However it appears that Mr. Ted Rogers of Trinity has come out with an even more profound explanation as to why the Liberals returned 176 members to the Conservatives 51.

It appears, and Mr. Rogers claims it can be proved, that the tremendous Liberal majority is the result of supposed skulduggery of a handful of elected Toronto Liberal candidates.

Now I consider myself a Conservative, and I worked for the Conservative cause in the last election. The candidate I worked for did not get elected. I thought he was a good man and would be a better M.P. than his Liberal opponent. Personally I still think so but I am willing to accept the popular decision, for that is our democratic way.

It seems that our friend Mr. Rogers is not quite willing to accept mere democracy. Instead of taking the result, as a mature people's intelligent decision, he cries "thief" with about as much intelligence as the lowest possible type of ward-heeler. I think it about time that Mr. Rogers and his Varsity Conservatives known today as "Rogers' Rangers," put away their cap pistols and stop running around like juvenile delinquents self-righteously declaiming other people's political morality when word has it that some of "Rogers' Rangers" are not exacty paragons of political virtue themselves.

I would suggest that Mr. Rogers give facts to back up his accusations or else retire into the stone walls of Trinity and play guns with the cap and gown boys, and not inflict it rest of us with his childish exposes.

DEBATES ROOM PAINTING TO RETURN TO BRITAIN

Hart House has lost a painting. On Wednesday last the painting "British House of Commons In Debate" by Leopold Braun, was packed to be shipped to England. Since early April of 1951 it had overlooked the activities in the Hart House Debates Room.

Presented to the University by Captain A. W. Hughes, it is now returning to its point of origination. According to Capt. Hughes this huge canvas (six by eight feet) will be presented to the British House of Commons in the very near future by a well known American philanthropist.

Each figure on the canvas represents an actual member of Commons of 1914," explained Capt. Hughes. The depicted Debate is late in July 1914 when war was approaching. Actually the work had started in February as the artist made hundreds of sketches of the members trying to get them in the most lifelike poses possible.

Capt. Hughes added that the final painting caught each member in his characteristic attitude. Mr. Lloyd George's way of sitting with his arms folded across his chest with his head tilted slightly to the left was captured with remarkable clarity. On the front bench the then Right Honorable and now Sir Winston Churchill is seen listeneing intently to the speaker.

Besides the numerous sketches, there are approximately ninety original oil portrait sketches (twelve inches by twenty inches) actually made from life in the House of Commons. Leopold Braun was given permission to use the Old Petition Room in the House as a studio. Here he arranged to have all the members sit for him. Capt. Hughes added that all the letters arranging and cancelling appointments, and letters of permission to enter the House, form a most valuable collection. He feels that this collection is of probably greater historical interest than any other modern work in the British Empire.

"A unique problem over the painting arose as war approached," Capt. Hughes explained. An alien was in the midst of the British war debates. Braun, an Austrian, was quietly ushered out of the country to France from where he found his way to California. It was here he completed his painting after two years of work. In 1916 The Debate was hung at the Panama-California Exposition. Capt. Hughes purchased it there and brought it to Canada to hang in his home until two years ago.

The picture was commended highly for its historical significance. Such men as Theodore Rousseau, Curator of Pictures, Metropolitan Art Gallery in New York, James F. Jack, Ministry of Works, London, England and Gerrard Brett, Director of The Royal Ontario Museum of Archaeology, lend their voices to this statement.

Though Hart House loses a piece of British history, England gains it. Thanks to Capt. Hughes it has been preserved for 37 years in good condition.

Problem Of Population Stressed By Student Back From India Trip

In his tour of India on the seminar, Dr. John Hastings, one of the Toronto representatives declared he was most struck by the evident problem of population. Speaking to the International Relations Club at Hart House yesterday he said, "Everywhere we went we saw people, except in the desert." Feeding this huge population is the greatest problem in India today, he felt.

"We take a lot of things for granted — such as water," he said. "I was never before aware of the value of water and grass." Some areas the students saw had had insufficient rain for four or five years. Dr. Hastings said all this made one realize the magnitude of the problems, and how small the Colombo Plan is in comparison to the needs of these Asian countries.

"India has been a colonial state for 200 years, and even the best countries do not govern their colonies as they do themselves," said Lewis Perinbam, assistant secretary of World University Service in Toronto. "They always put their own interests first," he said.

He felt that students must now look for new ways of solving problems imposed by a system for which they are not responsible.

Perinbam said that the Indian University students are "preoccupied with the more urgent problems of subsistance and survival." It was found that there were very few of them and that employment after graduation was their big problem. Twenty per cent of the doctors, 30 per cent of the engineers, and an even larger percentage of Arts graduates were unemployed.

When questioned, Dr. Hastings explained that 20 per cent of the graduate doctors remained unemployed because they were unable to pay for the drugs and instru-

POT Students Selling Bloops This Saturday

Bloops are back—they will go on sale at tomorrow's game, announced John McKellar, III UC, Blue and White Society's Publicity chairman, yesterday. The Blue and White had originally intended to purchase ribbons with badges but these could not have been sold at any lower rates than those of the regular street hawkers.

Ever since the university bloops, those bi-coloured beanies, were introduced three years ago they have been very popular and have become a real campus fixture. Various colleges have since copied the bloop idea and sold them in their different college colours.

This year the Blue and White Society has been able to purchase 1000 of these U of T bloops which will be sold by a bevy of beautiful POT girls around the stadium tomorrow commencing at about one hour before game time. These will be available on a first come first serve basis at the modest and reasonable" charge of 35 cents it was announced.

Children Of Veterans Paid D V A Allowance

A new Education Assistance Act, effective July 1st, 1953, will assist the sons and daughters of certain deceased members of the Armed Forces in financing higher education. Mr. A. E. Hounsom, Supervisor of Training Services for the Toronto District, Department of Veteran Affairs, states that it is "a wonderful scheme to try to provide for young men and women what their fathers might have provided had they lived."

Under the Act, DVA will pay an allowance of $25.00 per month directly to the student and finance his tuition fees for four years, providing he or she is eligible under all of the following conditions. It is designed for students at any institution of education for which the minimum entrance requirement is Grade XII. Student must be the son or daughter of a man whose life was lost as a result of service in World War I, World War II or the Korean operations. It is necessary that the student's mother has been receiving, or should have been receiving, an allowance from the Canadian Pension Commission on his or her behalf.

Such students will receive assistance for a maximum of four years, or until the end of the academic year during which they become twenty-five years of age. It is necessary that the student have some definite occupational objective and that his progress be satisfactory.

Mr. Hounsom feels that although various scholarships have been offered by the Legion and other organizations, this is something that is theirs by right, and something the Government is glad to give to eligible students." One of his regrets is that this plan, under study for three years, was not put into effect sooner.

At this date twenty-one men and sixteen women in Toronto are being assisted by the EAA. Twenty-one of these are studying at the University of Toronto, and they come from various towns and cities throughout Ontario. Mr. Hounsom expects that the scheme will reach its peak between 1956-62, and that by December of this year 60 students in the Toronto area will be benefitting from DVA assistance under the new Act.

Mr. A. E. Hounson is responsible for the administration of the Education Assistance Act in this District and he would welcome inquiries from students, faculty advisors, and any others who may know of eligible students. He can be contacted at the Department of Veterans Affairs office, 55 York Street, Toronto, phone Empire 3-8641, local 215.

Chest Ex-Rays

TB or not TB

Chest X-rays for students will begin about the middle of October and, as in former years, is sponsored by the UHS in co-operation with the Gage Institute. The UHS, in case you don't know, is the University Health Service, which provides medical attention for all students. Besides the Chest X-ray service the UHS also provides an infirmary and the Hart House surgery.

Dr. Wodehouse, at the health centre explained the UHS provides a doctoring service for the University with the student's needs always in mind. The centre fulfils two functions; first, to see if the student is physicall fit to continue in the University and, second, if the student is not fit, to inform his family physician and provide then, treatment. The general health of the students entering this university is very good, Dr. Wodehouse declared, 97 percent being fit for general athletic activities.

Seven cases of T.B. were detected last year through the free X-ray service and the other facets of the UHS and in Dr. Wodehouse's opinion this warrants the service. A chest X-ray is compulsory in the first year and in the last year at the University. Last year approximately 6000 students availed themselves of this opportunity, while 11,747 visits were paid to the Health Service itself.

Services at the clinic are free except for expensive drugs, house calls, and the infirmary, and even here the expenses are very cheap. The infirmary charge is $3.00 a day and this includes meals, regular nurses and attendants. Incidentally, the infirmary is co-educational, student with the best of care.

The Hart House surgery provides free care to students injured in sports ranging from ping-pong to football. It also is free and there are in attendance during hours an orthopedic surgeon and an X-ray technician. (Ping-pong, how could he???)

With regard to sports, every one taking part in any semi-organized sport must have a physical examination. This is very important. While it has not yet happened, Dr. Wodehouse cautioned, a team could be disqualified if its members do not fulfil the requirements set by the UHS (who have the close co-operation of the Athletic department) or, if a student is injured before he has his physical the University does not necessarily have to accept all responsibility in the way of payments for treatment.

There is always at least one doctor available during the day at the UHS at 43 St. George and after hours a doctor can be found at any of the numbers listed in the student's directory.

Gotham Trip For U N Club

Plans for the annual trip to New York for the UN Club were introduced yesterday at an organization meeting of the club in Falconer Hall. The trip, scheduled for Nov. 12-15, was outlined by Marg. Munnoch, II Trinity.

Other highlights of the fall agenda will be the UN dance at the UC Women's Union, Oct. 22, and the Caledon week-end of Oct. 30th.

President Dave Turnbull, IV SPS(?), spoke to the group about a programme of speakers and announced that Dr. Marvin Gelber will address the club next Thursday at the UC Women's Union. Tentative plans were laid for a UN float in the Homecoming Week-end parade.

Equality Beats Inequality, Prof. Underhill Tells CCF

"A society of equals and a society of brothers is far superior to a society of unequals, and it is the only morally tolerable society," said Professor Underhill at the inauguration meeting of the University College CCF Club held in Room 4 of UC yesterday.

Before a capacity audience he outlined the economic, political, and moral case for socialism. Professor Underhill explained the recent defeats of socialist governments and the poor showing of the CCF in the last election as due to the prosperity enjoyed by most peoples and that capitalist governments have been adopting the socialist platform at a rate sufficient to maintain the confidence of the electorate.

He also pointed out that trade unions had established a more favorable balance of power in their fight with big business, thus reducing the power of the large monopolies and thereby creating a much more uniform society.

Commenting on the increased cost of university education, Professor Underhill called for more government assistance to needy students, similar to the systems used in some European countries.

McGill SAC Shows Profit

Montreal, September 30—CUP Students' Society operations showed a profit of $7,308 at McGill last year, the Secretary Treasurer of the Students Executive Council Mr. Ralph Shackell announced.

As of June 1953 the SS had a surplus of $31,23, with an additional $10,000 reserved for emergencies, Mr. Shackell continued.

The profit came from greater profits from the Grillroom and Cafeteria, and other factors. It was within $25 of that budgeted, Mr. Shackell concluded.

Must Fill 15 Lines In 2 Mins.

Once in awhile their are so called holes in the paper, which have to be filled up. This is one of them. Write about anything! Write about the lights. (They went out once tonight, that's all there is to write about.)

Well, write about anything! Write about the misery we are in! Misery? Why? Because there is not a darned thing to write about! Such is the plight of the make-up people! But how on earth can you fill fifteen lines in one minute? This is how!

SCM Duo To Share In Office

The Student Christian Movement has appointed John and Ruth McRae as associate secretaries. They were the Canadian representatives at the World Conference of Christian youth in Kottayam, and at two conferences of the World Student Christian Federation in Madras and Poona.

At these conferences they discussed such problems as peace and war, social justice and the meaning of Christianity. They visited parish churches around Kottayam.

A full program of discussion groups has been mapped out for the coming year. Some topics for Creation," The World Struggle", and Communion and Inter Communion."

B-W Society Planning Ball On Sixteenth

The Blue and White Society yesterday announced that it will present its regular Saturday dance in the Royal York Ballroom on October 16th. The UC Centennial dance is being held in Hart House that night.

"If 350 tickets of the 600 available for this dance are sold next week, the B and W Society will arrange to hold the dance in a larger Hall" John McKellar, Publicity Chairman of the B and W said yesterday.

The Late AVR

Here we have a scene from last year's All-Varsity Revue, this year without a leader. The camera at the right assured the AVR of finishing in the black and also gave the actors a chance to show interested people in the city their talent. This year the AVR, after a stormy six-year existence will pass away because of a lack of leadership. —Varsity Staff Photo

Director Lacking, AVR Called Off

The Students' Administrative Council will not sponsor a campus show presented by members of all faculties this year as it has done for the past two years. The SAC decided against continuing the All Varsity Revue at its last meeting of last year, and the minutes of that meeting were passed without comment at the SAC's meeting last Wednesday night.

"The AVR is a very great financial risk," said E. A. MacDonald yesterday, "and it is thus essential that the director and producer put on a good show as they must draw a good house". It was felt by last year's Council that no suitable directors applied for the job, and so the risk was too great to undertake the presentation of the show this year.

Two directors were considered but the Council turned down the AVR Committee's recommendation that these two be accepted. It was felt that the administrative ability of the senior man was not sufficient and that the other, a first year student, had not had sufficient experience for such an undertaking. Mr. MacDonald stated that Mr. Robert Gill and Mr. James Hozack of Hart House had expressed an opinion at the time of discussion that the two directors recommended by the committee were capable.

Bruce Snell, AVR director felt that to drop the AVR after the success of last year would be disastrous. Bob Sutherland's opinion was that if the students of the university really were behind an AVR they would make their feelings felt and this year's Council could undertake the production. Last year's Council was forced to make a decision since Hart House Theatre must be reserved the year preceding the performance.

The opinion was expressed during the discussion at the meeting that the AVR should not be discontinued as it provides a vehicle for the talents of the members of some of the faculties and schools that are unable to produce their own shows. It was suggested that if some of the other campus shows were discontinued the financial gamble involved in producing the AVR would be reduced. J. D. Mollenhauer, the rep. from Engineering immediately refused to withdraw Skule Nite.

He went on to state that the show should continue for the student's sake. Jack Love, AVR Committee Chairman last year, said that only two directors had presented themselves — that the Council was forced to take them or discontinue the AVR.

Paul Lorch, St. Mike's SAC rep., said at last Wednesday's meeting that he felt it unfortunate that the stadium show should be discontinued the same year as the AVR. The complications of the technical production of such a stadium show, again—the absence of a suitable director, and the fact that the financial risk of a stadium show is very high (last year's was the first successful one for four years) had made him decide to recommend that the Council drop it.

Both recommendations that shows be dropped were partly based on the opinion that the successes of last year's shows could be attributed to the importation of professionals. Don Harron appeared in the Stadium Show and the Lunds did the choreography for the Revue. It was felt that such importation is not in the spirit of campus shows.

Masthead

The regular meeting of the Masthead, scheduled for today, has been cancelled. It will be held instead on Monday at 5:00 o'clock. All members are requested to attend this important meeting.

Female Frolics

Science Snares Co-Eds

There is is, none the worse for a summer in the boiler room, the trusty thought machine. Thought for a moment some artsman would have absconded with it in the vain hope that it might be a portable still, but here it is, as safe as the Argo furture of Knobby Wirkowski.

Now out to the stree in front of the Mechanical building and the solving of the most involved of all these here now academic problems. Just why do women students march back and forth in front of a hundred engineers who are only trying to enjoy a smoke and not trying to qualify as judges for the Miss America CONTEST. Yeah, there she is, that balck sweater, the grey skirt, the black sweater, the brown shoes, the black sweater, the white sox, the black sweater and the black sweater. The least she could do is walk sideways. We'll just turn the tought machine on her here and see what her reactions are to the cacaphonious reception.

Engineers, phooy, what a bunch of dopes: They all troop out here during breaks just to oogle the girls who walk by on purely innocent errands like going to the store for a flint for daddy's lighter. I know there are other stores I could go to without walking twelve blocks out of my way, and I guess I could go some other time than between classes as I only have eight spares today, but anyway I like to parade in front of those phony engineers. They all stand here and pretend or those barber pole survey sticks. But actually the discuss the KCR and women and the farthest they reach into culture is the nude paintings in the museum. The machine buzzed loudly. The thing that really gets me is when they hoot an holler those innane remarks of theirs, all I have to do is drop my head and the brave lads figure they have won a valiant victory. Victory sure! The future leaders of our ruddy technical world, and when a gilr walks by they are all struck so dumb, and I mean intelligent dumb, cause they sure can yell, they forget all their education and would'nt know Newton's laws of motion from a mixmaster motor.

Lights flashed on an off like a Christmas tree and a loose fuse—Well their prisoner's ten minutes are up and they all troop back in to soak up some more formulas and fascinating facts like the changing of frequency. Who cares about the wretched frequency as long as the television set works. I think I'll get a cup of coffee in the drugstore. After all it is only one hour until they come out again."

Slightly stunned, we turned off the machine and headed back into the scratch of chalk, rustle of papers, and drone of voices which proclaims the start of another lecture. Suddenly there arose the thought that the whole meaning of what the lassie had said was contained in her last sentence. We don't like to argue with women, and perhaps it is a hideous experience to walk past the mechanical buildings at break time, but as any civil engineer can tell you, girls, there are two sides to every street.

Chairman Last Year, Re-Elected

Gordon Gwynne-Timothy was unanimously chosen chairman of the Students' Administrative Council at last Wednesday's SAC meeting. Gwynne-Timothy, who was president of the SAC in 148-49,was unanimously chosen SAC chairman last year after his return from the University of Cambridge in England. He was there on the Beaver Scholarship and is now at Osgoode Hall.

During his presidency Gwynne-Timothy earned the reputation of being one of the most "dynamic and influential undergraduates" ever to attend the University.

As president of the SAC Gwynne-Timothy was strongly in favour of a student union. In 1948, as representative of the SAC he went to the University of Wisconsin to examine their method of financing student union activities and the relation between the governing body of the union and the students.

Gwynne-Timothy also worked on a plan for the formation of the Working Committee for the Proposed Student War Memorial building.

University Settlement Calls For Volunteers

Students need more than "book learning" to understand the confusing entity called life. The University Settlement at present in two buildings on Grange road but planning expansion meets that need. Mr. William Lawson, Program Director, said yesterday that the Settlement's more than 2,000 children and adult members comprising more than 30 nationalities, provides an opportunity for insight into social service.

The program is carried on under a board of University men having Dr. Smith as honorary president, a small permanent staff and a number of volunteers, mainly from the university. Miss Kathleen Gorrie, the Administrator, said the need for volunteers is urgent in fields such as nursery school, music school, boys' clubs of all ages, arts and crafts, cooking and sewing.

The Settlement also runs a summer camp at Gull Lake near Gravenhurst, for which a tag day last fall helped build a new dining and recreation building. Plans are under way for another of these soon.

The call is out. Students interested in meeting, teaching and learning from the most cosmopolitan group in Canada should call Mr. Lawson at EM-8-4335. This is the University of Toronto's one definite social work project. Why not help the crowded people of this once fashionable district and continue what the university's late president Sir Robert Faulkner started in 1910?

McGill Will Admit Cars Of Students

Montreal, September 30 — CUP — This year McGill students will be able to drive their cars to school and park them in the University parking lots. Ninety-nine student parking permits will be issued. Last year there were over 5,000 students registered at McGill.

Student parking on the campus was not permitted at all last year. It was felt that in case of a fire on the campus student cars would interfere with the fire engines.

Priority for these permits is based on sickness incapacity or injury of the driver; distance from the University; and number of students dependent on the driver for a ride.

Cheerleaders Will Perform During Football Game

The new Blue and White cheerleaders have been chosen and will appear at the game tomorrow, John McKellar, Blue and White Publicity Chairman announced. This year the cartwheel crew consists of four previous Blue and White cheerleaders: Anne Taylor, Deanne Connacher, Gail Lowther and Jean McNeill, and four new girls, Mary Jane Champ, Marnie Littlejohn, Abbie Mulholland and Ann Johnston. Shirley Eckel will again be parading in front of the band this year.

After the game there will be the usual tea-dance at the Drill Hall and Saturday evening the first Blue and White Football Dance is taking place.

A few tickets for this dance are still available at the SAC office, the Engineering offices and at Hart House from 12 to 2 today.

Employment Outlook Good For Students, Graduates

Hamilton, Sept. 25 — (CUP) — By the end of July only 2 per cent of the class of 1953 were looking for jobs the Hon. Milton F. Gregg, Minister of Labour announced recently. The class of 1953 was somewhat smaller than that of 1952, and business conditions were excellent, he explained.

As in past years, there were some university faculties where there were not enough graduates to meet the demand. The deficiency of graduates was most severe in the engineering faculties.

Mr. Gregg pointed out that he had noticed an increasing trend on the part of employers to hire second and third year students with a view to giving them permanent employment when they graduated.

Canadian employers are visiting the universities in search of university trained personnel as early as November, with follow-up visits later in the year. This is largely a result of the Dept. of Labour's current campaign to find jobs for university students.

The employment campaign was a three-way effort on the part of the employers, universities, and the Executive and Professional Division of the National Employment Service.

Practically all the 42,000 university graduates found dummer employment of one kind or another, Mr. Gregg said.

New Floats To Stress One Theme

"Many people have complained in the past about toilet seats parading up and down the main streets of Toronto." This is one of reasons why this year's Homecoming Weekend will not be an excuse for a "mobilized toilet-paper fight." The Blue and White's newfound urge to purge was explained yesterday by John McKellar, official spokesman for the Society.

"There are three main reasons why the Society has decided to have one theme for all the entrants in the Float Parade," he said. "(a) We do not wish Bloor Street to be resurfaced with the trash distributed by floats. We don't want toilet paper pranks. (b) We wanted to give the other colleges, faculties and schools a chance against the Course of Art and Archeology (c) This arrangement will give the Arts colleges a better chance to compete with the professional faculties and schools," he said.

It has been found in past years that the Arts colleges have run into difficulties in choosing a theme for their floats since they cannot portray scenes similar to those that the other groups use. U. C. as presented its "UC Follies". Victoria its Student Union." The Blue and White chose the theme "Pioneer Spirit" in preference to "The Fairy Tales." It was felt that the latter would be too similar to the large parade staged by a Downtown concern. The Parade will be the second largest of its kind in the city.

McKellar also announced that this year's B and W plans will work well into the Spring. The B and W will arrange to have dances after the Varsity hockey games. Only one of these was held last year.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Cruel Sea

Nicholas Monsarrat's novel of last year, "The Cruel Sea," has been filmed in England by Charles Frend, the respected director of documentaries, and the result is now playing at the Odeon Toronto theatre. Frend's best known films to date are "The Foreman Went To France (1942), "San Demetrio London" (1943), and "Scott of the Antarctic" (1948), all films about men living under great hardship, made with a realism, and, in the case of "Scott of the Antarctic," an insight which are out of the ordinary.

Monsarrat's novel follows the wartime career of Ericson, a corvette captain of the Western Approaches command, his relationship with his ships, his men, and the other major character in the book, the first lieutenant Lockhart. In attempting to absorb and present the rambling yet incisive-air of the novel, director Frend has begun a patently impossible task. The book's presentation of character and incident is emphatically and brilliantly literary, and defies translation to film form, where complex narration must be sacrificed for visual incisiveness.

The film of "The Cruel Sea," therefore, is little more than a simplified visual presentation of some of the book's incidents. How successful it would be in the eyes of someone who hadn't read the book, I couldn't say. To someone who has, the comprehensive strategical grasp of the Atlantic defences throughout the war is absent, and thus also the swell of urgency and repose which the author conveys in describing it.

One thing the film succeeds in implying as effectively as the novel: the attitude of the men involved to the war. "At the beginning," says Ericson in 1944, "there was time for all sorts of things — making allowances for people, and joking, and treating people like sensitive human beings, and wondering whether they were happy, and whether they liked you or not. But now the war doesn't seem to be a matter of men any more, —it's just weapons, and toughness. There's no margin for humanity left."

The hard realism of the camera-work, the subtle, yet uncomplicated direction of the actors, and the superb performances of Jack Hawkins as Ericson and Donald Sinden, as Lockhart, all make "The Cruel Sea," viewed as a film alone, a very superior work. Special mention must be given Alan Rawthorne's sweeping, yet never oppressive score, which is, with the sole exception of Vaughan Williams' music for "Scott of the Antarctic," the best film music I have ever heard.

Germaine Clinton.

The Callboard

The drama groups seem to be the most active part of Toronto's entertainment world this year. One entirely new group has been formed, and another, The New Play Society, revived after two year's absence. Jupiter Theatre will reach the Royal Alexandra with three of its plays, after not quite getting there with The Lady's Not For Burning last year.

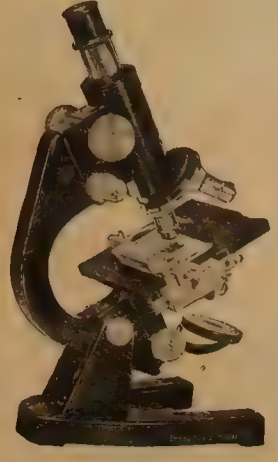
The New Play Society began their season with a performance of Mistress of Jalna now in its second week at the Museum Theatre. Later in the year they will do Fry's Venus Observed; Duet For Two Hands, by Mary Hayley Bell; The Play's The Thing, by Molnar; and Sean O'Casey's The Silver Tassie.

Jupiter is staging Ring Around the Moon at the Royal Alex, starting on October 19th. Later in the year they will do Hamlet and another play there. Their other plays will be performed in the remodelled theatre at Ryerson, which is supposed to be built along the lines of the one at Melody Fair. Ibsen's Peer Gynt will be put on there, and a play by Lister Sinclair.

Hart House theatre, under the direction of Robert Gill, will perform Antigone, a modern version of Sophocles' play by Anouihl in October, and The Male Animal, The Wild Duck, and The Merchant of Venice later in the year. The plans of most of the campus drama groups are still in the organisation stage, but it has been decided that Trinity and Vic will unite for their three-act play, under the direction of Herbert Whittaker, late in the fall.

The Royal Alexandra itself seems to have the best program lined up that it's had for years, in spite of getting off to a slow start with Maid of the Ozarks. Besides the three Jupiter plays, Misalliance, the Shaw comedy that Hart House isn't doing after all, will come in November. An Evening With Beatrice Lillie, and the Salzburg Marionettes will also arrive before Christmas. Pal Joey is coming in January, and there will be two ballet companies later in the winter; The National Ballet, and the Ballet de Paris.

When it comes to the musical season the programs look much the same as they have for years in the past. On the campus, there will as usual be a series of Sunday Evening Concerts in the Great Hall of Hart House but programs are still indefinite. The first of these concerts will feature the Royal Conservatory Opera in a performance of Menotti's The Old Maid and the Thief. St. Mary Magdalene Singers will give a concert in December.



The Symphony Series will begin with a concert featuring Mieczislaw Horszowski in a performance of Beethoven's 4th piano concerto. Later in the season there will be a performance of a Bartok piano concerto by Paul Badura-Skoda, who made his North American debut in Toronto last year, as well as a return appearance of Leopold Stokowski as guest conductor.

Plans for the opera season at the Royal Alexandra include performances of four operas —Rigoletto, La Boheme, The School for Fathers by Wolf-Ferrari) and a repeat of The Consul. The Royal Conservatory will put on a special series of concerts in their concert hall, starting next Thursday with a recital by the Dutch cellist Max Orobio de Castro.

Finally as always in this city there will be a generous sprinkling of single concerts by famous and not-so-famous musicians, at Eaton Auditorium and at Massey Hall Anyone who wants an evening of music at any time during the winter season has only to look at the ads in the daily papers — there is a wealth of music available almost any week of the season.

TRACK BLUES GET STAR

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Well, tomorrow afternoon the Blues officially open the season around these parts by playing host to the Queen's Golden Gaels. You might know that the season was about to take the big leap by the Blues' sick list.

Palermo

As you will find it in the advance to the game on this page, the list looks somewhat like the city morgue's listing of the casualties from a weekend in Toronto. Actually it's only a normal state of affairs. Usually the Blues seem to pile up the the sick bay long before the season gets under way. Sometime coach Bob Masterson will enjoy sending out a staff similar to the roster that invades the training camp early in the fall.

Seriously, the Blues will miss Frank Palermo, Gene Chorestecki and Fred Smale The lad we really feel sorry for is Doug Geekie. Last weekend Geek looked pretty good, certainly as a serious contender for the QB job look. Just when he was getting his chance to show his stuff he gets knee troubles that could keep him out of action tomorrow. That's life.

Geek

The lad we think most people will be watching is Jack Roberts, the all-star half of last year's edition of Frank Tindall's Gaels. goes at both offensive and defensive half. Pete Cranston will probably look good at the pivot spot.

Hamilton also gets the season underway for their Marauders. McMaster will play the Mustangs for their Marauders. McMaster will play the Mustangs at Civic Stadium. That should be an interesting session judging from some statistics we received from Montreal this week on last Saturday's McMaster-Redman game. Little Joe Kosakowski tossed the ball 33 times and completed 19. t looks like the Mighty Mite is shapping up to be the Quarterback of the year.

It would be good to see how he stacks up against Western's Don Getty. Actually there is nothing wrong with Getty's passing that a couple of good pass receivers wouldn't cure.

We see that One-eyed Benny picks Toronto and McMaster. We'll buy that.

Williams Refuses Scholarships To Run Hurdles For Varsity

By JIM PROUDFOOT

If Varsity's track coach, Hall Brown, had just won the Irish Sweepstakes last night, he couldn't have been any happier. He was reporting that his squad had just acquired the services of Norm Williams, considered by many the best junior track prospect in Canada.

Williams, who holds the Canadian record for the 120 and 220-yard hurdles and holds the Ontario championship at each distance as well as the Toronto secondary school titles, turned his back on several lucrative offers from American universities to come to the U. of T. He had started the school year at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., but, finding conditions unsatisfactory, returned to Toronto to enrol in the Commerce and Finance course.

After leading North Toronto Collegiate's track crew last spring, Williams embarked on a highly succesful season with the Toronto Track and Field Club. Although he passed up the Canadian championships, he won the Ontario 120 and 220 titles and wound up with two Canadian junior records. His time of 14 seconds even in the junior 120-yard high hurdles equals the dominion mark and he has also done 13.6 to set an Ontario record. He equalled the dominion record in the 220-yard low hurdles during the summer as well.

Besides the acquisition of Williams, Brown mentioned that Bob Hamilton's eligibility for inter-collegiate track competion had been established. There had been some wuestion about the status of Hamilton, who last year won the Chancellor Cody Trophy as the athlete scoring the most points in intramural competition. Hamilton, along with Williams and Dick Harding, the 220 and 440 specialist, gives the Blues a strong nucleus of top runners.,

With Don McEwen, the University of Michigan runner, giving the trackseers the benefit of the savvy he picked up in winning the United States two-mile championship the past two seasons, and considering the acquisition of such bright lights in the track world, head coach Brown is feeling optimistic about the fourthcoming trip to Montreal for the intercollegiate track and field games.

Queen's Floating On Beach Win

Ever since the Queen's University Golden Gaels whipped Toronto Balmy Beach 20-10 in an exhibition game at Kingston last Saturday, intercollegiate football fans have been wondering: are the Golden Gaels that good? They'll get their answer tomorrow afternoon at Varsity Stadium when the Tricolor will be the guests of the Blues in the local opener of the college season.

Although they were hurt by graduation and examinations, the Gaels have a strong nucleus of veterans back from last season's team plus a number of rookies brought up from the intermediate team and elsewhere. Notable among the grads who'll be missing is quarterback Don Griffin but coach Frank Tindall seems to have come up with an adequate replacement in veteran Pete Cranson. Other backfield absentees are Ken Atwood, Jack Sisson and Bill Gatfield with linemen like end Tony Arnoldi and centre Stu. Kennedy departed for pro. football. Also gone is kicker Brian Timmis Jr. who will be supplanted in the hoofing department by Frank Gerard, an intermediate last year. Also back are halves Jack Roberts, Pete Zarry and Doug. Bell.

Two newcomers who have looked very good in the Queen's camp so far are backfielder Greg. McKelvey who moves up from the Gael farmhands and Gary Schreider, who starred with the St. Michael's high school squad last year.

The Varsity Blues, fresh from their 11-1 conquest of Western last week are hoping to do a repeat performance of their home game with Queen's last year which they won 13-1. It was in that game here, almost a year ago, that Steve Oneschuk suffered the knee injury which hampered him the rest of the year and necessitated an operation last winter.

We're expecting a tough game", Blues' coach Bob Masterson said yesterday. "Queen's seem to save their best game for us so, after that win over the Beach last week, it'll be a toss-up."

Masterson also reported a

Look, No Coach!

With memories of their triumphant march to the Mulock Cup four years ago fading rapidly into the football past this years edition of the Forestry football squad, affectionately known as the Woodchoppers" by those who have played across the line from them, may be seen any night on the back campus, alternately throwing themselves violently on the ground and gazing fondly at Whitney Hall.

Having an enrollment of less than 125, Forestry is unable to compete financially with the larger Faculties and Colleges for a suitable coach. Undoubtedly, the team will miss the ground gaining line smashes of "Boomer" Booth, a grad, but should be compensated by the return of Ed. Marcus, out most of last year with an ankle injury. Probably the fastest back in interfaculty ball he will be a tough man to stop. With the bulk of last year's team back headed by their hard playing line with such stalwards as Bob Burgar and Bing" Crosby, the boys look good. If able to solve the coaching problem watch for the Green and White to move out of the slump of the two previous seasons.

Interfaculty Groups Set

A new look has been adopted by the intramural football schedule of 1953. In a meeting Thursday afternoon the athletic committee came up with two groupings which replace the unbalanced sections of '52. Vic, U.C., Meds. and S.P.S. form Group I while Group II lists St. Mikes, Trinity, Forestry and Dents.

Significance should be made of the amalgamation of Jr. and Sr. S.P.S. Since both teams were usually a power in the league, the present innovation should make Skule loom as a double threat when the mayhem begins Thursday, Oct. 15.

Judging by the authority of the practise tackling on back campus this should shape up as a great season of solid football. Get out and support your boys.

Ladies At Work!

Up to now the sporting ladies busying themselves with practices and trials for the roaring season ahead, of the Toronto campus have been

The four big things on schedule right now are swimming, archery, tennis and particularly baseball (no, not the world series). Swim practises for both interfaculty and intercol meets began on Monday with a turnout of about 38 water-babies. Apparently some of the girls were misled by a recent article which indicated that only five practices were required for those on the intercol squad. Who's kidding who? Five is the required minimum for interfac, so intercol hopefuls had better get out there right now and begin training.

Archery started operating on Monday as well with practises for intercol hopefuls. The Toronto squad which came second last year in the big meet is designing to make up for that this month when the scheduled shoot gets going. Practises are held Mondays from 12 to 2 and Wednesday from one to 2 in the stadium and placings are still available.

By next Friday, the colleges will have selected the four tennis fiends to represent them in the semi-final matches. Right now the gals are seen on the courts any time of day battling for a spot in the semis. Nothing of great import to note yet.

The biggest and greatest of the ladies' early season sports around these parts is softball. Practises for the Fall duel began this week and the schedule is carded to open next week. Games will be matched at both Trinity field and the Stadium every noon hour and should provide some pretty gay entertainment.

Benny Sez

One-eyed Benny dropped in yesterday to apologize for the hassle he made of the predictions last week.

The predictions have to get better; they couldn't be any worse than they were last week. Here they are:

Toronto Blues 15, Queen's Gaels 7.

McMaster Maraulers 17, Western Mustangs 15.

McGiel Redmen 31, OAC Aggies 5.

Soccer Blues To Open Their Season At OAC

On Saturday a strong Blues Soccer squad will travel to Guelph to engage the O.A.C. Aggies in the curtain raiser of the Intercollegiate Senior Soccer league. The big aim of the Blues this year is to regain the championship which they held for over a decade previous to last year. Coach Bobby Auld is convinced that his boys will come out on top if they show the form that they have in practices. Newcomers Rod Green, a forward from Liverpool England, and Ron Williams, a big lad from Trinidad on the half line, are two reasons for his confidence.

The Blues play in both the Eastern and Western divisions of the league, meeting O.A.C. and Western in the Western division, and R.M.C. in the Eastern division. Each league is now on a home-and-home game basis.

The Blues' Saturday rivals at O.A.C. are well known for their fitness and rugged play and they are tenacious defenders of their home twine. This year the Blues have a hex to break; they have been beaten by the Aggies at Guelph for three consecutive seasons.

Here's a good word for Soccer fans: the bus leaving at 1 p.m. on Saturday will have room for a few extra passengers without charge.

The Intermediate Blues will also head for Guelph on Saturday. These boys are the Seniors of tomorrow and they show lots of fight. Both teams are in fine condition and we think that the team spirit displayed this year will give them the edge that they lacked last year.

Blues Injuries

couple of injuries at Wednesday night's scrimmage. Tackle Alex. Macklin suffered the same sort of hip bruise that his partner, co-captain Roy McMurtry sustained in last week's game. Though painful, it won't keep him out of action. Quarterback Doug Geekie wrenched his knee in the scrimmage and is a doubtful starter. If Geekie is sidelined, Ollie Mandryk and Ed. Skrzypek will be the QB's. Another question mark is guard Frank Palermo whose nose was broken in practice this week.

Ends Fred Smale (broken nose and cheekbone) and Gene Chorestecki (sprained ankle) will be missing for this game as will backfielder Ross Woods. Otherwise, the Blues' lineup in intact.

While the Gaels and Blues battle it out here, McMaster, who dropped the intercollegiate opener to McGill at Montreal last Saturday, will entertain the Western Mustangs at Hamilton.

Problem

ments necessary in their practices. There were very few private practitioners in the country as the poverty of the people made fees very scarce. Mission and the Government supported doctors to work in the country.

Perinbam said that some of the Asian students "came to the conferences with prejudices and misgivings as to the sort of students they were going to meet." He paid tribute to the Canadian delegation saying that they all worked together in a common cause to build up mutual understanding and good will.

REQUIRED PHYSICAL EDUCATION MEN — 1952-1953

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must participate in the required Physical Education programme during the First and Second year of his attendance of the University. The Physical Education requirements include a Swimming Test which must be taken before November 1st by all First Year men and by men admitted to the Second Year from other Universities. Swimming classes are compulsory for all students who fail to pass the Swimming Test. First Year students are requested to complete this test immediately.

For the current session the Board of Governors have seen fit to make the attendance of ex-service men in this course optional.

At the same time the University Health Service and the Department of Physical Education — Men, wish to emphasize the importance of recreational exercise and athletics. The course as offered at this University provides a means for all students to maintain some measure of physical fitness.

Physical Education credits may be obtained by participation in intercollegiate and intramural sports and instructional classes as noted below.

Yea, Pep Rally

A pep rally was approved Wednesday night by the Students' Administrative Council amid cries of "There has never been a really successful rally." But even worse than this, most of the SAC members had nothing whatsoever to say for, or against, the Pep Rally. And it passed with a wide majority.

The question is, how many of the assenting members knew what they were committing themselves to? Possibly enough to swing a big majority, after a close 11-12 vote the simple fact that there will be no Stadium Show was on the same question last year. The task of organizing a successful pep rally is all the more difficult this year because last year's didn't change the world in one night.

Those who dissented on the Pep Rally vote were, of course, putting the last touch to the football activities of the Blues and White. It is difficult to believe that very many students at this University would keep their nose to the grindstone all week, and not even want to change on the weekend. Certainly it is no change to come to a football game like a statistics expert and try to be intellectual for two hours. Yet those are the students who refuse to let the Blues and White Society give them a chance to actually be themselves for a Friday evening.

In poking their finger at the Pep Rally, these few raise unnecessary doubts in the minds of those who would let their natural barbaric instincts reign. The result is confusion. People, especially students are not naturally intellectual all the time, and that occasion, if there were no interference, would be at the Pep Rally. Students today thing it's the thing to suppress themselves, and listen to anyone who suggests it.

The simplest solution seems to be to forget last year as soon as possible. Forget doubts raised at the SAC meeting. And on Oct. 16th, when we initiate McMaster in Toronto, even forget the homework.

One part of the evening that everyone seems to agree on is the street dance after the rally. This support, and the fact that we are still in the early part of the season will probably spell success in spite of all foreboding. A dance, of course, can be accepted in any frame of mind, and will attract some who wouldn't say 'Rah' even if it meant the 'horrible death.'

It might be interesting to note that for four or five years ago, there was a Pep Rally for every home game. And indeed, many of us have great respect for the World War II veterans.

Take A Stand

Two days ago the SAC set about laying plans for the coming conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. And "set about" is all they did.

Although it settled the question of delegates, the policy was concerned. The issue of the raise in the Council didn't give them a leg to stand on as far as NFCUS per capita fee was bandied around until it fizzled out. The question of a Russian student exchange and the desirability of remaining in the Federation came to dead ends.

The University of Toronto, as the largest university in Canada, has a good deal of influence in the national student federation. And it has always had a good deal of respect for it has continually taken a leading and effective role in the NFCUS conferences.

But what have our delegates got to go on this year? There is not another SAC meet before the conference.

Last year this campus made it clear that it wanted to remain in NFCUS and it also, through college referendums, supported the NMCUS fee hike. Why not, resolutions from Toronto?
then, takes these two issues to the conference as solid

Toronto should not be going to the conference as an observer university. It should, and must, take an active part. Enough of this talk of having our delegates go there, look the situation over, and report back.

Granted, unforseen problems may arise, but our delegates are intelligent enough to take them into consideration. Still, expecting a normal conference, and that's the best we can predict, the SAC could have given its delegates something stronger to stand on.

SAC At Second Glance

Problem of Federation

This is the first in a series of articles designed to acquaint the students with what makes the SAC tick. It will follow each SAC meeting but will not necessarily be written by the same person.

By DAVID GAUTHIER

Twenty-two members of the SAC gave their initial perormance of the year Wednesday night, before a full press table and two spectators (both from the UC Lit.) For opening night, the show ran quite smoothly.

ALTHOUGH THE VARSITY STATED that the meeting would start at 7:30, it was called for 7:00 and commenced a t7:10. Two and one-half hours elapsed before its conclusion, most of the time being occupied by two major discussions. The first was on the pep rally and street dance, in which everyone seemed to be expecting a sharp division of opinion — which never emerged; the second was on the duties of the Public Relations Commissioner, which remain somewhat obscure, at least to the Commissioner. While the representatives showed that they are no more mature than any other comparable group of adults, they also showed that there is no reason to assume that a group infused with undergraduatism cannot produce constructive work. The band of critical idealists inhabiting certain quarters of the campus might remember these facts in passing judgment on the SAC.

TWO MATTERS OF SOME significance were raised at the meeting. The first was contained in Scott Symons' brief formulation of Toronto policy with respect to NFCUS. Symons stated his determination to make NFCUS an effective, important organization uniting Canadian students in pursuit of their common aims, or, failing this, to advocate Troonto's withdrawal. The results of the conference at Montreal should enable us to decide what we can do for NFCUS and NFCUS for us. On this basis, Toronto should make a definite decision about its continued membership in the national organization.

Symons' position is of considerable importance to students throughout Canada, and received perhaps too little attention at the SAC meeting. While we believe in the value of an organization bringing together Canadian university students to encourage inter-university cooperation, and to represent them to the Canadian people and to students abroad, yet we must recognize that regional differences and general uninterest have so far prevented the establishment of such an organization. NFCUS has drifted for many years; sufely it is time for Canadian students to decide whether to improve it or abandon it. Symons has recognized both the aim of NFCUS and the unpleasant facts of its actual achievements; he has advocated what seems to be the only effective policy which embraces both. But the actualization of such a policy requires the assistance of the student body, not only in making the final decision on the relations of Varsity and NFCUS, but also in implementing that decision.

EARL BERGER RAISED THE OTHER major point at Wednesday's meeting, although it is to be feared that he obscured it. Berger is concerned with the lack of cohesiveness and responsibility ot be found in the SAC. The general problem is, of course, that of the relation of the SAC with the college and faculty organizations. Under the present system, most SAC members seem to feel that their prime loyalty is due to the faculty which they represent, and whose instructions they seek to carry out, rather than to the university as a whole.

IN THE STUDENT WORLD of the University of Toronto, power lies with the faculty organizations. There are several reasons for this: Toronto is a federated university; it is too large for all activities to be successfully centralized; the present set-up is traditional. However, the effectiveness of the SAC, and of the students in governing their affairs, is seriously impaired by the division of power. Rapid action is possible only through methods whose constitutionality is questionable. The SAC today cannot effectively represent student interests when they conflict with those of the administration (as infrequently does happen) or of outside organizations, because it has no real power. The SAC cannot function as an organic unit, but only as an aggregation of individual wills. Council members tend to become mere instruments for the expression of their faculty's views, incapable of engaging in deliberatjon, incapable of compromising in the interests of the University as a whole. Insofar as they exercise little actual influence, unless they also hold a position of importance in their faculty organizations, their calibre is not always as high as might be expected.

IN THE LIGHT OF THESE considerations, it might well be worth the while of the SAC to appoint a commission to enquire into the feasibility of establishing a genuine student government of the University of Toronto, a government with carefully specified yet considerable powers, which could carry on its business without constant consultation of faculty organizations, although not without some form of check from the latter. The maintenance of student organizations in the faculties, schools, and colleges is essential for the administration of local activities, but this university is one university, and should be able to speak clearly and forcefully with one voice. As long as the SAC is capable of being made the playground for interfaculty quarrels, can student government at Toronto achieve its proper stature? As long as its members are bound primarily to faculty organizations, can student government exercise its proper power?

Tom Lane
c/o The Varsity,
The University of Toronto
Dear Mr. Lane:

Here are a few random comments on your excellent open letter to me, printed in The Varsity of Tursday, October 1, 153:

1. I trust that you are aware of the fact that for three years past I have been enrolled in the School of Graduate Studies in the University of Toronto. I am therefore not exactly a newcomer to this campus.

2. I deeply regret if I have given the impression that I consider the students at the University of Toronto to be barbarians. Yet on the other hand, and I am sure that you will agree, a genuinely civilised personality is a comparatively rare phenomenon in our society. I would suppose therefore that the University of Toronto has the usual quota of barbarians.

3. Finally, I find that my general reaction to your letter might well be summarised in the lady doth protest too much."

Sincerely,

John Rose,
Chaplain, Hart House.

VARSITY WINS AGAIN

Victoria Frosh Floured, Foiled And Perfumed

The Victoria College students initiated their frosh and freshies Friday night in an ordeal one grad said "had never been seen around Vic in the last six years." And it had results that had not been planned by its organizers.

The West York Bus Line, whose vehicles were used in the initiation, was reported to have had eight broken windows before the initiation was ended. A yard man last night confirmed this.

Students in charge of the program said it had been organized to work up spirit for the Bob Apple Battle, an annual Victoria College soph-frosh match. The Bob Bob Apple was described by Ken Cork, president of the Victoria College Union, as "a prize eagerly sought by the frosh and heroically defended by the sophs."

In the 57-year history of the battle, Cork said, the frosh have never been known to capture the "prize." The Bob Apple Battle has, on occasion, included rotten eggs and pies, but Cork claimed unbiased referees were always present to guard against personal injury.

The initiation began when freshies and freshmen were told to assemble at Vic for a barn dance. From there they were driven around the block in three West York busses.

After this the new-comers were blindfolded, marched to the Vic field house, and walked through cardboard cartons filled with flour. Not stopping for long the sophs, then, had the frosh jump into pails of water, stumble among long, wet cords, and, on hands and knees, crawl through "chicken guts."

Back on the busses the frosh had one of their shoes removed and were liberally sprinkled with perfume. Then they were driven to the West York barn yards on Keele and Dundas Streets and told to find their way back — with only one shoe — to the dance in Alumni Hall.

Vic soph leaders said that most of the first-year students did manage to find their way back, but they were not sure they could account for all.

Earlier last week, Vic coeds were reported to have been seen running around Bloor St. early in the morning clad only in pyjamas. It was thought to be their initiation.

Another student referred to the whole initiation as "a let-down for more constructive initiations," and called it another "sympton of high schoolishness." He said that future initiation plans might be curtailed as a result of the "wild" showing by the Vic students Friday night.

U. of T. Man Recovered By R.C.A.F.

A Toronto student was one of the seven missing men recovered from a single engined Norsemen lost in the Northern Quebec bushland since August 25.

Ray Vanstone, a third year M.P. and C. student at University College, was found with the plane along with two other men in the party. The remaining four men were picked up later in the bush nearby. The plan ran out of gas and had to land on a small uncharted lake.

Vanstone had been working with the Departmen tof Mines and Technical surveys for the summer at Fort Chimo and Fort MacKenzie. He was returning home when the plane was lost.

The R.C.A.F. began the search at once and abandoned it after several weeks. Faint radio signlas received from the vicinity of the plane encouraged the Air Force to resume the search. The plan was found by a R.C.A.F Lancaster on the third search October 2.

Except for a loss of 35 pounds, Vanstone is reported to be in good condition. It is expected that he will return to University after a short rest.

Queen's Very Strong In Losing Game, 16-7

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Well, that's one question out of the way. Queen's does have a good football team. So good, in fact, that they had Varsity Blues beaten for three periods of Saturday's local intercollegiate opener at Varsity Stadium. Only a blistering last-quarter drive that netted them two touchdowns enabled the locals to pull a 16-7 victory out of the fire.

The fire and color usually expected in a Varsity-Queen's game sputtered and fizzled throughout throughout the first half as the Tricolor edged into a 1-0 lead. Then things started to pickup after intermission and the Gaels were in front 7-0 before the Blues found themselves and turned on a late drive to win going away. Even so, they were still trailing 7-6 at the end of the third period and had to push across two majors in the fourth for their winning margin.

In the final analysis, it was on a superior passing attack — with Ollie Mandryk doing the heaving — that the Blues won the game. Mandryk played practically the whole game after Doug Geekie made a brief appearance in the first uarter and completed ten of nineteen passes for a total gain of 205 yards, with two of the Varsity touchdowns resulting from his throws. In the meantime, Queen's completed four of eleven for 48 yards. On the ground, there wasn't much to choose between the teams, with Varsity holding an insignificant 169-168 edge in yards rushing.

The game's outstanding player by a country mile was the Tricolor's bandy-legged little halfback, Al Kocman, who was everywhere at once. Right from the opening kickoff, which he ran back 38 yards, the 5'10" Toronto high school product paced the Kingston squad in every department. He intercepted a couple of passes, snatching one out of Al Haig's hands in the first period and stealing another from Varsity end Ted Kennedy in the third. He blocked well, letting his running mate Jack Roberts away for a couple of long runs by taking Varsity defenders out of the way, and became the favorite of the 14,765 fans present, as evidenced in the fourth uarter, when he was injured and had to be assisted off the field. He was only shaken up, though, and returned before the final whistle.

Indian Student Arrives Here Under SHARE

A new student arrived at the University of Toronto on Sunday. He is Rajjeshivar Mittra of India and he hopes to continue his studies in electrical engineering here.

Mr. Mittra was one of two Asian students chosen for a World University. Students' Scholarship to spend a year in Canada. Expenses for the year are financed by a $1,000 grant from the SHARE campaign.

Last summer, members of the Toronto delegation to the Indian seminar travelled about India and interviewed a total of eight students recommended to them by the Indian National Committee of W.-U.S. The students were interviewed at the centres where they were studying. The three groups of Toronto students who were conducting the interviews later met in Delhi where their selection was made.

Mr. Mittra has studied at the Universities of Agra and Calcutta and holds a B. Sc., degree. It is his intention to work towards his Master's degree at the University of Toronto.

Horse-Play

"It's a bird, it's a plane, no, it's the School of Law." Why on earth you made the first two guesses we don't know as this monstrous quadruped was never seen to take to the air (fortunately) during halftime at the game last Saturday. The polka-dot piebald was the Queen's equestrian companion for Varsity's Blue and White horse.

Oshkaweewe

And Football Too

By JOEL WAGMAN

If one sat back in his seat in the stadium, on Saturday, and pondered whether it was a football game or a "three-ring circus", the decision would be a difficult one. It was a bit of each.

The cheerleaders, an even twenty of them, counting both sides, were gaily arrayed in plaids, blazers, bloops and ribbons. The males on these hip-hoorah squads were outnumbered more than three-to-one (lucky fellows). Outstanding again this year were the drum major and majorettes, and in particular our own Shirley, the tall, tartaned Tanse Alcot, and six foot six (eight feet with busbie) Tom Durham He couldn't fail to stand out and be notable.

The assembled throng was treated to the displays of both the Queen's bands and the always-experts playing of the Toronto crew. Toronto's band efforts were highlighted by the giant twee-pee-ring-around-the-maypole routine conducted with the sid of the cheerleaders (as pallbearers.) On the field itself, besides the players, there pranced the new blue and white horse;—this year it had a playmate from Queen's School of Law. Together they made a lovely couple.

At different times, the theme from Dragnet, the Hamilton Ti-Cats yell, "Como-o-on Teeder" (this to Varsity's Kennedy), and something that went "Howdee Doodee Rowdy Dowdy", were heard. The latter exclamation was directed at Dowdy of Queen's (34) due to his accidental roughing of Honest Chucks multibandaged face early in the first uarter.

Besides the usual whistles, screams, chants, cries, and exhortations, a foghorn and the noisy buzzing overhead of a happy flyboy added to the din. Notably absent was the half-time swan dive of an engineer, beer bottles on the field, and the U.C. pigs. This can be understood after observing the very obvious reinforcements to the ranks of the ushers, marshals, Toronto city police, and the Pinkerton special militia.

Not to be discouraged by this assemblage of might, the "Toike-Oiks' joined hands at the closing moments of the game and successfully broke the iron cordon of the law. Most noteworthy addition to the gamely hassle this season was a rope with a weight ingeniously attached to the end which acted as na newly patented tool for tearing down football cross bars. Their efforts were rewarded successfully at the cost of only three bloody noses, as "informed sources" report. The human maelstrom raged around the uprights for a full quarter of an hour. From the mess emerged (or were catapulted out) engineers in different stages of undress and the uprights swayed in unison. Finally a Queen'sman (or is it mon?) achieved a stranglehold on the upright and soon it was travelling down Bloos street in the happy hands of Kingston's engineers, and followed by a mob of Skulemen.

The day was perfect for a circus, and, oh yes, the big fellows in the Blue and White ring won 16-7.

More Power Is Required By SAC Members—Berger

Students' Administrative Councils in the past have been definitely hampered by a "lack of SAC consciousness" on the part of their members, Earl Berger, IV UC, said Friday. He was clarifying a statement he made at the last SAC meeting that all letters to The Varsity from Council members must be "passed" by the Public Relations Commissioner.

Berger, who is Public Relations Commissioner of the SAC, was not speaking in his capacity of a Council member Friday. He said the opinions were only his own.

"I should think that one of the main problems is that many SAC members feel they owe more loyalty to the college or faculty which they represent than to the University the opinions of David Gauth- He said that on this point he agreed with the opinions of David Gauthier, IV UC, in his article last Friday.

However, Berger made it clear that he was not for censorship, but for "more SAC spirit". He called for more responsibility by the individual members of the SAC when they acted as members of that body.

Berger pointed out that his plan would be effective only in matters of statement of policy. He said he did not want to interfere with the personal opinions of Council members. "There are limits to how far this can go," he added. "We can't expect the Blue and White Society to run to me every time it has to make a decision."

Berger emphasized that the Council lacked cohesiveness and responsibility and declared he would not stoop to censorship to develop it as many students had thought.

University Reserve Training Plan

Applications are now being accepted from undergraduates who have two or preferably three summers availgble for training prior to graduation in Architecture, Engineering, Honor Science, Math. and Physics, Commerce and Finance, P.H.E. and other Arts courses. A limited quota also exists for female undergraduates in the above courses and Medicine.

TRAINING—A limited amount of winter training and employment, and up to 22 weeks of summer training and employment (ground or air) at RCAF units and stations, are available to undergraduates selected for appointment as Flight Cadets of the local RCAF Reserve University Squadron.

ENTITLEMENTS—URTP cadets receive officer rank and rates of pay with free rations, quarters, uniforms, transportation and medical attention during summer employment, and up to 16 days' pay for winter training (64 hours).

Regular Officer Training Plan

In return for a minimum of three years' service in the RCAF Regular Force following graduation, male undergraduates may receive complete subsidization for up to 4 years University tuition, fees, books, and monthly living allowance.

Second, third, or fourth year undergraduates are eligible to apply for a limited number of vacancies for aircrew training (any university course eligible) or technical trades (engineering and science courses eligible). First year undergraduates in Science Faculties are also eligible. This is equivalent value to a scholarship or bursary of up to $4,500 plus summer employment, and is a wonderful career opportunity.

Worm

Ted Rogers crawls back into the stones of Trinity. The Rogers Rangers — equipped with cap guns and Dick Tracy Badges and gowns — complete the political picture. The descending desperados wrote a letter to the editor of The Varsity recently which was later described as a "childish expose" of the Liberal election successes. Rogers is perhaps attempting to show that he says everything seriously by demonstrating graphically that he takes everybody seriously: or perhaps he is simply fighting for his youth and trying to be a Trinity freshman again—a "worm". —Photo by Ross Dunn.

Malayan For Secretary Of Canadian WUS Staff

The World University Service of Canada is attempting to bring home to Canadian university students the great responsibility that they must assume as members of a favoured nation to assist their fellow students, especially in less favourably endowed areas of the world, such as Asia and the Near East.

The WUS is an international organization organized to send material relief to university communities, the relief including financial assistance, books, drugs, and medical supplies. Through the medium of problems confronting students of summer seminars the WUS provides fellowship in the discussion the world over, and also through the various projects initiated by the WUS to assist needy students in completing their education and establishing themselves in their professions.

Mr. Lewis Perinbam, the new secretary of the WUS of Canada pointed out the vast disparity in living conditions comparing Canadian students with their Asian counterparts. For example, a Japanese student can live on $15.00 a month for his room and lodging. The average Indian student has to be content with a diet providing 1500 calories a day whereas 2600 is considered necessary.

This summer in India another WUS seminar was held. There were 100 students representing twenty nations at the seminar which was organized by the Canadian and Indian branches of the WUS For five weeks the students discussed the establishing of commissions to study rural development, social welfare, cooperative projects, plus many other things of interest to international students, thereby exchanging much useful information and ideas.

Lewis Perinbam, before coming to Canada, led a very active career. A Malayan, he studied in Glasgow, joined the Indian High Commission in Britain, then began his work with the WUS. He was in charge of a student refugee program for the rehabilitation of European students in the U.K., then attended WUS conference in Grenobel and Istanbul. He has also travelled extensively over most of Europe and Asia.

Recently he was invited to join the staff of the Canadian WUS. He will be attending the WUS conference at Montreal on October 9 to 11. He will then spend most of the year travelling across Canada, visiting other universities and encouraging their support of the WUS' international program of relief.

Minister Ralph Campney To Address Liberals At Opening Meeting

The Hon. Ralph O. Campney, associate Minister of National Defence, will be the guest of the University of Toronto Liberal club at its first meeting. It will be a get-acquainted meeting, at 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday in the Music Romm of the Victoria College Student Union.

HON. RALPH CAMPNEY

Fifty-nine years old, Mr. Campney was born near Picton, Ont., and received his primary educatin at Picton Collegiate. After three years teaching school he entered Medicine at Queen's University. He enlisted in 1915, in No. 5 Stationary Hospital, and served at the Dardanelles, and in France. After being injured he transferred to the airforce, and served as a pilot till the end of the war.

Returning to Queen's in 1919, he entered Arts, and won the Gowan prize in Political Science. He entered Osgood Hall to study law, the year he graduated. He was called to the Bar in 1924, and served as Secretary to the Canadian Delegation to the League of Nations in Geneva. Later he became political secretary to the late W. L. MacKenzie King.

Mr. Camney left public service in 1929, and built a successful law business in Vancouver. He was appointed a Dominion K.C. in 1940. In 1949 he was elected member of Parliament for Vancouver Centre. Two years later he was appointed Parliamentary Assistant to Defence Minister Brooke Claxton. In February of this year, holding the position of Solicitor General, he was appointed Associate Minister of National Defence, and still holds both portfolios.

Found

Football weekend pranks never cease. At right an 'A' coach has been stripped of its wheels and left in the vicinity of the Royal Ontario Museum. The car was painted yellow, and was decorated in blue lettering. Above, one wheel of the car was found on the Students' Administrative Council steps. On both sides of the "vehicle" in large lettering the word "Queen's" was painted. The incident apparently took place late last night, but no one knows the name of the owner or the pranksters.

Enrolment Is Down, Figures Not Complete

First Records of Student enrollment released by Simcoe Hall last Friday indicate that the figures will be down approximately five per cent this year. Total registration was 9,405 compared with 10,033 of last year. Mr. McCormick of the Registrar's office pointed out that enrollment figures then were out earlier this year and were not yet complete.

The largest faculty continues to be Arts with an enrollment of 3556, a decrease of 275 students, while the number of ex-servicemen dropped sharply from 427 to 260.

The School of Social Work leads all other divisions with an increase of almost 70 per cent, while Pharmacy sufferred a decrease in registration of approximately 23 per cent. The School of law has an increase of 26 per cent. Enrollment in Graduate Studies has fallen off 23 per cent, although this is expected to rise shortly.

The faculties of Applied Science and Engineering and Architecture have remained remarkably steady in view of the large changes which have occurred in other divisions. Victoria College has 97 fewer students with a registration of 934 while University College with a small decrease continues to lead with 1092 students. Trinity with an entollment of 436 has a 10 per cent increase over last year and St. Michael's College boasting an even 500 students has swelled its ranks by 23.

While enrollment in the 1st year of all divisions has remained fairly steady, the School of Law shows an increase of over 60 per cent in the first year with 45 students presently enrolled in the primary year against 28 in the 1952-53 session.

Registration in the various divisions with last year's statistics in brackets: arts, 3556 (3831); medicine, 922 (997); applied science and engineering, 1592 (1598); architecture, 189 (188); household science, 12 (10); education, 470 (489); forestry, 121 (135); music, 110 (114); graduate studies 564 (733); dentistry 418 (403); law, 77 (61); pharmacy, 227 (421); physical and health education, 125 (145); social work, 166 (98); nursing, 281 (266); hygiene, 27 (24); child study, 21 (23); therapy, 292 (280); extension, 135 (202).

Pharmacy Freshman Sentenced

"You are now one of us," concluded presiding Judge D. L. Lockhart, II B.Sc., as he officially closed the initiation of the freshmen last friday, at the Faculty of Pharmacy.

The frosh were tried by a mock court, and regardless of their plea, were found guilty and sentenced by the judge, while the jury just sat back and squirted the newcomers with water. The Judge said the frosh who were subjected to many "trials", were, "all good sports". In one case a co-ed had to sit on two eggs through most of the night and was told to hatch them.

A dance, organized by the social committee, followed.

Attack Fatal To Executive

George Harlow, of Rumsey Road, collapsed and died of a heart attack in the third quarter of the Queen's-Varsity game last Saturday. Mr. Harlow was an ececutive of the Dominion Engineering Company. He was fifty years old.

UC To Hold Second Eng. Examination

The University College English Department has announced there will be a second examination in Englaish Composition for first year students who for any reason were unable to write the examination on Thursday Oct. 1st. This date will be announced later in The Varsity.

"Your Wings" Are Profs. Really Angels?

"There are not enough 'characters on this campus," berated Clarke Deller, (II U.C.), Manager of the S.A.C. Book Exchange, "or all the odd books would be bought up." He was commenting on the great diversity of books at the Students Administrative Council's Book Exchange at 119 St. George.

Everything from the British Pharmacopoeia to such mundane books as the Second year Arts Annual Exams 1952, may be found on the Exchange's book racks. Your Wings, a book on how to fly, is shelved with teaching texts. The inference, no doubt, is teachers are angels.

Now is the best time to buy your books as there is no mad rush and huge crowds suggests Deller. There is plenty of time now for you to contemplate before you purchase.

The Communist Manifesto and the Scientific Encyclopeodia are being sold at bargain prices. Art in Everday Life may be a text, but would you class the Leica Manual as Mechanical Engineering or Applied Physics?

The Perrin Writer's Guide and Index to English may not be an odd book, but the 1950 Information Please Almanac is a queer sort of text book.

(N.B. By the time this article appears in print, some of the above mentioned books may have been sold; please oblige.)

. . . And Floundered

Modern Murals

And Deep Religion

Controversy has been waged in all fields that are present on this campus and the decor of the Hart House chapel has not escaped the criticism of many students.

The murals in the chapel have been charged by some as being detracting from the religious atmosphere. They are decidedly modernistic in treatment, but isn't this a modernistic age? If they are irreligious then why, on entering this room does one instantly lower his voice in awe and feel that sense of spirituality that at once commands his whole being? According to J. Rowe, the chaplain of Hart House chapel, the murals are "a modern re-interpretation of the Resurrection and Nativity scenes".

Many students have given quite favourable comments on these vigorous murals.

Another feature is a beautiful crucifix done by the English sculptor Eric Gill. This is an exquisite example of inspired workmanship situated at the front of the chapel. The stained glass windows also have a story. Brig.-Gen. Mitchell gathered the pieces of glass from bombed-out cathedrals and churches after the first World War.

Services are held daily in the chapel, Monday through to Friday at 10.15 to 10.30 and again at 5.05 to 5.20. Simplicity is the key-note of the devotions and prayers of these services which end with beautiful Hart House prayer. Students of all denominations conduct these devotional periods which are run by the Chapel Committee and the chaplain.

Each Thursday at 8.00 a.m. Holy Communion is administered. These services, as are all services of the Christian Church, are public services. Outside of the regular services the chapel is always open for quiet meditations and prayers.

Rev. John Rowe hopes to provide in the near future the service books and prayer books of the various denominations for use in the chapel, with an eye to meeting the needs of as many students as possible who belong to other faiths. By means of the chapel and all its services the chaplain hopes to provide each student with a sense of religious consciousness.

Five Bands, Balloons Greeted Couples At HH Blue And White Dance

Last Saturday night Hart House had a change of heart and not only opened its beloved halls to the the strolling pace of couples. The first Blue and White football dance of the year saw the walks of the inner courtyard of Hart House lose their traditional uselessness.

Besides enjoying the picture of Gothic stonework, and silhouette, the effect of colored light filtering through cut-glass leaded windows, and soft music in the warm air, those attending could dance to any of the five bands hired by the B and W. The Basketball Blues Homeground was seldom visible in the Lower Gym where Benny Louis supplied the music for a large crowd. The sound of string music, now familiar to the Music Room after many Sunday evening concerts,again lingered in its oaken heights. This Bohemian touch was produced by the Strolling Troubadors. Jack Evans accommodated the Charleston fans in the Upper Gym while the cool cats on the campus enjoyed the jazz of Tony Jimitello in the Debates Room. Bob Cringan added to the noise of the new loud colors in the East Common Room.

The dance was attened by a sellout crowd. The sheer and utter futility of decorating with balloons was again proven. Hew Bourne, Social Chairman of the B and W, said yesterday that he hoped to have a larger quantity of balloons available at future dances—"that none may go without".

He considered the dance a "great success" but said that "the B and W Society intends to make its future dances even better." There will be another football dance in Hart House on November 7th and one down at the Royal York on October 17th.

Parliament Procedure Inadequate

Kingston, Sept. 29—(CUP)—

The Canadian Parliamentary system is out of date, according to Prof. J. A. Corry of the Queen's Politics Department, speaking in Winnipeg recently.

"Parliamentary procedures and personnel are becoming increasingly inadequate to cope with the growing complexity and volume of government business," he said. "The fault is rather in the difficulty in understanding modern government than in the MP's, whose standards of education and intelligence are getting higher all the time." Prof. Corry continued. "There are, however, too few experts among the elected representatives to the government," he added.

Prof. Corry suggested two possible solutions for the problem. He proposed the creation of standing committees to sit throughout the entire life of the parliament rather than for only one session as is the present practice. This would enable members to become expert on specific phases of government, and would lead to a highter level of parliamentary debate.

His second suggestion was a shortening of debate in the House, which would enable more business to be covered in less time.

He Done Her In

Pygmalion, probably Shaw's most popular play, will come to Massey Hall with the Dublin Players on October 12. This is one of the features of the International Artists series. Above is the tea-party scene from Robert Gill's Hart House Theatre production of Pymalion.

Muriel Albert—Toronto-born Pianist

Muriel Albert — 21-year-old Toronto born pianist, again played in Eaton Auditorium — the auditorium in which she had made her debut only four years before. Miss Albert's Saturday night concert drew not only three encores, but also seven curtain calls. From the very first movement that her agile fingers touched the keyboard, the vigor and concentration that she shows for her playing captured the 500 admirers present. The true spirit of her work was reflected in the intensity with which her audience listened and applauded. Miss Albert's gestures — her exact timing and rhymic motions, brought out her enjoyment for music, and an appreciation for her instrument, the true beauty of which was obvious in her playing. The expressive and meaningful way in which she played the slower numbers was only surpassed in the forceful and dynamic way in which she played the more rapid pieces. Her tone? — outstanding!

As she changed from the slow introductory Scarlatti Sonatas to the fast moving Beethoven Sonata her versatile style was revealed. She played automatically, and with the true feeling of an artist. Her movement showed an understanding, and technique unexcelled. The grace and charm of her music was not lost when her sensitive hands changed quickly to match the mood of the composition. In the progressions of the Chopin Sonata Miss Albert played with knowing ability, and perfect fingering.

The program, consisting mostly of sonatas, was not subdued. These sonatas varied greatly in both mood and tempo. Miss Albert, with her versatile technique, played with the sureness and ability for which she is so well known. The program, at no time during the evening, lacked the full attention of the audience. Her encores proved to be just as driving and outstanding as the rest of the numerous pieces she played during the evening.

Especially memorable was the "Prelude (Pour Le Piano)", by Debussy. This composition displayed not only the talents of Miss Albert, but also the command that she has over her many resources, as well as her great ability. Miss Albert's methodical timing, and strong left hand blended together throughout the program to bring to her audience the beauty of each composition. She showed herself to be not only gifted in technique, ability, and a feeling for music, but proved herself to be a lover of her instrument.

Mary Syme James Shields

Two Canadian artists, Mary Syme and James Shields appeared in the Maple Leaf Concert Series at Eaton Auditorium Thursday night. This might be called a good combination in that one at least was satisfying artistically and the other held a popular appeal. In spite of this fact the audience occupied not a third of the available seats.

Mr. Shields opened with a group of songs from the Operas and Oratorios of Handel. He has the amazing faculty of making everything he sings sound like an Irish ballad. Even in the triumphantly joyous "Every Valley Shall Be Exalted" from Handel's Messiah he slid sentimentally up and down around the notes without precision or clarity. Words, he pronounces clearly giving the meaning to the audience, yet without seeming to have absorbed it himself. Meanwhile his face was almost immobile, which gave the impression of being completely absorbed in the beauty and power of he sounds issuing from him. Noise, especially strained noise, does not constitute sensitive singing. In fact after a shor time it becomes quite noisome. He scemed at least plausible in his last group of Irish Ballads, and in the encore "The Little Irish Girl," he finally evinced some long-hoped for humour. Mr. Shields had a good accompanist.

Miss Syme played first the Chopin Piano Sonata in B Minor Op. 58. She played with such a completely serene relaxation that all the trammels of technique were left behind, and one could enjoy to the full her mature and deeply stirring interpretation. She seemed to caress the beauty out of the notes: never harsh or imposingyet always vibrant and urgently present. In the Finale she used admirable restraint to give full value to the form and climax. During the second part of the program she showed a wonderful versatility, catching without difficulty the awe of the Faur Nocturne Op. 34, the spontaneous virtuosity of this Third Impromptu Op. 34, the infectious gayety and humour of Villa-Lobas' "The Three Maria's". At all times she played with clarity and roundness of tone, and at all times subordinated mere exhibition of brilliance to the musical possibilities.

It is too bad that these Canadian artists could not have here in Toronto the audience they deserve.

Conservatory Will Feature Dutch Cellist

Max Orobio de Castro, a Dutch cellist, will be the first performer in the second annual special series at the Conservatory, sponsored by Dr. Edward Johnson, chairman of the board of directors. The concert will take place next Thursday evening at the Conservatory Concert Hall. Mr. de Castro will play works by Fiacco, Brahms, Kodaly, and Hindemith. Lloyd Powell will be at the piano.

Mr. de Castro is considered one of Holland's leading cellists. He has just returned from a tour of South America, and has played in most of Europe's major music centres. A Toronto cellist, Cornelius Ysselsten, was a student of his.

This will be the second year for this special series of concerts. Suzanne Bloch, lutenist and authority on ancient music, will play Nov. 5; Gold and Fizdale, a two piano team, in January; and a string orchestra conducted by Ernesto Barbini in March.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Don't send a boy on a man's errand. We bet that's the lesson that Coach Frank Tindall learned from tht 16-17 loss his spirited Queen's Golden Gaels suffered at the hands of the local heroes. Don't misunderstand us. We are not trying to run down the stellar performances of such good men as Jack Roberts, Frank Geard, Al Kocman, Pete Cranston, Sherman Hood and Pete Zarry. What we are trying to say is that it was a combination of a good pass attack and good condition that chased the Blues to their initial victory of the young official season.

Queen's had neither a pass attack nor condition. Pete Cranston was good on passing a slong as the receivers were around but most of the time Pete was left to his own resources. .On condition, we think it fairly obvious that as the Blues became organized in the third quarter, the Gaels started to flag and fail.

On the ground, Queen's equalled the Blues. Both totalled about 168 yards rushing. In the air it was an entirely different story. The Blues completed 10 of 21 passes for a gain of 205 yards while the boys from Kingston completed only 4 of 11 for 48 yards gained passing.

It was in the final half that the Blues started to click offensively. In the first half they could hardly get themselves untracked. Statistics of the first two quarters reveal that only one Varsity pass in five tries worked. But after they got organizeed there was no holding them back in spite of the efforts of the boys dressed in green and white.

It was as surprise when Coach Bob Masterson elected to go with Olie Mandryk and Doug Geekie. Everyone expected Big Ed Skrzypek to be calling the signals. But Masterson's faith in Olie payed off when the refugee from the Beaches tossed two touchdown passes and otherwise had the situation well in hand.

For the first time in three years, Al Haig, the man with the educated left toe, was nosed out in the kicking department. .Frank Geard hoofed for the Gaels for an average of 43.9 while Al was kicking for average of 43.3 yards. But it was a mental lapse on the part of Geard that turned the tide. .In the early part of the fourth quarter Al Haigh kicked to Geard who was in the Queen's end zone. If Geard had conceded the point the score would have been 7-7 with the Gaels on the ball on their 25. But Geard returned the kick and it was Blues' ball, first down on the Queen's twenty-five. .On the next play Olie tossed his second touchdown pass, this time to Honest Steve Oneschuk. .The score after the convert failed was Varsity 11, Queen's 7. That was the ball game right there,

The only thing that marred an otherwise perfect afternoon was probably the worst job of officiating that we have seen. The two worst offenders were Umpire Andy Tommy and Gord Stewart who started as head governing field conduct for officials. "Keep the hell out linesman. Both officials forgot about the unwritten rule of the way of all play." Tommy in particular threw one of the nicest blocks we have seen for a long time, on Al Haig in the third quarter just as a pass from Olie Mandryk was settling in his arms. Later on, 13 yeards were awarded Queen's on an illegal interference penalty called on the Blues. Add to this the error of awarding Queen's ten yards when Varsity took too long to get the ball into play, the penalty should only have been loss of a down, and it was a pretty miserable show. A big bunch of flowers to Bob Elliot who suffered a gash in his leg and had to be replaced by Ted Jarvis, who was called from the stands to act as head linesman.

The officials get paid well to call a good game. Normally we symphathize with their problems, but all we can say after Saturday's clambake is — we hope that Andy Tommy never referees a game that we have to watch.

Big Hole?

In the picture above we get a sample of the great running that Al Kocman (15) showed on Saturday afternoon. That's Varsity end Don Smith (54) being blocked out of the play, Don Cheeseman (92) on the ground and Alex Macklin (45) on top of a couple of Queen's men. The running of Kocman didn't figure in the scoring as the Blues won 16-7.

pair of singles one in the second period after Queen's had marched for three straight first downs, two on charges by their standout back, Jack Roberts, and another after half time to put the Gaels in front. Then, Ron Stewart, another Toronto boy, made it 7-0, crossing the line after a fine Queen's march. Roberts intercepted a Mandryk pass at midfield and then he galloped to Blues' 27 on a Statue of Liberty play that worked perfectly. Quarterback Pete Cranston tried a pass to Roberts and officials ruled it complete at the 5, charging interference by Oneschuk. Stewart finally carried over after Roberts took play to the one.

That was when the game started as far as the local team was concerned. They caught fire immediately and, paced by Mandryk's ac-Steve Oneschuk, Bill McFarlane, curate passing and the running of Phil Muntz, Al Haig and Bob Pinkney, they took over completely. the game right after that Queen's Pinkney put the Blues back in touchdown which had made it 7-0. Immediately after the kickoff Mandryk fired a long, wobbly pass to Pinkney who was in the clear at the Queen's 45 and Bob hotfooted it all the way down the sidelines. Oneschuk converted for the only extra point the Blues made in the whole game.

The tide turned midway in the fourth period. After Haig had taken a long pass at the Queen's 30 and Muntz made eight, the Varsity attack bogged down and Haig booted to Geard deep in the end zone. Geard elected to return the kick but didn't get away a good one as it came down on the Queen's 20. On the first play, Mandryk spotted Oneschuk all alone in the flat and hit him with a pass just across the goal line. That made it 11-7.

Bill McFarlane capped a fine afternoon's effort by registering the final touchdown with the minute flag up. After Geard had kicked to his own 45, Don Cheeseman charged down centre to the 23. Then McFarlane fought the Queen's line right down to the nine, setting up his own score after Pinkney made it to the two.

Ends Don Smith and Ted Kennedy and co-captain Roy McMurtry sparked the Varsity line but it was stocky guard Frank Palermo who supplied most of the fireworks, tackling and blocking fiercely.

For Queen's, Captain Gary Lewis, the big centre, played a strong two-way game and end Lou Bruce contributed some very important blocking. But what enabled the Gaels to give the Blues such a game battle was their hardworking backfield, Roberts and Kocman in particular. Pete Zarry and Ron Stewart were effective runners and Pete Cranston directed the team ably from his quarterback position although he didn't have too much luck with his passes.

Whistlestops — Blues' coach Bob Masterson had to bench one of his three quarterbacks and didn't announce till Saturday morning that rookie Eddie Skrzypek would be the one to sit it out . . . Tackle Alex Macklin was the one serious injury of the game. He'll likely be out for the season as a result of torn knee ligaments. When he suffered the injury, he turned down a stretcher and shrugged off helpers to run off the field . . . The Blues had almost as much trouble with the officials as they did with the Queen's defenders. In the first period, Bob Pinkney tried the left end but head linesman Gord Stewart couldn't get out of the way and Varsity was called for illegal interference. Then in the third, Al Haig was in the clear and all set to gather in a pass when he got tangled up with field judge Andy Tommy . . . Umpire Bob Elliott suffered a bad gash in his leg shortly after the game started and Ted Jarvis had to be rushed in as a replaement.

More Swim Gals Is Need Of Team

The cry is out for more swimmers in women's interfaculty meets. With only four of last year's intercol favourites back this year, the choosing is restricted to a few newcomers and still more are required. The intercol crew won't be picked until interfaculty meets have been run off next month but aspirants must attend inter-faculty practices.

Toronto has always prided themselves on a strong intercol group. Last year, the gals topped the list at the final meet held at McGill, leading that University by twelve points. (The final standings between the two were 53-41.) Both squads have held the same positions for the past two years.

With such an illustrious past record, it seems incredible that the U of T squad should be in trouble. But such is the case due to lack of woman power.

Coaching the mermaids this year, both in intercol and inter-faculty meets will be Miss "Freddie" Baxter who swam intercol two before the war. THhe main thing right now is to get out to interfaculty practises which are held Monday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

The softball season has descended upon us again which means competition in the interfaculty ranks has begun its perpetual swing for another season. By "perpetual," we mean that from now on, there will be some kind of meet going on every day or night. So, if you didn't make the big squads, there will be others. We aren't making predictions yet but if things go as they have in the past, it should be a sqeeze between Vic, UC and PHE.

Vic has only five of last year's second place stalwarts on the field this term but the squad looks good — in fact good enough to finish on top of the circuit. PHE has split into three teams as they intend to do for the other sports, one for each year. Last season they ran into timetable mixups and the outcome resulted in the triad from this faculty. As far as baseball goes, most of the gals who made up last year's winning squad will be playing on the third crew this season. UC is submitting quite a new crowd backed by old timers like Heather Chipman, Deanne Connacher and Jeannie Martin. These gals played on the third place crew last season and along with the new-comers make up a squad which could have a bright future.

As we said before, we're not making predictions yet. There may be surprises in the offing. So let's let it ride for a week to see how things stand.

Fracas Scores 15 As Mustangs Triumph

Hamilton, Oct. 4 (Special)—It took the defending intercollegiate, champions, Western Mustangs, just one game to get rolling. They bounced back from an exhibition loss to Toronto a week earlier to trounce McMaster Marauders 40-13 here Saturday.

It was McMaster's second consecutive loss in their first season of intercollegiate competitions. For the Mustangs, it was their first regularly-scheduled test this season.

Western's veteran backfield ripped through the McMaster line for big gains almost at will and a succession of fumbles by the Marauders didn't hurt any.

Halfback Gino Fracas powered for two touchdowns and converted five others for a 15-point day. Jacques Belec added ten more on two major scores, with Murray Henderson, Brian Young, and Garnet Mason hitting pay dirt once each.

The fighting McMaster team gave up. After spotting Western an early 6-0 lead, they bounced back as Lorne Wrigglesworth kicked a single and Joe Kosokowski plunged over for a major with Jim Dodds converting to put the homesters ahead 7-6. Then the roof fell in as the Mustangs scored freely. In the fourth period, Kosakowski passed to John McPhee for another McMaster major with Dodds kicking the extra point again.

In the meantime, down at Montreal, McGill Redmen were taking a 36-1 exhibition victory over OAC Aggies.

'I'll Bite'

Bill McFarlane is seen carrying the ball with a couple of Queen's tacklers on his back. Bill played a great game both offensively and defensively as he scored the third Varsity touchdown late in the fourth quarter.

Varsity 3-0 Over OAC

Varsity's Soccer blues are going all out in their battle to regain the Blackwood Trophy, given yearly to the College Soccer champs. After their last three annual trips to Guelph, all of which ended in the "blues" for Varsity, this year's squad went one solid step towards settling old scores by easily whipping the defending champion Aggies 3-0 in Guelph last Saturday. The J-V soccermen gave all they had and outplayed their opponents handily but had to settle for a 2-2 deadlock with the younger Farmers.

After reigning for an even dozen years as Intercollegiate Soccer's best last year's Blues went into a slight slump and before they could pull out of it the league's also rans had them pinned and the season ended with Western and the Aggies sharing the Blackwood booty. There'll be no repeat this time if Varsity Coach Bobby Auld has anything to say about it. Auld took last year's boys and has drilled them into a team that is hungry enough to eat their opponents and if last Saturday is any indication they probably will before the season ends. The Varsity lads hope to be starting another string of a dozen or more titles for the old Blue and White.

Karl Tamburg was Varsity's chief gunner in the senior match notching all three tallies on assists from Finch, Bill Leach and Jose Atucha.

Interfaculty Football To Start Oct. 15

This year's edition of the interfaculty football schedule will get under way Thursday Oct. 15. As in previous years the games, exclusive of the finals, will be played on the back campus. Since S.P.S. has seen fit to combine their teams for this season all squads will see action in the first two days.

Thursday, S.P.S. wil ahlve their first opportunity to test their combined strength against last year's Cup winners from Vic. While these two are batting on the eastern half of the campus the western field will see the all-star studded Dents team opposing an always spirited St. Mike's club. Friday will bring the remaining four teams into action as U.C. and Meds clash on the eastern field while Trinity moves onto the other field to take on the Green and White of Forestry.

New Champion Is A Certainty

No matter who wins, there's bound to be a new senior interfaculty tennis champion declared today. Last year's titlist, Ken Lawson, isn't back to school yet and the final match is scheduled for today, with Don Rope of OCE and Gert. Lukk, IV SPS, battling it out at the Toronto Lawn Tennis club on Rowanwood Ave.

Finals were originally carded for Saturday morning but Rope had to be out of town so the game was postponed till today.

Socialism 1 (a)

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The executive of the university CCF group is to be commended for extending to Professor Frank Underhill the invitation to deliver the first in a series of lectures entitled "Socialism I(A)." Professor Underhill's talk which dealt with the moral and ethical approach to socialism was to my mind highlighted by his very sincere and frank attitude towards this subject, and although in many instances defeated the case for socialism, left those in attendance to seriously consider his remarks.

The speaker forwarded several significant facts some of which could bear repetition. Although the CCF movement in the recent past has been unable to win the support of the people on the basis of its political and economic platforms, it still could as in the early stages of its formation, gain support through its moral and ethical appeal. Political and economic appeal has been partially lost through the recent tide of prosperity in which the electorate has found itself and also by the adoption and institution of various social reforms by the capitalist parties. It was through pressure exerted by men like J. S. Woodsworth that social reforms such as old age pensions and family allowances were eventually put into legislation.

In regard to the question of nationalization, one of the prime questions in socialist platforms, Mr. Underhill pointed out that in Britain today the Labor Party has adopted a "go-slow" policy in regard to this matter, and that we in Canada have had a share of nationalization — railways and electrical equipment.

Today, many young and capable people are being denied the right to attain higher education merely because they lack the financial means to do so. This, Professor Underhill felt, was a situation which those in the CCF movement should work to rectify.

This talk was the first in a series which will also examine the aspects of Marxism, Fabian socialism, welfare state and many other informative topics. Those attending these groups will have the opportunity to join in the discussion and question period which follows.

The 80 Cent Issue

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

The NFCUS Fee

When there are problems like the training of native medical doctors for South Africa, or the arranging for eastern students to study with facilities here, Canadian students are being unmercifully selfish to refuse to help them. It is by unselfishly taking a part in these things the Commuist-dominated International Union of Students is winning itself friends and understanding in less fortunate countries.

Though Canada is a smaller nation she could still make herself felt if her students worked together. Co-operation among her students would only come if they were fully informed regularly of all the activities of her national body. With a detailed program on internal promotion and communication she could have something closer to 100 percent backing if she went to the Federal government petitioning for increased federal aid.

In Canada we have set up the skeleton for carrying these things out on a fee of twenty cents per student. Students of the University of Toronto will go to Montreal next week to represent us in deciding whether Canadian students will make any effort to be strong.

It takes money to set up a well-organized communications office and circulate information and commission directions between the universities. It takes money, about 80 cents more per student, but it would give us a federation we, and every other university in it, would have respect for. Faction colleges would think twice before threatening boycott to get their own way.

At the Students' Administrative Council meeting last Wednesday night Toronto's delegates laid out the policy, or total lack of it, they would take to Montreal. They said the popular approval of the dollar NFCUS fee of last year would no longer hold, and they would make up their mind in Montreal.

With a week yet till the conference starts, Varsity students can try to convince their delegates of the advantage of taking a positive line of thought. Why wait till they find that a number of colleges will withdraw when the fee raise goes through? Surely they must know that nothing can be gained in the present stalemated organization, even with full membership. A dollar fee from those universities broadminded enough to help themselves as well as others, will be more significant than unity.

One of the first essentials a National Federation of University students must have, is the respect of its student members. We saw at last year's conference in Laval that some universities have no respect for our federation. Certainly there are many more students with even less respect. With five times as much money to spend, two or three years will see at least four times as much action as we see now. It stands to reason that very few colleges in Canada could afford to stay out of NFCUS and still be self-respecting as a Canadian educational centre.

On the other hand, if nothing is done to save the face of a worthwhile skeleton, these is no point in misleading ourselves. We can only be ashamed of ourselves, and shame is best tolerated alone. Toronto's withdrawal from the National Federation of Canadian University Students is inevitable.

"Frankly, Sir, What's It Mean ?"

R.v. John Rowe,
The Chaplain,
Hart House.

Dear Mr. Rowe,

I was very happy that you considered my letter worthy of reply. Had I expected one, I should certainly have given a better return address than "c.o. The Varsity."

I must apologize, sir, for not realizing you had already spent considerable time at the University of Toronto. In my own defence, however, I must say I think the mistake an easy one to make, in view of your reference to "the lack of academic and intellectual discussion" outside the lecture halls, and my own experience which has proved such conversations not hard to find. But then, your standards may be higher than my own comparatively humble ones.

Had I known you had spent three years at Toronto, I would have considered your statements only a reflection of your own experience, and privately suggested where you could find some discussions you might enjoy.

There is one phrase in your otherwise excellent letter, however, to which I must take exception. This is your reference to a "highly civilized personality." Now this once ag. in shows my inferiority, but frankly, sir, I don't know what it means. Semantically, I suspect, it means nothing. What civilization are you referring to? Not the predominantly mechanized one in which we live, I expect. And how civilized does a personality have to be in order to be genuine? Incidentally, what is a personali' ?

Still, according the phrase a meaning, I still wonder about your assumption that the University of Toronto will have only its quota of such people — that is, about the same proportion as in society. To indicate such a belief, sir, is to ignore the entire concept of higher education, which presumably is allowed only a small percentage who show themselves acad mically worthy. The senior matriculation exams, are, I grant, a poor criterion. But surely they are partially effective, and leave the University community with a smaller proportion of barbarians (admittedly a poor wo. on my part) than the rest of society.

Finally, sir, in reference to your parting shot. Perhaps the lady doth protest too much. But may I remind you of Hamlet's reply to the Queen: "O! but she'll keep her word." So too, sir, I believe that in your new job you will meet many more Toronto students and revise your opinion.

Yours sincerely,
Tom Lane,.

Fight On, And On

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I would like to congratulate Hart House on acquiring a chaplain who is not afraid to take a strong stand on an issue. As Warden McCulley said to me recently: "Moderation is not a Christian virtue."

It takes courage to cut oneself off from friends, family, and country as Mr. Rowe has done. It has been many a day since we have heard a University official openly advocate the adoption of part of the constitution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (1936) in North America. I am referring, of course, to article 124 affirming the right of all citizens to "freedom of worship and freedom of anti-religious propaganda." Without necessarily agreeing with Mr. Rowe, I must express my admiration for his stand.

Unfortunately, the Hart House divine did not mention the constitution of the U.S.S.R. directly by name, but possibly this was influenced by the newspaper in which his words were quoted. However, his real meaning shone forth to all intellectuals. For are not all intellectual discussions either in favor of worship or else in favor of anti-religious propaganda?

In the past I have admired his bold words spoken from the back benches in the Hart House Debates. Unfortunately, I do not remember having seen him at any Hart House Debates, but it must have been Mr. Rowe who said these words since there are so few men oth is calibre on the campus.

However, Mr. Rowe surely by now is aware of the danger he faces in being engulfed by the sea of apathy, the mass of mediocrity, the chaos of conformity, rearing their ugly heads around Hart House. To the barricades, Mr. Rowe, defend intellectualism. Fight on, fight on.

Yours sincerely,
Harold Nelson, Grad.

Matter of Fact

The Editor,
The Varsity,

In Thursday's Varsity there was a letter, signed by one J. W. Daley, purporting that Mr. Ted Rogers' charges in Wednesday's Varsity were chiefly poppycock. Many people who took part in the elections know these charges to be the truth nd not "poppycock." At no time in his article did Mr. Daley deny these facts.

In reference to Mr. Daley's discussion on leadership, it would be noted that the present Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent, was chosen from outside the ranks of the party. By this action, the Liberals publicly admitted their lack of suitable dership in 1948. It is interesting to note that again in 1953 this same action is obviously being taken, whereby Mr. St. Laure: picks some "pippersqueak" from the civil service and personally grooms him for the job of Prime minister.

Mr. Daley tried to convine us that there was little corruption and extravagance in the government. Here are few facts to refute his generalities:

1. 194,000. to buy and haul dirt to provide landscaping for the new Dominion Bureau of Statistics Building.

2. When theft of the CPR spur at Petawawa was 'noted' by the railway, the CNR spur was lifted and used to replace' the stolen rails.

I reiterate my support for Mr. Rogers' charges and fully intend to join the Campus Conservatives Club this year.

A Letter Home

Dear Friend Jack:

Well Jack old pal three weeks have went by since I came away to the big city to go to college and believe me a fellow sure does get lonesome for his home town especially when it is a great little place like Pine Tree Falls and you have a great friend like you and me have always been Jack old pal.

Believe you me this Toronto is some place. Everywhere a buddy looks there is good-looking women and when it comes to women I don't have to take a back seat to any of these here big city jaspers. You know me Jack. Haw haw. Why just for an example the second day after I signed up in this here Animal Husbandry course the old man got me to take I meets this gal and talk about pretty. Say. My knees started to feel sort of giddy-like and for once I was forgetting about Mary Lou back home (you know how thick we was). Well sir Jack Mary Lou bulges and sticks out in a few places but this girl bulged and stuck out in places where Mary Lou is flat. So anyhow I looks at her and I says "Oh you kid we don't have girls like you back where I come from." So she sorta looks at me and says you dont say and keeps on walking.

I guess she didn't like to be too friendly the first time but I could tell she was intrusted by the way she looked and the next time I see her I might ask her to go to the picture show or something like that. Although it costs fifty cents to get into the shows some of them and for the two of us that would be $1 which is a lot of money but she looked sort of rich so maybe she would pay her own way. Anyway dont say anything to Mary Lou eh Jack old pal.

There is one pretty queer thing us new fellows has to do when we come to college and that is to go swimming to pass a test or something. Well I guess you have to do it but I put on my bathing suit the new one with the short sleeves and went into the bath place and I guess a lot of the guys down here dont have much money because none of them had any suits or anything on. Then when they seen me they all started to laugh. At first I thought they was laughing at me and I was going to give some of them a punch on the nose. You know me Jack nobody laughs at me. But then I decided one of them must have been telling a joke. But I didnt go in swimming anyway because the water looked sort of green and I thought there must be something wrong with it. Ill pass that test after they get the water cleaned up.

Tomorrow I am going to a football game and will tell you all about it in my next letter. Write soon Jack old pal.

Your old pal

McGill SEC Is Against Fees Jump

Kingston, Oct. 2 —(CUP)—The issue of the NFCUS per capita fee increase is going into full gear on the various campi across Canada. While the Students' Administrative Council at Toronto gave no definite policy on the increase to its NFCUS delegates, the McGill student executive council voted, 8-3, to have their delegates speak against the fee rise when the annual conference gets under way in Montreal next week.

At Queen's, three members of the Alma Mater Society executive were appointed to look into the aims and projects of the National Federation of Canadian University Students and to present their findings at the next AMS meeting.

Special SAC Meet Thursday

John Steaker, president of the Students' Administrative Council, announced last night that a special S.A.C. meeting will be held on Thursday. It has been called, on the request of the Student Christian Movement, to consider NFCUS associate membership in the International Union of Students (IUS), he explained.

Chancellor Beatty

Seated at the desk in his Markham street home is Dr. Samuel Beatty, M.A., Ph.D., FRSC. Dr. Beatty will be installed as Chancellor of the University of Toronto on October 16. He will succeed former Chancellor Vincent Massey who has been appointed to the Board of Governors.

New Chancellor Beatty Successor To Massey To Be Installed Oct. 16

Although he has been retired for over a year, Dr. Samuel Beatty, former dean of Arts, still has his nameplate pinned to his officee door in the Geophysics building on St. George St. And his office has been a pretty busy place of late because Dr. Beatty early in the summer was elected Chancellor of the University of Toronto. He will replace former Chancellor, Vincent Massey, who is now a Governor.

The official installation will not take place until Oct. 16, but Dr. Beatty, aged 72, wishes it were all over now. He's been interviewed, re-interviewed and interviewed again several times since his election.

Dr. Beatty described the chancellorship as "a bit of an experiment." He said the University was probably "trying out an academic person to see if he could forget about academic things—and yet not forget about them either."

Referring to the modern student, the new Chancellor felt that nowadays a very outstanding student had a chance to come to the frontier of his subject. "At my time," he said, "the student was given interesting things to work at, but he couldn't just look over the fence and see the world beyond."

"It was an exception to find a man on the staff who assessed research as his chief job," Dr. Beatty stated. "Today it is difficult not to find such a man."

The Chancellor also had a few words to say on President Smith's Convocation address. He agreed with the President that there was need for more "characters". "Dr. Smith calls for people who are not unaware of what others think and prize and esteem, but who, for better or for worse, make up their own minds."

Dr. Beatty deplored the attacks made on academic freedom in the United States—especially where teachers were dismissed because of personal political opinions.

"We are in a very good position in this country," he said. He added that the staff here had no conventional pattern to follow. "We're a little pleased if something a little unusual in habit of thought or mode of expression happens that is stimulating."

But Dr. Beatty said professors should be dismissed if they become coercive. "The teachers we need are those that must reciprocate and accord to others the same freedom of thought they enjoy," he explained.

The Chancellor declared, however, that these matters were vague. It is hard, he said, for two people to be sure they are talking of the same thing. "It's natural that there should be a little continuing argument among people in the political and economic world."

Dr. Beatty, often referred to as an enthusiastic football fan, recalled an Argo-Tiger Cat game last year when he was "drenched to the skin". At that time he and E. A. MacDonald, of the SAC, sat through the entire game in a pouring rain.

"We would have attracted more attention by leaving the game than by staying," Dr. Beatty remembered with a chuckle. "Besides it was a very spectacular game."

He graduated from the University in 1907 and immediately became a fellow in the Department of Mathematics. In 1936 he was appointed head of that department, and in 1936 became the Dean of the Faculty of Arts. At his retiring age in 1951, Dr. Beatty dropped away from active University life until his election as Chancellor.

T-cheers

For Whom The Bell Tolls

Why would anyone ever want to be a teacher of all things? Well there seem to be quite a variety of answers . . . Some of them pretty sound too!

Take for instance one prospective pedagogue whose hobby happens to be flower growing. No other employer, except the board of education, would be considerate enough to give this young lady a whole summer to devote to her favourite pastime.

Wasn't it Horace Heidt who said, "it is better to build better boys than it is to mend men"?. This sentiment seems to be shared by many of the students at the Ontario College of Education who firmly believe in education. Many have had several years of teaching experience and have derived much satisfaction and enjoyment from it, because they feel that, in this way, they are contributing to both the individual and society.

The knowledge that you are able to stimulate young minds to think—to iuspire imagination—to increase perception, is felt, by many, to be very important for a free world. As a teacher you are given unlimited opportunity to use all your potential, to expose and contribute all the skills, interests, and valuable experience which you may possess.

Practically speaking, the teaching profession doesn't seem to be so bad either. No, your wife won't be sporting a mink coat next fall, but you can live reasonably secure, in a pleasant and relaxed atmosphere, outside of the competitive class. The demand for teachers is very great, and while you are never assured of a position, the prospects are very encouraging.

School? Why some people just love it. Can't do without it! Love it so much, in fact, that they must spend the rest of their lives there. These people love to be in continuous contact with young people and young ideas. One teacher-in-training felt that she enjoyed her schooldays so much because of her teachers and, therefore, she wanted to contribute to the happiness of as many pupils as possible.

Many students at the College have a specific interest in mind apart from teaching the three R's. They have spent years of preparation in their chosen fields and many of these hold degrees. Because they want to create an interest in their subject, and because of their desire and ability to work with children, they have taken up teaching.

Supplementary courses which lead to special certificates in Commercial Subjects, Guidance, Industrial Arts, Physical Education, Home Economics, Music, Art and First Class (Public School), are also provided for, to all those who are interested. These, of course, are very beneficial when seeking employment.

Teachers are different from most other adults who constantly decry the behaviour of children. They feel criticism is not enough, and therefore, many students at O.C.E. have given up better paying jobs to make sure their criticism is constructive.

A surprisingly large number of concerning their desire to be teachers, really had no legitimate answer. Some were there because their parents were teachers, others because of the lengthy holidays, and still others because it offered a professional status within society, yet only took four years of their time. Some were actually forced to think about it for the first time! Golly . . . by next week the enrolment may take a sudden drop . . . I doubt it though.

SCM Council Urges NFCUS To Enter IUS

The following is a resolution passed by the naitonal conference of the Student Christian Movement this fall.

REVISED STANDARD VERSION OF COMMITTEE RESOLUTION
RE IUS-NFCUS RELATIONS

WHEREAS: We believe that therefore the barriers which hinder the full realization of this brotherhood created by God, barriers built through isolation, traditions, and prejudices are immoral, and;

WHEREAS: It is only through personal contact that we can understand the real areas of difference that create and sustain these barriers, and;

WHEREAS: It is therefore a Christian concern for all men to constantly seek opportunities to keep open the door of contact and confrontation, and;

WHEREAS: NFCUS participation in IUS as an associate member would lead to this personal contact for more Canadian students, and;

WHEREAS: We believe that NFCUS would in this way be placed in a better position in which to assist in the solution of the problem facing the students in the world.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

SECTION A: That this National Council send a letter to the NFCUS Council urging the NFCUS to begin negtioations leading the associate membership in the IUS, and further

SECTION B: That we urge local S.C.M. units to initiate action to ensure a mandate from the student body on htis matter which the local NFCUS delegate can carry to the Council.

Bus Windows

Damage by Vic students to seven bus windows — to the extent that they will have to be replaced — was definitely confirmed last night by the manager of West York Bus Lines, Mr. E. Kelly. This definite confirmation was obtained by The Varsity when a number of Vic students who were connected with the initiations on Friday night, protested that no windows had been damaged. Kelly said that one window in one bus and three windows in two others had been cracked.

Gold Miners' Strike Topic Of Millard CCF Lecture For UC Club Tomorrow

Mr. C. H. Millard, National Director of the United Steelworkers of America (CIO - CCL) will speak on the strike situation in the Northern Ontario gold mines on Wednesday at 4 o'clock in Room 37 UC. Sponsored by the U of T CCF, this is the first of several special meetings to be called during the year on topics of special interest.

C. H. MILLARD

Just returned from the Timmins area Millard will have first-hand information on the latest developments. The unions say that they are prepared for a long struggle, that the operators are not interested in normal collective bargaining, but are intent on breaking up the union. The U of T. CCF believes that the union's case has been misrepresented by the Globe and Mail, and that the unions must make the facts known.

Mr Millard will deal with the issues in the strike, union security, increased vacations, and an increase in wages. The U of T CCF believes that present wages in the mines are very substandard and that they are not in accordance with the dangers involved in this hazardous occupation.

What is nickel plating?

"Nickel plating means putting a coating of nickel on the surface of some other metal by means of electricity. The things to be nickel plated, such as alarm clock cases, tea kettles or car bumpers are placed in a tank containing a solution of nickel salts. When an electric current is turned on, a layer of nickel is deposited on the surface of the metal articles in the tank. The longer they are left in the tank the thicker the nickel plating becomes."

"Why do they use nickel plating?"

"It gives a handsome, silvery surface, and it also keeps things from rusting, because nickel resists rust—even in salt water."

"Is that nickel plating on our car grille?"

"Yes, those parts are given a plating of nickel, finished off with a thin coat of chromium. Almost anywhere you go you'll find things plated with nickel to help keep them from rusting and to make them bright and attractive."

Douglas Aiken, International Secretary of the World University Service, is seen as he addressed a meeting of the External Affairs Committee in Falconer Hall yesterday afternoon. Aiken joined WUS while interned by the Nazis during the last war. He stressed the low health standards found in Asian universities in his address, saying that 30 students would have to sleep in a room the size of Falconer Hall. WUS Secretary Finds Asian Health Lacking Some Distrust Doctor

The fact that 80 per cent of the students attending Asian universities are sick by our standards was stressed in an address to the External Affairs Committee of the Students' Administrative Council by Mr. Douglas Aikan, International Secretary of the World University Service. Aiken, who joined WUS in a Nazi Prison camp during World War II, spoke at Falconer Hall last evening during his short visit to this campus yesterday.

The fact that 80 per cent of the students attending Asian universities are sick by our standards was stressed in an address to the External Affairs Committee of the Students' Administrative Council by Mr. Douglas Aiken, International Secretary of the World University Service. Aiken, who joined WUS in a Nazi Prison camp during World War II, spoke at Falconer Hall last evening during his short visit to this campus yesterday.

"Most people seem to know that WUS is a relief organization" he said. "But few realize the magnitude of the problem that faces us," he said. "When a new health centre was opened at the University of Madras 30 people volunteered to show the rest of the students that there was nothing to be feared from the before unencountered doctors. When the doctors had finished examining these 'guinea-pigs' it was found that 27 of them had required immediate treatment," he reported.

After the war, WUS decided that its funds should be spent in such a way that the maximum number of students possible would be helped in a permanent manner. Health is the biggest problem and so a lot of effort has been concentrated in building health centres which not only cure the maladies found among the students but keep these under control. "There is no point in using funds to give a student a pill if we know he will be sick with the same disease in three months time," he said.

In an interview Aiken stated that he felt no special scholarships should be granted to Asian students if these detracted from the funds available for the masses of students served by the WUS in their home countries. He felt there was a place for scholarship students spending a year in a different university, and then returning home to spread the knowledge in their own university they had gained away.

He said that at times it was more important that students at a Canadian university meet an Asian student than the Asian student receive Canadian tuition and for that reason it was sometimes necessary that the student be brought to Canada. This type of object lesson was not badly needed at Toronto where Aiken had noticed the attendance of a lot of international students.

Aiken thought that there would be no advantage to be gained in his organization's joining the United Nations. "We receive the full co-operation of UNESCO and the World Health Organization," he said. Membership in the UN would make us a government organization and put us in the realm of power politics. We do not want our hands to be tied this way until the day when the governments of the world can take care of this relief work there is a need for our expediencies." he said. WUS is entirely dependant on the charity support of universities.

"Our great aim is to co-ordinate the national organizations," Aiken said. "There is room for the organization that has no money to offer," he said and told of a Finnish University that had offered to obtain at trade prices the prefabricated houses that WUS was going to give to Israel. "We attempt to let the receiver do as much work as possible at its own end of the deal!" he added.

UC Century

Wanted: Cornerstone

Has anyone seen a cornerstone? Not just any old cornerstone, but the cornerstone, which Principal Jeanneret, when speaking at the annual UC Soph-Frosh banquet, said should be at the south-east corner of University College. Determined not to be discourgaed, however, UC will soon lay another cornerstone for the new men's residence.

The plans of the architect are only awaiting the ratification of the board of governors. The new residence will generally follow the be rooms for visitors to the College as well as commonrooms, offices and a dining-room.

All the old houses and buildings on St. George Street, from Knox College up to Whitney Hall at the corner of Hoskin Ave., will be removed to make room for the new residence which will front on St. George Street with two wings extending inward to form a quadrangle.

It is fitting that for UC's hundredth birthday, it should achieve the men's residence which it has lacked for forty-nine years. To celebrate its centenary, after the laying of the foundation stone on Friday October 16th by the Governor FGeneral, there will be a centenary Banquet at Hart House and then a Centenary Ball on Friday night.

Saturday there will be two performances of the University Centenary Masque at Hart House, especially written for the occasion by Professor Finch of UC, followed by a reception in the Great Hall. On Sunday there will be a service of Re-dedication at Convocation Hall with a sermon by the Right Reverend Frederick Wilkinson, Coadjutor Bishop of Toronto, and special centenary music composed and played by Sir Ernest MacMillan.

All they need is their cornerstone.

Financial Assistance Necessary At McGill States Dr. C. James

Montreal, Oct. 2 —(CUP)— The refusal of the Duplessis government to accept Federal money for universities cost McGill University $615,000 last year, according to Dr. Cyril James, Principal of McGill. In spite of the most rigid economies McGill had a deficit of $438,000 at the end of last year, Dr. James continued. He was speaking at the Annual Meeting of the McGill Associates.

McGill is in a critical financial position, and the quality of the education which McGill provides is substantially below that which was offered in1 1937, Dr. James pointed out. The small rays of hope Dr. James saw were the $15,000 Gardner-James fund and the $60,000 a year provided by the million-dollar J. W. McConnell Foundation. These public benefactions may help to reduce the deficit. Dr. James concluded, but McGill still must have financial assistance.

Hindus Asia Problem SCM Secretary Says

"The average Indian receives 200 calories under what is needed for even a sedentary life," said John McRae, new associate secretary of the Student Christian Movement in Toronto. John and his wife Ruth attended the World Conference of Christian Youth at Travancore, India and visited universities and Christian missions in India, Korea and Japan this summer.

McRae added that just as great a threat to India as Communism, is militant Hinduism, which might take over from th. anti-communist Congress Party and create war with Pakistan and bonfires all over.

"Western policy tends to ignore the economic aspects of the political situation in the East. Three quarters of the population or over 200 million people in India are in continual sight of starvation. This is a permanent condition. Trade with China is a vital necessity to Japan. There is a considerable body of opinion in Japan, which agrees with the part of the post-war constitution stipulating no Japanese rearmament, he said.

"Ancient social and cultural patterns in India have been shaken by western impact, McRae said. The concept of romantic love is displacing the prearranged marriage. Trade unions are growing up in definite opposition to the old authoritarian patterns.

"Our western reactions to things are generally considered abnormal in Asia as our whole life, on the average, is abnormal to them. The culture of America is lowing prestige. For instance at the Mayday parade in Tokyo (a big affair) an American cowboy was depicted, pistol in hand, with a Jane Russel type at his feet. Across the poster was written, 'We want none of your cultural colonialism here,' he reported.

"In Korea, direct financial aid is asked, but at present Canada is spending only one dollar in general aid for every one hundred dollars in armaments, McRae stated.

"These things have to be solved now, because communication has advanced to the state where the leaders of Asia now recognize that our half of the world is living in "comparative" comfort and why shouldn't their people too.

"We have come nome convinced that the most important thing for us, is to try and understand, in Asian terms, what is actually happening there," he added.

Letters To The Editor

Students writing letters to the Editor should limit those letters to 200 words or less to insure the greatest possible chance of publication in the limited space available. Letters should be typewritten at 60 spaces to the line, and presented to the Editor or his representative by 4:00 p.m. of the day before desired publications. ATL cards must be shown with all letters presented for publication.

FROS Services

For Foreign Friends

Overseas Students are not being neglected on the U of T Campus. Organizations such as the Committee for Friendly Relations with Overseas Students, which works in close conjunction with the International Students Organization, try to make visitors and new-comers feel at home here.

FROS is not a club, since it has no formal membership. Strangers to Canada who need advice concerning such things as the English language, housing, or local customs can go without ceremony to the executive secretary, Mr. Jack Thomas. Last year, Thomas procured, for both male and female students, board and lodging in exchange for light housework and baby-sitting.

The FROS office is now at St. Andrew's Memorial House, 415 Jarvis Street, just north of College. After October 19 it will be in Room 113, in the basement of University College.

Last year, the headquarters of FROS were in the attic of a building on St. George which has since been torn down. Here students from all countries, including Canada, would drop in for lunch, either bringing their sandwiches or making them there. At first they would sit around in small groups, getting acquainted; but later, when they all knew each other, a roomful of about twenty students would often get into heated discussions on anything from religion to the Mau Mau.

Overseas Students also get a chance to meet members of the community outside the University at bi-monthly Sunday afternoon teas at 60 Lowther Avenue. Many were invited to spend Christmas with families met at these teas. This was found to be a much more satisfactory arrangement than celebrating in the homes of complete strangers; and is certainly much more fun than spending the holiday alone, a situation which ofter arises as these students live too far away to go home.

This is the only social activity promoted by FROS. Programs within the Campus involving Overseas Students are the responsibility of ISO and the Host Committee of the External Affairs Committee, working with FROS.

E. Manser Will Speak To Baha'is

Miss Elizabeth Manser, Victoria '52, will speak on "The Foundations of World Unity" tomorrow at 1.00 p.m. in Room 3, University College basement. This is the first of this year's weekly public meetings held by the Baha'i Student Group.

The Baha'i World Faith originated just over a century ago in Persia. Its founder, Baha'u'llah taught that all religions are expressions of the one God, but have revealed according to the developing capacity of mankind. The Baha'is believe Baha'u'llah to be the Manifestation of God in this age.

A central precept is the development of the awareness of the "oneness of mankind," and the Baha'i Faith is dedicated to the establishment of a world civilization upon this basis. Since the inception of the faith these teachings have caused peoples of many different racial and religious backgrounds to unite without prejudice or animosity in a world-wide community. The essential harmony of science and religion, compulsory education and equality of sexes are among other Baha'i beliefs.

Physical Education Classes For Women To Start Soon —Unpopular Elective Choice

Oh to be a freshie now that P.T.s' here. Cheer up girls, although Physical Education classes do start next Tuesday (the day after Thanksgiving), the course has been changed so radically that even a sophisticated soph would not be able to recognize it.

To gain standing in the subject, students will be required to take two elective courses for the entire year, instead of one elective and one course in gymnastics. They will have to attend twenty out of twenty-four classes in each elective, whereas under the old system only nine out of twelve classes each term in each course were compulsory.

"We feel that this is a step in the right direction, and a very progressive step," said Miss Zreda Slack, Director of the Department of Athletics and Physical Education for Women. "Students are now coming to us from secondary schools with a good back ground in gymnastics and a limited one in games. We feel once they reach university, that we should offer them games and sports that they have not covered."

There are sixteen activities, including badminton, tennis, golf-strokes, ballroom, modern and square-dancing and calling, fencing, archery, bowling, basketball and volleyball. Even figure-skating will be given during the fall, because the department is getting the ice frozen early. The time-table is planned so that each girl, no matter what her time-table is, has four choices for every hour that she is free.)

Only non-swimmers and camels will be unaffected by the change. The posture and swimming tests at the beginning of the year are still being held, and those who fail to pass them will take compulsory classes in swimming and posture.

If you still have a yen for exercise, however, gym classes are being offered as an elective. "I can't understand it," said one official sadly; "No one seems to be taking it."

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Staglag 17

The following will, without doubt, be discounted as the negligible mouthings of a mere woman, but this reviewer is getting mighty tired of war movies — good ones (like Stalag 17, here reviewed), and bad ones. Fourteen years of hot and cold war have produced a small number of excellent films on the subect, but nder the influence of the millions of feet of shallow, gory, repetitive celloid that have been wasted in the same manner, I only forcibly restrained myself from greeting Stalag 17, at the Imperial theatre, with a Bronx cheer.

However, the picture greeted the unprepared viewer with a Bronx cheer, so to speak. Stalag 17 is a moderately tough, seemingly realistic, and often excruciatingly funny view of a German prisoner-of-war camp during the Christmas season of 1944. The camp, Stalag 17, is occupied by six hundred American army sergeants. No comment.

The film was directed by Billy Wilder, from the recent highly successful stage play, but whoever designed the sets for the film version deserves a large share of the credit for its success: the uncompromising realism of Stalag 17's barracks and yards is admirable. It goes without saying that the realism of the events has probably been sacrificed for the sake of comedy, but then why not

The plot, as you probably are aware, hinges on the efforts of one barracks to uncover a Nazi spy in their midst. William Holden plays Sefton, whose shockingly successful horse-trading with the Nazi guards has made him the laest-liked man in the group. One novelty in Stalag 17 is the fac tthat though suspected of being a stool-pigeon, Sefton proves his innocence with insulting acuteness, and still remains unpopular, probably with good reason. The authors of the play, Don Bevan and Edmund Tyrzinski take a very light-hearted view of proceedings. And a good thing too.

One thought which Stalag 17 provoked: are we going to spend the rest of our film-going lives seeing standard frame pictures ruined by being stretched out "ON OUR HUGE PANORAMIC SCREEN?" I don't know if Stalag 17 was originally made in standard frame size, or whether the Imperial's screen just isn't high enough for even the ordinary super-size picture, but the excellent work of the camera-man was continally spoiled by having the top four or five feet of the frame cut off. The same thing happened to Shane, and to the recent regular-prices showing of The Snows of Kilimanjaro, at Shea's. The superb photography of Kilimanjaro, which I first saw in standard frame, really was ruined by the stretching process. Cinemascope tactics may be fine, providing the picture is shot that way, but there is no point in cutting out large portions of a carefully set-up image jst for the sake of noveity.

Book-Burning Suggestions

By ERIC NICOL

(This article, by columnist and humorist Eric Nicol, is reprinted from the Vancouver Province. Mr. Nicol examines the best known nursery stories and the drill manual of the armed forces and comes to the conclusion that these are subversive.)

The U.S. is burning books Senator McCarthy considers subversive. As one long concerned about the infiltration of Communist propaganda into our nursery stories, I trust that the good senator will add to his bonfire:

1. Little Red Riding Hood: 'Red' is the key word here. Disguised as a little girl, Marxism is portrayed as meeting the Wolf (capitalism) while taking food to Grandma (the proletariat). When the Wolf eats them, he is killed. This must burn.

2. Goldilocks and The Three Bears. In this poisonous fable, Goldilocks (free enterprise) plunders the home of the Bear (USSR). Actual home-life in Russia is falsified (porridge, chairs, beds, etc.) to create impression in child's mind that people live normal lives there. This must burn.

3. Mother Goose. A thinly-veiled attack on the American Eagle. The author of this bolshevik tale, a comic mouthpiece called Anonymous, also plays up the Momism in American life. The American mother must be defended against Red slander. This must burn.

4. One, two, button my shoe, Three, four, open the door . . . Here, ('open the door') is a cleancut attack on protective tariffs, the most vital support of our high standard of living. The deadly jingle goes on to urge actual revolution. "Five, six, pick up sticks, seven, eight, don't be late . . ." Once these subversive ideas are planted in the child's mind it might take five years subscription to Time to eradicate them. This must burn.

5. Four and twenty black birds, baked in a pie . . .

A distortion of living conditions of the Negro in this country, the favorite comic device for discrediting the American way of life. This must burn.

This is just a sampling of the Red-inspired literature flooding our nurseries. But the bonfire begs for bigger game.

For example, how many of us realize that the very drill manuals of our armed forces are full of Socialist propaganda? On virtually every page of these manuals we find the word 'left' — "left turn", "left wheel", etc. Obviously we must incinerate these traitorous drill books and issue new ones in which all movements are done by the right. Two wrongs do not make a right, but three rights make a left. 'No left turn' . . . on the American way of life.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The Varsity isn't a place where you'd normally expect to find dirty words in print but this is once we've got to use one. Athletic scholarships. There. We said it. That's what this column is about.

Any afternoon about five bells you can step into Varsity Stadium and see a couple of fellows who have different ideas to offer on the subject of playing your way through college One is Norm Williams, the slender young North Toronto hurdler, who treated the Canadian track and field record book with supreme disdain last summer and had a path beaten to his doorstep by the representatives of U.S. colleges. Norm didn't exactly brush them off but, after a brief look-see at Cornell University, he made what to an outsider looks like a highly nationalistic decision—he came back to Victoria College and the C. and F. course and happiest of all, the Varsity track team.

The other chap, who did his running south of the border and got a college degree to boot, is Don McEwen, Canada's most accomplished runner, perhaps, since Tom Longboat. This may come as a bit of a shock to those folk who deplore the emphasis on sports below the line but Don, while winning just about every championship in sight at the two-mile distance, also picked up a through education in Business Administration, good enough to land him a good position with a leading oil company.

Just to brief you on Don's record, he holds the U.S. national collegiate record for two miles—nine minutes and 1.9 seconds and has gone as low as 4:09 for the mile. He won the all-American two-mile championship in 1950 and 1951 and the Big Ten four-mile title the same two years. Which is a good deal of running. It seems fairly obvious that it didn't hurt his schooling any.

"Partically all our meets were on Saturdays," Don explains "and we'd leave on Friday night so we didn't miss any school." That's without mentioning the time spent in practice which would be every day but presumably after lecture hours.

Don has definite opinions on college sports which he feels have been mighty good to him. "Sports give you self confidence", he says, "but, most important, they give a fellow a chance to work and sacrifice for something besides himself".

And he's not likely to get much argument over those statements. But what about Norm Williams, the lad who turned down the sort of opportunity that Don McEwen found so advantageous. Not only was Norm rejecting a bushel of glory (providing, of course, that his hurdling continues to progress) and an education at a fine old Ivy League campus but he was even defying the tradition that has seen so many of Lloyd Percival's track students—Rich Ferguson and Pete Sutton to name a couple—emigrate to the Home of the Brave.

To partially understand his position, you must realize that the big goal for Canadian athletes at present is to snare the trip to Vacouver and the British Empire games next summer and to win some points for Canada. True, Norm could have run for Cornell and the Canadian team too but it might have been highly inconvenient to rush back and forth for trials and so forth.

Let Norm explain it "The reason runners come ahead so much when they go down there is because they run, run, run every day. I figured I could do the same thing here all winter. Besides, the coaching here is just as good".

Or, in short, he didn't think he had much to gain by leaving the old home town, which can be a very sound reason if you happen to like the place. And furthermore, the chief concern here is the future of the U. of T. track team and there's a wheezy old cliche about never looking gift horse in the same mouth.

Lukk Top Netter In Singles, Doubles

The Faculty, of Medicine opened the interfaculty sports season on a winning note yesterday when a fourth year Medsman, Gert Lukk, walked off with the senior intermural singles tennis championship. Later in the tourney, which was staged at the Toronto Lawn Tennis club on Rowanwood Ave., Lukk combined with an Engineer, Joe Akitt, to capture the doubles title.

Lukk replaces Varsity hockey player Ken Lawson as senior singles champ. Lawson, who moved on to pace Varsity to a tie with McGill for the intercollegiate title last year, wasn't around to defend his championship.

Lukk's opponent in the final of the week-long tournament was Don Rope, another former Varsity hockey star and now an OCE student. After coming close in the first set, losing only 6-4, Rope faded badly to lose the second and third sets by identical scores of 6-0.

Rope was in the doubles final, too, as he and Trinity's Robin Logie lost three straight to Lukk and Akitt. The scores were 6-4, 6-0, 6-2.

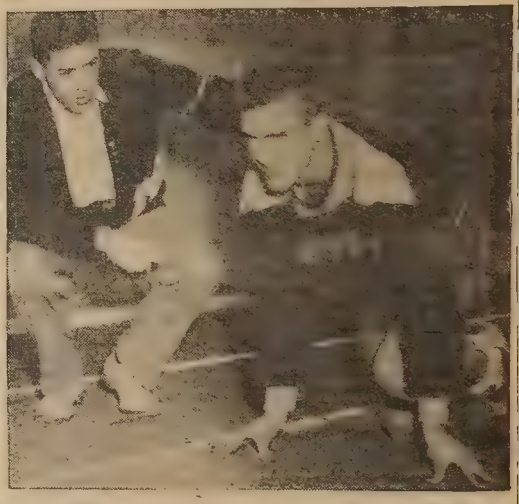
Phys-Ed Edges St. Hilda's As Female Softball Begins

By ANN STARK

Batter-r-r up. It's true opener of the of the women's intramural softball swing of '53. In one of Monday's noon-hour matches, P.H.E. III. out-played St. Hilda's I by a 1-0 score in a three-inning game on Trinity Field. At the end of the first inning there was no score, but late in the second inning, Phys-eds pulled ahead when Eleanor Angus hit a single to bring home the winning run and produce a 1-0 score. . . . . .



St. Hilda's fought hard to even the score and managed to put two on base in the first half of the third but disaster fell when the Phys-eds pulled a fancy play to tag out three St. Hilda's in a tricky triple play that finished the game. As time was too short, and P.H.E. III's were ahead, the last of the third inning wasn't played. It's too bad there isn't more time at noon to continue these games beyond three innings.

Greatly in need of practice, the Phys-eds were not nearly up to their usual standard. This is the team that won last year's intramural competition, and although it has retained most of the former players, it didn't show that old championship sparkle. The pitching of veteran Beryl Lewis was largely responsible for the victory of the P.H.E.'s. With a few more workouts under the able direction of coach Red Stephen, the man who drove the team to the top last year, they'll be running smoothly again.

Phil Challen pitched a red-hot game for St. Hilda's with catcher Ann Peppal backing her up.

The game had tremendous spirit and fever was running high when lecture time rolled around. Vic I battles U.C. on Trinity Field today. This one promises to provide some real entertainment for softball fans.

Lectures Never End

Norm Williams, (right) baggy sweat shirt and all, is listening here to an expert lecturer in the field under considera'ion. Giving a few pointers to Norm on the art of the flying start is Don McEwen, new assistant coach of the Varsity track team. McEwen, a graduate of the University of Michigan, was United States two-mile champion in 1950 and 1951 and holds the national collegiate record for the distance, nine minutes and 1.9 seconds.

Williams, a C. and F. freshman, is considered one of the best hurdlers in Canada and holds a dominion junior record for the 120-yard event. He comes to Varsity from North Toronto Collegiate.

Soccerites Soon Start

The interfaculty soccer schedule opens Thursday afternoon in a flurry of activity with three games scheduled.

St. Mike's A opens defence of its Group I title in a 12.30 game on the north field of the front campus, with Jr. SPS the opposition. At the same time, Pre Meds play Dentistry on the south field. Then, in a four o'clock game on the front campus, Trinity A and U.C. square off.

Last season, St. Michael's won the Division One title while Emmanuel copped the second division championship. Emmanuel upset the Irish in an all-Varsity playoff.

The Intramural Sports Department is still in the market for soccer officials and interested parties should apply to the office in Hart House.

The Forgotten Sport

By PAT SHELLY

That there is an intercollegiate rugger team on this campus, representing the University in games against colleges and clubs of Ontario and Quebec, is a fact unknown to most University of Toronto students. Indeed, that here is a game called "rugby", distinguishable from American rugby-football and from soccer is news even to many of those who pride themselves on a wide knowledge of sports. And this helps to explain Varsity's deplorable record in the game so far. Each year, the University has difficulty finding enough men with interest in, or knowledge of, the game to make up a team, and never does find enough to supply that reserve of players so necessary to a good team.

The general belief (among those who have heard of rugger) seems to be that it is an exclusively English game. Nothing is farther from the truth. Rugger is played in most Western European countries and every year, teams from Australia, South Africa and New Zealand visit Great Britain and the continent. In Canada, the game is popular on the east and west coasts. It is a truly international game, played between a greater number of countries over a larger area of the world than any other ball sport.

The name "rugby" is shared by the English and American games. This common name might suggest that one is a development of, or a deviation from, the other (which is not the case) and that the two games have some basic similarity (which is). Both games are played on the same kind of pitch. Each involves running with the ball, passing, kicking and tackling. In each, a score is made by carrying the ball over the goal line and converting the goal by kicking the ball over the bar between the posts. A rugger ball is oval but somewhat larger than that used in American football. How then do the games differ?

A rugger team consists of fifteen men: eight forwards (the scrum) six three-quarters and a fullback. The forwards play together in a pack. The three-quarters, spread in a line across the field, make ground by running with the ball, passing it from one to the other. They are supported by the forwards. No forward passing is allowed and no blocking. Only the man with the ball may be interfered with. When he is brought down, both scrums form round him and endeavour to get possession of the ball by heeling it back to the three-quarters who, when they receive it, resume the play.

Is it rough? Well, imagine yourself on the ground with the ball and sixteen men heaving, pushing and shoving over you, trying to heel the ball away from you. Is it tough? Rugger players wear no helmets or padding. Does the game require endurance? It usually lasts ninety minutes, during which time no substitutes are allowed and, should a man leave the field through injury, the team must play without him.

Though this article does not purport to argue the respective merits of rugger and American football, their basic similarity invites comparison. The American game is, perhaps, faster, with substitutes available to relieve tired players but rugger's fewer stops gives it more continuous movement.

All this has not been written merely to publicize rugger. It may be taken as an appeal for players. If you are interested and would like to play, you may join the team in training on the rear campus any evening between five and six o'clock. Ignorance of the rules need not deter you.

Because the university seeks to excel in all intercollegiate sports, we must withdraw from rugger altogether unless we can excel in the sport, and leave others to struggle for the honours lost to us by indifference.

Junior Track

The Varsity track and field season opens Thursday afternoon at 1.30 when the junior interfaculty meet is scheduled for Varsity Stadium. This meet is open to all undergraduate students except those who have been on an intercollegiate team or who have won first place at a senior intramural meet.

Events scheduled are discus, pole vault, high hurdles, 100 yards, 880 yards, high jump, 220 low hurdles, broad jump, one mile, javelin, 220 yards, three miles, shot put and 440 yards.

The senior interfaculty meet follows a week later on Thursday, Oct. 15, with the Bloor Bowl again the scene.

The Mud-Pie Again

Prosperity ?

The Editor,
The Varsity

In reply to last week's outbursts, it is significant that none of the writers denied the facts outlined. My article was one of a series I prepared, the ideas expressed being my own and not necessarily those of any other person or organization with which I am associated. The facts were compiled from various ridings in the province in which I was associated during the campaign. Perhaps this writer does not have the flair for writing as some others. However, the conviction is there and the hope that each reader will at least examine the situation themselves. Some people seem to feel that the Liberals won because of the prosperous times. But is this prosperity?

From Dominion Bureau of Statistics it is found that in Canada 641,820 households are overcrowded —meaning houses contain more people than they do rooms. 320,000 Canadian families are sharing accommodation. 457,570 homes are badly in need of repair. Two Million Canadian households—57.7 percent of the total, are still doing without automobiles.

In 1951, one million homes were without any kind of a washing machine and close to two million households without vacuum cleaners.

More than two in every five households are without telephones. 1,800,000 dwellings have no furnaces, 53.2 percent of Canadian households are without electric or mechanical refrigeration. 1,700,000 homes lack electric or gas stoves.

400,000 homes are without electric lights—26 percent of the households haven't been able to finance the project for running water in their houses. WHY—all these things lacking? ONE answer—High Taxes —High Prices.

Absurdity

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Again it is necessary to reply, I hope for the last time, to outrageous conservative propaganda and misinformation. Mr. Powell has dragged forward two tired old cases with which to convict the Liberals of universal dishonesty. These charges, while actually proven, unlike Mr. Rogers', resemble his in that they utterly fail to substantiate the Conservative claim that the Liberals deserved to lose on account of "corruption and extravagance." As the people saw, these cases were too few and too isolated.

So much for defence. Now to the attack. Mr. Powell says that Mr. St. Laurent was "outside the ranks of the party" in 1948. As veryone except Mr. Powell knows, Mr. St. Laurent was a member of the Cabinet since 1941. Such appalling ignorance of the contemporary political scene speaks for itself, and is an adequate commentary on current Conservative intellectual bankruptcy. It is all of a piece with that party's foolish campaign.

Let us hope that these absurdities will cease, so that the columns of The Varsity will no longer to be embarrassed with this Tory nonsense.

Fees Analysis

Editor
The Varsity:

Once again fees are up. In the less expensive faculty of Arts, fees have risen from $236 to $340 since 1948, a 44 percent increase in five years. The cost of obtaining a university education is becoming further and further beyond the means of those from working class or average income families. In budgeting for fees, books, room and board, and clothing, an ordinary out-of-town Arts student can't get by on less than $1200. Yet $1200 is not far from the half the yearly earnings of the average Canadian worker. The outlay of students in medicine, engineering and dentistry, where expensive books and instruments are involved, is about $400 higher than that of the Arts student. The person who comes from a large family, whose parents can not afford to supply him with room and board or the person who must support a family finds it extremely difficult to go to university if he can go at all. He is the victim of economic discrimination.

Economic Discrimination

Those who contend that there is no economic discrimination and everyone who wants a university education can have one, point to the present available scholarships and bursuries. While the present bursaries are indeed a help they are highly inadequate. Funds are limited to about 200 for an ordinary local student. Even this is only a small portion of a student's yearly expenses especially if he is enrolled in a course where expenses are high.

Consider the cost of the medical student. The annual questionnaire of the University of Toronto Medical Journal (March 1953) placed these questions to the 1953 graduating class, "Did you earn enough from all sources (including DVA, scholarships, savings) to meet your medical educational expenses?". Of the 101 students who returned the questionnaire, 78 percent replied "No". "If not, how much financial help did you require over the six years?". The average of the figures stated was $3100 — over $500 per year.

Part Time Student

In order to get a bursary one must have a good academic record—at least a 'B' average. But many financially deficient students find it necessary to work part time during the school term thus reducing their chances of obtaining a high standard.

It is said that the fees increases were necessitated by high costs (mainly salaries). But fees make up a very small fraction of the university income. Most of the university income is derived from private sources and government grants. With the large surplus which Canada's wealthiest province possesses, our provincial government could easily have offset the present rise.

To make education in Canada available solely on the basis of merit rather than on the basis of money, direct federal aid as well as increased provincial aid to the needy students is necessary. Students, educators, and all people interested in the further development of Canadian culture and technology are repeatedly making this demand. In 1949, NFCUS requested the federal government to grant the universities 5 million dollars to provide a $500 scholarship to each of 10,000 needy students. Last February 13 a NFCUS delegation visited Prime Minister St. Laurent seeking more federal aid.

The Part of NFCUS

To date, the modest requests of NFCUS have been refused. Prior to the February 13 delegation, NFCUS sponsored a petition to publicise and register support for their demands. Such a petition was an excellent idea but unfortunately its duration was very short, and very little of a campaign was created around it. Many students are not aware that there even was such a petition. The refusal of the federal government to grant the modest requests of NFCUS should not discourage us from leading the campaign for federal aid. In fact, a far stronger campaign should now be undertaken—one that would bring the economic problems of the less well-to-do student to the nation and arouse widespread interest in the Canadian community as a whole. I think that the Toronto representatives to the coming NFCUS conference in mid-October should speak up for the idea of a national petition campaign to secure direct federal and increased provincial aid to students. Only when higher education is based solely on merit and not on financial status will the universities be able to make their maximum contribution to the development of Canadian arts, letters, and science.

Unpopular Facts

The Editor,
The Varsity.

As a member in good standing of the Campus Conservatives, though not entombed within the stone walls of Trinity, as most of our members are not, I wish to lay down my capgun long enough to criticize our critic.

It appears that when Mr. Jackman wrote his baseless attack, he had not yet fully recovered from an attack of seasickness acquired on the boat returning from a summer vacation in Europe, which necessitated his absence from most political activities.

It is not strange that Mr. Jackman, a frustrated Conservative, who has seen his old-school traditions dashed to the ground, should resort to meaningless innuendoes against the more progressive elements within the campus Club. These elements form a segment of the truly progressive Conservatives, whose opinions are being more attentively listened to in party councils. Mr. Jackman, who considers himself a Conservative,

What Cause?

It seems that some University of Toronto clowns have given us a definition for 'Character'. It seems that the superlative in brainless mischief is the most qulifying requisite for the name.

Already a car has been procured painted and dismantled on the lawn of the Royal Ontario Museum. The dozen or so students in charge call themselves "The Characters", and are stating, 'This is just the beginning.'

The president of this University was attacking the pressure of modern society toward standardization, and in advocating the need for characters, must have had something original in mind. But how could anyone misrepresent themselves so badly. No one will mistake an ass for a character.

"We aree peeved at the presdent," the students claim, "and have decided to take up the cause." But they don't elaborate on the cause they have taken up. If they would ask themselves what point there is to the program they have in mind, they might, and might not, realize they are being a little primitive. Modern methods to attain the ends mentioned require some degree of intelligence, with the ability to appreciate, rather than irritate, people.

Far be it from the Varsity to condemn a few intelligent pranks. A pot can't call a kettle black. But to create general disturbance in the name of having original personality, and cast aspersions on the character itself, is a breach of humanity. It appears that this group is out to smear the respect individualists deserve, and reduce their prestige to nothing. That would leave vandals on a plane with characters, and may be the hope of the students involved.

Worst of all it may be that these students do not want people with any colour in their personality to do better than they can. This is nothing more than uncontrolled envy, and the mud they are throwing will only debase the respect we have for both in their own right.

Electioneering

Behind The Scenes

The writer, here, expresses some opinions on the behind-the-scene development of election campaigning. All ideas in this article are fictitious. Any resemlance to elections past or present is purely co-incidental. . . . . .

By JOE SLOGAN

Yes, you can be a member of Parliament, a member of that honorable body that makes history, laws, and mistakes. All you have to do is follow these instructions carefully. They have proved successful for generations of backbenchers and you too can be added to that mundane list. If you are doing poorly in your law practise, or if your corner store is becoming a liability, or if you have nothing better to do, run for parliament. If you cannot think for yourself and are a good follower you are ideal.

THE PRE-REQUISITES are few. You must be a government supporter, (until death does you part). You must find a traditionally government seat. If you fulfil these conditions let us begin.

The most important item is to become nominated. This is the real battle requiring intelligence, cunning and deceit. The key man for your success in this field is the constituency president. The president will work hardest for the one from whom he will gain the most. Therefore, make sure you can influence him and that he is your friend. You can insure this by stacking the organisational meeting to elect your man. In gratitude for your services, contributions, and promises, the president will see that the majority of the delegates appointed are fully aware as for whom they will vote at the nominating convention. The key to success is of course maintaining the strictest secrecy, as to your strategy.

AS SOON AS THE BALLOTS are counted and you have won, your surprised, your enraged, MP opponent will deliver a blast at the convention, accusing it of all sorts of nasty things. In the end he will say he will go it alone. Encourage him in this respect for it will mean that he will immediately be put on the blacklist of the party. At the same time it will assure you of all the help and money that you need to beat this nasty man. Now that the MP is on the black list you proceed to make him look very ugly to the public. This is very easily done if you use your imagination.

NOW THAT YOU HAVE EMERGED the hero and the idol of your party, proceed with the campaign. Your colleagues in Ottawa have seen to it that the returning officer is an honest and amiable man who is willing to give and take advice. So your first stop is the returning officer. He will be in a dilemma as to finding DRO's, enumerators, and poll clerks. You can assist him by supplying a list of your poll captains and other supporters in each poll. Rest assured that the proper people will be put in each poll. This will make it much easier on your pocketbook as they will receive money for their servcies from the government as well as your contributions. Also you will not need scrutineers as you are already well represented at the polls. The enumerators will see that you know who votes how. Your poll captains will see that the desired vote is brought to the polls and the undesirable vote is discouraged as much as possible. Thus, without so much as a ripple on the surface your election is assured.

NOW FOR THE OVERT CAMPAIGN. These are mere details. You must see that your posters are plastered everywhere and that all opposition posters are torn down. You must make a regular tour of all the hotels buying beer for everyone in a grand manner that will show you are "one of the boys." Then you must throw large drinking parties in all important polls. Do not bother much with politics yourself. The party will tell you all you should know. Call a few meetings with prominent speakers, preferably cabinet ministers. They will tell the people that they should vote for you because you will make a wonderful member. Don't underrate the power of suggestion. Then deliver a few radio addresses that have been prepared for you. Make yourself appear a Santa Claus in disguise.

ELECTION DAY ROLLS AROUND and your well-oiled machine moves into motion. A few complaints will come in about stickers on cars, about partial DRO's, about people who should not be on the voters list. Express the greatest sympathy to those complaining and say you will immediately check your over-enthusiastic supporters. In the evening your landslide is rolling in. You have arranged a grand finale with enough liquor to float a battleship. During the week after the election keep a stack of ten dollar bills present for you are bound to have a hundred callers seeking a bonus.

Your future is now clear-cut. Pack up and go to Ottawa. You will spend the next four years bored and silent. Then return covered with glory to run again—if you are lucky.

A Train Ticket, Gauthier?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I see by the letters printed in last Wednesday's edition of your noble journal, on the subject of officially-sanctioned non-conformity, that God's gift to the Gauthier household is back with us again, large as life. (Or shall I say, death warmed over'?) And eager as ever, apparently, to show these local boobies that the crown of natural superiority rests yet securely on his cadaverous noggin.

Our revered prexy, Dr. Smith, has obviously profited from D. G.'s presence on this otherwise undistinguished campus. However, one suspects to Gaut's utter horror, the prez. has gone too far in his well-meaning enthusiasm: he simply wants everyone to be like Gautier! Simple fellow. As though it could be.

Noble creature! Brave forthright soul! Once again this black-rubbered champion of the great but obscure (i.e. unknown to the herd), this defender of what never has been defended before (who cares what the cause is?) has raised his croaking battle-cry, "No compromise with the enemy, ordinary mortal mentality!" Once again the banner is unfurled: "Gauthier and God (in that order, please)."

Back to the drawing-board, there goes Gaut, stout fellow, to show us his teeth (or, rather, his behind, for is he not still one step ahead of us all?). And he comes through: all the peasants want in. So he threatens to secede, and we are all to say: "Wotta man! Only a real character could think up a bright idea like that. No hope for us. Once again the old Gaut reigns supreme, and one can see his cohoris, his coterie, chortling in glee. The wise crowd has stood off the boobies again.

Gauthier, oh Gauthier! Listen to me half a mo. Toronto is really too provincial; a more creative atmosphere, in some part of this wee planet, will surely prove mere equal to your genius. Thy great wisdom is needed elsewhere. Can I buy your train-ticket for you? Any where? Please, old boy.

Posters

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I would like to take exception to your particularly sarcastic editorial on "Bookstore Posters." I don't think that this club is a PRIVILEGED one because it obtained this wonderful publicity space, but certainly an enterprising club, which showed some foresight in displaying their poster. Probably not being able to afford a full-page advertisemept in your paper, they turned to a more economical and just as good a way of announcing their social. It's certainly not a matter of privilege!

Perhaps you did not like the poster because it wasn't a brilliant Toulouse-Lautrec, but what can a poor peasant do but try? At least its main purpose has been achieved . . . that is of being noticed . . . by at least one person!

Unfair To Rogers

The Editor,
The Varsity,

The Varsity, I feel, is going too far when it literally grinds a person like Ted Rogers "into the stones" of Trinity College. The picture in Monday's paper entitled "Worm" and featuring Mr. Rogers being forced "back" into the ground" before the ominous threat of shotguns held by certain Trinity students, was, I believe, "misinterpreted" by the anonymous person who wrote the commentary beneath the picture. That person obviously took advantage of a harmless "skit" thought up by Rogers himself, (i.e. to show Mr. Jackman that he could take a joke aimed at himself), in order to smear his name and discourage the enthusiasm he has for his convictions.

I feel that The Varsity is being unfair to Ted Rogers, just as it would probably be unfair to anyone with new ideas. Nobody likes to have his political beliefs upset by cold hard facts. Therefore, one should not merely ridicule the person for his convictions, and refuse to face the facts.

The last person who wrote in supporting Ted had his initials "accidentally" printed in small letters, and the article, as a letters, and the article, as a whole, smeared with printer's ink. The same will probably happen to my account, if as I doubt, it is even allowed into the paper.

This, I conclude with. Te Varsity is obviously presenting to you readers a biased picture of what goes on. I suggest an improvement.

Yours sincerely,
P.H. Mac Names, II Arts.

Dissenters

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I dissent. I say let's pour oodles and oodles of concrete on the front (or back) campus, or any other convenient spot, and let's make a parking lot. Brand me as a violent tory who would deprive the student body of a beauty spot in order to park his cold machine. Call me a fanatic, but I feel that I should not have to miss the first morning lecture, every time, because I have the misfortune of owning a car which I drive to school—only when an extreme necessity for it arises.

I also feel that I should not have to abuse the automobile by trying, all too vainly, to cram it in a tiny space on some narrow street.

It seems that every other large institution in Toronto provides parking facilities of some nature, except the U. of T.

I say let's dissent, let's make a parking lot.

Easing Debt McGill SEC Offers Help

Montreal, — CUP — More than $5,000 has been offered by the Students' Executive Council of McGill University to the Administration to help solve the financial problems resulting from the loss of Federal Aid.

The SEC voted unanimously last Friday to split the profits of the Bookstore about evenly with the University Administration. The bookstore is owned and operated by the SEC.

The SEC is giving the money to the Administration without any strings attached, they announced.

McGill, along with the other Universities in Quebec lost their federal grants when the Provincial Government refused to accept any such further grants last February.

All fees, except those in Agriculture were raised last year at McGill by fifty dollars, in direct response to the action of the Provincial Government.

The matter of federal grants has since been referred to the Quebec Commission on Provincial Rights. According to the McGill Daily, McGill University is preparing a brief to this Commission, which it will present to the Commission sometime in November.

Pickersgill Approves Manitobans

The Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, Secretary of State and MP for Bonavista-Twillingate, Nfld., spoke last night to a Hart House graduate dinner meeting.

While he asked that his remarks should not be published, he offered a few comments for Varsity readers.

Mr. Pickersgill expressed his approval of the "extreme good taste" of the University of Toronto in choosing a President from Manitoba, his native province.

He ridiculed reports of his succeeding to the Premiership of Canada with the one word, "Rubbish".

He also said that education was his profession, and had salaries been higher he would still probably be leading an academic life.

Western Will Support NFCUS Raise to 40c

London, Oct. 6—(Special)—The University of Western Ontario delegation to the NFCUS Conference in Montreal next week will support a fee raise to 40 cents, it was learned last night. This is double the present student levy of 20 cents. Last year the University of Montreal proposed that the NFCUS fee be raised to $1.00 and withdrew from the Federation until this suggestion be approved.

The Western delegation are not considering withdrawing from NFCUS if a raise in fees is not approved, it was reported today.

UNIVERSITY OF MONTREAL

Montreal, Oct. 1—(CUP)— The University of Montreal decided last night to send observers to the forthcoming NFCUS Conference. U of M feels that NFCUS should have additional funds and should stress purely Canadian activities.

MCGILL

Montreal, Oct. 2—(CUP)— The Students' Executive Council have instructed their delegates to the NFCUS Conference to disapprove any raise in the NFCUS fee.

A majority of the SEC Council felt that it would not be wise to gamble on the NFCUS claim that important accomplishments would be made if they were to receive "Betting on a losing horse."

TORONTO

At a Students' Council Meeting in Toronto last week it was decided not to take a stand on the question and to wait on developments. A SAC meeting is to be held this Thursday.

U.B.C.

Vancouver, Oct. 6—(Special)—University of British Columbia delegates have been instructed to support the fee raise to $1.00. They feel that NFCUS must have more funds.

U.B.C. will have NFCUS only if compelled, it was reported yesterday. There was no elaboration on this statement.

Orientation SAC Plans Incomplete

The subject of Orientation lectures for freshmen, so far neglected this school year, will be put on the agenda of the next Students' Administrative Council meeting, an informed source reported.

Due to poor attendance at the three lectures last fall, and also to the lateness of the season, it is believed that little action will be taken this year.

SAC Considers IUS Affiliation At Special Meet

A special meeting of the Students' Administrative Council has been called to consider the question of the National Federation of Canadian University Students' associate membership in the International Union of Students.

John Stalker, President of the SAC announced yesterday that the emergency meeting will be held at the Board Room of the Mining Building at 7.30 p.m. this Thursday.

The question was raised when a meeting of the Student Christian Movement last Wednesday passed a resolution recommending that NFCUS take the lead in the Western world and join IUS, an organization from which it has shied in the past, for its obvious communist-domination.

"The SCM made this proposal", said Rev. Roy G. DeMarsh, General Secretary of the SCM in Toronto yesterday, " because IUS has made it possible for groups to join as associate members only for the first time this year.

"At the meeting of IUS congress this summer, a changed attitude denoting a strong desire to once more be united with all Western student unions became very apparent. An amendment to their constitution now allows these union to participate in IUS as associate members, but at the same time rejects that part of the official policy which they cannot support," he announced.

Stalker said, "The SAC will have to consider the SCM's recommendation carefully. To turn down the IUS's proposal might be a better proposition for them than for us to accept it. The Council should see Chuck Taylor's report first (Taylor was the NFCUS—SCM observer at the congress this summer) and the matter should be put before the whole student body for decision." Stalker added that he did not "think the SAC could send a delegation with any decision if it did not take it to the Student body first without going beyond its rights."

The SCM also passed a resolution at its last meeting urging NFCUS to re-open discussion on the Russian Student Visit question with a view to implementing such a visit this year. This resolution has not yet been presented to the SAC.

"For my money last year's mandate from the students still holds," said Scott Symons, Chairman of NFCUS on the SAC, yesterday. A vote was taken in all colleges and faculties last year to determine whether the students were in favour of $1.00 NFCUS fees and a Russian student visit. Both were favoured by a large majority. "The $1.00 will have to be passed by the Senate of the University" Symons said.

Symons, who will represent Toronto at the NFCUS conference next week, had no comment to make on the proposed association. Ken Cork, president of the Victoria College Union, reported that the VCU assembly discussed the proposal at their meeting Monday night. The motion, introduced by members of the SCM, was tabled but no decision was reached. He said, "The principal of co-operation may be good but the NFCUS should proceed with caution. It must be remembered that the IUS is a well-backed, highly organized and very clever organization. It may be difficult to establish a trust for one another but never let it be said that the West has closed the doors to the proposal."

Rev. DeMarsh said that "from the political and diplomatic point of view there is now no voice from North America speaking in IUS and all the delegates from the Asian countries are not receiving the expressed opinion of Canadian students: We are trusted in a way that the US and Britain are not since we are not suspected of colonial imperialism."

Notice

A special meeting of the Students' Administrative will be held on Thursday night in the Board of the Room of the Mining Building, at 7.30 p.m. The question whether the National Federation of Canadian University Students should become an associate member of IUS will be discussed.

Vic's Annual Apple Battle On Again This Thursday

The spirit of Bob Beare moves again. Victoria's annual battle between the sophs and froshs is to be waged again this Thursday at 3:00 p.m. Bob was a janitor at Victoria who formed the beginning of the Bob Revue and the famed apple battle wherein the frosh try and try to climb the greased pole and retrieve the helmet atop said unclimable pole . . . unclimable to the frosh that is.

This is a culmination of all the 'bitterness' the sophs hold for the frosh. It marks the end of the initiation of the hapless frosh and their final acceptance by the always-victorious sophs after six weeks of initiation. The torture period has included house-hops, stunt nights with beauty contests and today, the lucky frosh are going on a bus ride (heh, heh). This series of frosh orientations will end at a Soph-Frosh dance where the sophs and frosh kiss and make up.

The battle has always been won by the sophs for the past sixty-odd years. The frosh just don't seem to be able to wade through the seething mucky mess of mud, flour, cement, water and defending sophs surrounding the pole (all supervised by competent referees, of course). Last year the battle was highlighted by the arrival of the [illegible] over the [illegible] were still failures at removing the 2, 3 and 4th.

"But," says Hugh Hanson, leader of the frosh, 'The sixty year jinx is over. With the advent of germ warfare and the resources of the McCallum press for propaganda the Frosh expect to completely demoralize the Sophs, thus making an intensive ground attack, covered by extensive aerial bombardments sure steps to victory. Ambulances have been ordered to bring aid to the defenders."

The reply of Ray Atkin was quite to the point. The leader of the Sophs, said "Medical aid will definitely be needed . . . for the Frosh. We have no doubt that the pole will remain standing all afternoon."

Basil Moore, publicity director, hopes the Bob Apple battle takes place without any outside interference as happened last year. If it does occur again, he said, "they will be soundly repulsed as they were last year by the hearty Vic Frosh."

Victoria has in the last two years introduced "constructive" initiations. Last year the Frosh planted trees and the year before they painted up at Geco. This year who knows? Freshmen, be prepared!

Incidentally the Bob [illegible] be first show on the campus has come up with an original show called "[illegible] Wolves" for Nov.

What's In Store?

Potts And Mugs

By MIKE ERDEI

Where can one buy a beer mug on this campus? At the Engineering Society store. This store sells everything from thumb tacks to jewelry. Engineers buy all that they need there except textbooks.

The store is the headquarters of the Engineering Society. All the business of the Society is done in the office. The Society trophies are kept safely hidden there. These include a chair, allegedly from Trinity, which appeared in the store after the freshman tour, and the original Jerry P. Potts trophy. In the back room the Society Executive hold their meetings; Toke Oike is written; and Skule Nite, the Skule auction, and the chariot race are born.

This year two new girls, Nancy Jamieson, and Marilyn "Boots" Hines serve the customers. Nancy is a newcomer to this campus, while Marilyn worked last year in the University Book store. They not only look after the store, but also do all the typing and bookkeeping of the Engineering Society.

The store was started at the turn of the century by the Engineering Society, so that the engineers would not have to go downtown to buy their drafting materials. It has never been moved from its original location on the first floor of the Skule House. Between 1946 and 1950 the society ran two similar stores in Ajax. The store caters mainly to engineers, but anyone can buy things there.

Alec Pathy, III SPS, Second Vice-President of the Engineering Society, is in charge of the operation of the store. It is run as a non-profit organization, with any surplus going to subsidize Skule Nite, and the Skule dinner. According to Pathy sales for this year to date are $15,000, the same as for the same period last year. At the beginning of the year there is always a rush of freshmen buying slide rules and drafting instruments.

Irish, Barbarians Visitors For Rugger On Weekend

The U of T rugger team started the year with a serious handicap when over half last year's team failed to return mainly due to graduations. So, although there are several promising newcomers, the squad still needs recruits and will welcome new players.

Two games are carded this weekend on the back campus for Saturday at 2.30 against Toronto Irish second, and Monday at 2.30 against Toronto Barbarians.

Newcomers, Malcom Drummond-Hay and Phil Sacre will be competing for the fullback position. Both show a lot of promise and the loser of the position will probably be moved to backfield.

In the backfield, William Chadwick will take over the scrum-half position, left vacant by Mike Miller's graduation. Veteran Bob Montgomery will play stand-off. The two centre and wings are still uncertain but the choice will probably be from veterans Bob Trillia and Rick Anderson and newcomers John Lee, Stan Lepper, John Taylor and one of the aspiring full backs.

The scrum positions are just as unsettled as the backfield. Hugh Jenkins will hook, supported by Dave Dunsmuir and Roy Campbell, all seasoned players. Veteran Ron Ham and newcomer Dave Fayle should provide the push in the second row and Big Harry Robinson will be playing lock. The wingbreadks will be filled by veteran Karl Riedemann and newcomer Mike Laughton.

'We're Sorry'

Due to an unfortunate succession of crossed wires and misinformation the Varsity has done a Skuleman, not to mention the whole Engineering school a grave injustice. This morning, in reporting that Gert Lukk had won the interfaculty tennis championship, it was stated that he is a fourth-year Medsman, which is emphatically not the case. Let it be known, for once and for all, that Mr. Lukk is a fourth-year SPS student, and proud of it.

After all, there are only 10,000 students on the campus. You'd think the Varsity could keep track of them all.

McFarlane

SPS Seconds For Interfac

SPS football enthusiasts are still hopeful of fielding two squads as has been the practice in previous years. To date the lack of interest in practice has been the chief drawback. The final decision will rest on tomorrow's turnout. This call is not intended for those who are already with the teams but for those who for reasons unknown have not seen fit to give the teams the support they deserve. The place is the back campus, the time is 4.30, the results directly dependent on turnout.

McFarlane Is Workhorse For Varsity Blues

You find them in every sport, those athletes who are key men on their teams, hightly-skilled at their particular specialty, yet who don't have that extra bit of whatever it is that stirs a stadium full of people to cheering.

One such player on the Varsity Blues roster is Bill McFarlane. For the last three years, Bill has played the left halfback position just about as efficiently as any one in the senior intercolligiate league and yet has never been a star, in the usual sense of the word. The main reason is that he is a workmanalike football player who goes about his tasks steadily and without much fanfare. As a result, he has never been the campus hero like some of his team mates.

At the same time, he has been one of the more consistent operators on the squad. In 1951, his first year of senior ball, he was voted most valuable player on the intercollegiate champion aggregation of that year. Last fall, he wasn't quite so effective, averaging 3.6 yards in 47 plays along the ground, which means that he carried the ball eight time a game, about as much work as any one on the team did. His forte, though, has always been runbacks, and and last season, he ran back 17 punts for a total of 85 yards and four kickoffs, gaining back 20 yards a try. This season, his last with Varsity, may well be his best. He got away to a good start in last Saturday's opener, coming up with one of his best efforts since donning a Blue uniform and scoring one touchdown.

Bill's hometown team was Hamilton Technical School—now amalgamated with Hamilton Central. In his high school days, he played against Hamilton Central and one of his opponents was Al Kocman, the bowlegged little back who just about paced Queen's to an upset over the Blues last Saturday. He played for the intermediate team in 1950, being ineligible for senior ball in his freshman year, and then moved right up to senior company the next fall.

A six-foot 175-pounder, 23-year-old Bill graduates next spring in Civil Engineering. He's making no plans for the future at this early date. About professional football Bill says "Sure, if somebody wanted me".

His sure tackling and dogged running might not be lost in pro ball at that.

Weather No Friend For Gals' Softball Opener

The softball season might have opened Monday, but the softball weather didn't really get going till yesterday at noon when Vic firsts took UC for a 4-1 win.

Several shivering spectators huddled together as the wintery blasts flew across Trinity field but no one on either team seemed to be phased by the temperature. The only thing that bothered the gals, as usual, was time. The regular time for the ladies' bouts runs to three innings but as has been the case for many of this year's as well as last season's meets, this has had to be cut to a couple and perhaps a half.

Both pitchers Mary Gemmel (Vic), Heather Chapman (UC), were opponents last year. Mary Foster, a first year gal at Vic, playing an excellent first base, hit a triple in the first inning. UC's single was tallied early in the second on a steal.

Saint Mike's and Meds defaulted Monday, which did not look good for an opening day. Let's not have any more of this!

Another Vic squad eked out Saint Hilda's 5-4 in the third Monday bout. Vic made all five tallies in the second coming behind a 3-0 deficit at the end of the opener

ART REVIEW

Varley At Vic

Fred Varley, one of the few remaining members of the famous Group of Seven, was the guest of honour at a tea in Victoria College, yesterday afternoon. The tea marked the opening of an exhibition of Mr. Varley's work, held in Alumni Hall.

The artist discussed his work, which represents many years of doing what he feels best suited for. Asked if he considered that he had progressed, Mr. Varley said he did not consider progress a matter of years. He expressed impatience with galleries and earnest types who ask; "When did you do it?". "How long did it take?", "What brushes did you use?" and such-like non-essential technicalities. "What matters," he stated, "is that "spasmodic something" which makes a man a little more than human, for just a little while." He never answers the questions.

Mr. Varley's landscapes have the sombre, subdued colours and bold techniques charactaristics of the Group, but they appear softer, deeper, lacking the harsh clarity found in so much of their work. While the other members have stressed the lonesomeness, the unfriendliness and the solemnity of Canada's unspoiled areas, Mr. Varley seems to have found something in the land that loves people. His are the kind of scenes in which people can feel at home. The other painters have tended to see man as an intruder, a passing parasite on the bare, muscular body of Canada.

This sympathy for human beings is expressed more obviously in the portraits formal and informal, included in the show. There are an indication of Mr. Varley's versatility. Now 72, he has not settled into a cut and dry style, but is still experimenting with new techniques, subjects and ideas. The latest portrait in the collection was completed on Monday of this week. The artist dabbed an index finger to show that it was still wet. His usual practice is to mark each completed canvas with his thumbprint.

"It's not just swank" he explained, and went on to point the importance of an artist's hallmark on his work. If the Old Masters had thought of it, there would not be so much forgery practised on them, he asserted.

The showing in Alumni is doubly impressive, in that it is the first exhibition to gather the paintings in one place. Visitors to Vic should drop in for a look at a Canadian pioneer, who hasn't stopped pioneering at time of present writing.

Not The Same

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

A Vital Issue

A special meeting of the SAC has been called to discuss and make decisions on a very vital issue in the field of international student relations—the possible associate affiliation of NFCUS with the International Union of Students.

There is no simple answer to this question. NFCUS, if it decided to affiliate, would be entering an organization on the side of a minority group, an organization that has adopted some policies completely unacceptable to Canadians, and an organization whose leadership has often followed a politically partisan line.

Yet the SAC should instruct its NFCUS delegates to press for affiliation.

Why?

In the first place, we could use a bit of co-operation to help fuse the divisions created by the cold war. Any geography text will show that this is one world. Why then, live as if it were two? The basis of getting together is understanding, and the basis of understanding is knowledge. What better way to attain this than by direct contact?

In the second place, the arguments previously held up against affiliation (in 1947, 1948, and 1950) are not as pertinent at this time. The situation is different. In 1953 IUS is asking NFCUS to join as an associate member, a major concession on the part of IUS. The Canadian federation can, under this arrangement, participate more actively in IUS practical projects, while at the same time disagreeing fully with the political policies and coloration of the IUS executive. IUS appears to be meeting us half way. Why can't we reciprocate?

Thirdly, there is little or no reason to continue strutting around in a bull-headed manner with the attitude: "We disagree with your opinions and if we can't have more say in this group, then to heck with you." If that were the Russian attitude in the United Nations then surely there would be no UN.

In the fourth place, associate membership will provide Canadians with an opportunity to meet and work with students whose situation, both educational and political, is far different from theirs. It will give Canadians information about students from other parts of the world. And more important, it will allow Canadians to give to other students—and particularly those from behind the Iron Curtain—information about ourselves, our institutions, and our "democracy". We should have enough faith in the principles behind our way of life not to be afraid to defend them in any world forum.

Fifthly, the world situation demands more internationalism. Gone are the days of isolationism. NFCUS must realize it has a role to play, not only in Canada, but in the world as a whole.

In the sixth place, we will, by refusing associate membership, turn our backs on what appears to be a reasonable basis for co-operation. What a handy propaganda weapon this could be in the hands of the IUS.

Lastly, NFCUS can again foster student interest in an international question (such as it did on the Russian student exchange) in the hope that it will stimulate a nation-wide interest in NFCUS itself. In the long run the national student federation will be strengthened if it can reach a unified and positive decision on this question. And it may well be that NFCUS could use some strengthening.

What's Behind It?

The Story of IUS

With associate membership in the International Union of Students open to Western Universities, The Varsity presents a resume of IUS developments.

The International Union of Students (IUS), an organization of students from all over the world, came into being on August 27, 1946, at a meeting of a million and a half students from 38 countries, held in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

IN GENERAL, ITS PURPOSE is to satisfy the needs and demands of students throughout the world. In the words of its constitution the IUS was born to: ". . . build again a better world, desirous of liberty, peace and progress; . . . to take that place in the vanguard of the youth of the world which we have held so often before in the course of history; . . . to defend the rights and interests of students, to promote improvement in their welfare and standard of education, and to prepare them for their tasks as democratic citizens."

The idea of IUS was first acted upon in London, England, in the summer of 1945 where an International Preparatory Committee (IPC) was set up. The IPC was to lay the groundwork for the representative student congress held in Prague the following year. It did and an IUS constitution was written and adopted.

FROM THE VERY BEGINNING it was clear that the Union was to be split into blocs. A delegate at Prague representing the Canadian Federation of Newman Clubs reported: ". . . one could not help but see that one group intended to dominate the Assembly."

This basic division came to a head when the Dutch delegation walked out (in 1946) refusing to take their seats on the IUS Council. Their statement reads: "The Dutch delegation regrets very much the decision, but it has been taken unanimously because of the fundamental objections against the foundations of the constitution and against the tendency of this Congress."

THIS SET THE PATTERN on which most of the other fourteen "western" national student unions later refused to join IUS or left the organization. But this did not end the several times these unions attempted to reach a common basis of co-operation with IUS, moments filled with frustration, failure, defeat, regret, and confusion.

In 1946 the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) was not sufficiently organized to have a representative at the Prague Congress. By the end of that year, however, it was settled enough to consider investigating IUS and sending three delegates to the 1947 Prague meeting. On returning, all three recommended that NFCUS join IUS.

IT WAS THE PRACTICAL ASPECT of the IUS projects that interested the Canadian students. The opportunity for international contacts and assistance in non-partisan work in the international field were the appeals which kept Canadian interest in IUS alive.

The 1947 Winnipeg NFCUS meet, on the advice of these observers, finally decided to affiliate with IUS conditionally for two years. If, in that time, IUS had not made changes in some of the points which were felt not to be in line with the democratic heritage of Canadian students, then NFCUS would dis-affiliate.

THE 1947 NFCUS meet revealed three lines of argument that have remained to this day with the NFCUS-IUS dispute. (1) IUS was communist-dominated and NFCUS should stay out of it. (2) IUS, because it had split into blocs, was weak and therefore could not be expected to accomplish anything — so why join. (3) Get into world affairs, let Canadian opinions be voiced, and try to change IUS so that it might become an acceptable organization to work with.

Meanwhile, a Canadian delegation set out to put the finishing touches to the affiliation. It was at this time that the 1948 Czech Coup burst in upon the IUS planners. Because of the weak stand IUS took on the treatment accorded Czech students by the new Czech government, the United States student union resigned from the international body. While the British National Union of Students felt that the whole Czech affair was "over-exaggerated" and did not immediately withdraw, the plans for the Canadian affiliation were momentarily withdrawn. Further resignations were to follow that of the U.S.

THE CANADIAN DELEGATES returned and tried to sound out student opinion on the matter across Canada. Paralleling this, another issue began to take shape that, in the end, was to prove fatal to the NFCUS affiliation application —that of forming a "western" international union.

While it planned to offer its application to the IUS, the NFCUS delegation worked (and quite stupidly, in public) to form a western group to overtake IUS leadership. These proposals to "reform" the IUS led to the rejection of the NFCUS application at the Paris Congress in 1948. But NFCUS has annually sent observers since.

THE IDEA OF A SEPARATE WESTERN union, however, persisted. A meeting of student unions of the fourteen western counrties was held in Stockholm in December of 1950 and laid preliminary plans. The Edinburgh conference in the following year set up the Co-Ordinating Secretariat (CoSec) of national student unions in the "west." Last year CoSec met in Copenhagen and this year will get together in Istanbul, Turkey.

All this combined to delay any unity of the IUS and the western studen tunions. While the 1950 NFCUS conference voted in favor of affiliation no concrete step has been taken in that direction.

NOW, THREE YEARS LATER, the entire question is again placed before a NFCUS gathering. But on slightly different trems. IUS has made important concession this year in that it has agreed to recognize "affiliate members." This is a decided change from the attitude of shoving its rigid constitution down the throats of its members.

Affiliate membership would permit NFCUS to take a more active and leading role in IUS, although it does not have to abide by the political partisanship of that body.

And there are other issues facing NFCUS which stem from the IUS question. Should CoSec be continued? If so, should Spain and Yugoslavia be asked to join on a practical basis if not on principle? Should we get into IUS and maintain CoSec? Has NFCUS enough money to do these things? Or should the whole works be dropped? Will the IUS question have the same effect on the NFCUS delegates as the Russian student issue which last year almost brought the disintegration of the Federation? And then the major question — is NFCUS worth all the trouble or should it be dissolved?

THESE AND MANY MORE problems face the delegates to the 1953 NFCUS meet to be held Oct. 12-17. They are important problems and need serious thought, but most important our delegates should know what student opinion is on them.

Careful!

It is felt around this University that the level of English expression is highly satisfactory, and that instruction would be quite harmful to all students studying in all fields.

Professor Boismaison: "All high school students are blamed for the level of English that is higher than it was twenty years ago."

Student Dullard: What's he talking about?

Prof: The failing mark is fifty percent and those that fail to obtain this mark will be allowed to take our early morning classes at eight a.m.

Student: Hurray, I passed and now I can take my morning constitutional.

Prof: This is meant to tyrannize over the students.

Student: Ouch! Lower that dangling participle any more and I'm liable to learn something.

Prof: A working knowledge of the English language will assist the student in speaking.

Student: I don't kiddin.

Prof: We felt last year's course was so satisfactory because so many people failed that we are going to repeat it again this year. After the second test everybody failed so miserably that we know the level of English expression is rising at a meteoric rate.

Stumbling Block

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Socialism (la).

Further to Mr. Rosen's letter, it should be pointed out that in Britain it is the T.U.C. which is the stumbling block to further nationalisation within the Labour Party. Until the Margate Conference, the latter has not yet decided upon its programme to the British electorate. The fact that the Bevanites achieved a spectacular success in wooing the votes of the constituencies would indicate that a substantial proportion of the Labour Party wish further nationalisation.

I would agree that Professor Underhill had a "very sincere and frank attitude" in his lecture, but surely his remarks completely emasculated Socialist thought. The question of industrial relation and of educational reform are undoubtedly important, but they are not sufficient to form the basis of a political party. Socialism ca nonly progress if its economics and political principles are stressed; these principles are not stagnant but still have a great potency if realigned to meet present day problems.

Frankness Vital Quality —Campney

The honourable Ralph Campney, Solicitor-General and Associate Minister of Defense for Canada discussed "the resounding victory" of the first public meeting of the campus Liberal club in Wymilwood, last night.

In the speaker's words he decided against a discussion of policy and instead gave his conception of the reasons which have made Liberalism in Canada so strong and so dominant throughout the years".

After reviewing political successes of Laurier and King, he claimed that the recent election demonstrated that "sincerity and frankness are vital qualities in public life". He charged the Conservative party with making rash promises, the CCF party with being a class party, and the Social Credit party with fascist tendencies.

"The Liberal party is, and always has been, the party of all the people . . . its policies are national policies," he said, stating that he believed this to be the reason behind his party's popularity. "The Liberal party stands for the preservation of opportunity for the individual . . . for opportunity is the inherent right of youth, the right to work, to grow, to achieve, to attain real social security by one's own initiative. That constitutes the best social security of all," Campney said.

"Every major federal measure of social security in Canada has been put into effect by a Liberal Government," Campney claimed while listing the legislation of the party.

Students Hear Millard Demand Union Security

"It is an issue of rights as well as an issue of wrongs," said C. H. Millard, National Director of the United Steelworkers of America (CIO-CCL), and CCF candidate in the 1953 federal elections, in a speech on the miners' strike situation in northwestern Ontario and northern Quebec. His hour long address was heard by a "standing-room only" crowd in room 37 of UC yesterday afternoon. This was the first meeting of the campus CCF Club for the term, but elaborate publicity, highlighted by a loud speaker which blared an announcement of the meeting from the top of a Pontiac in the noon hour, appeared to attract students from every corner of the campus.

Millard regards the present strikes as one more manifestation of a struggle which has been a long time in the making. The underlying cause is the refusal of the employers to accept collective bargaining. In the present strikes, the employers of the mines wish to maintain arbitrary right to make final decisions, he said. "The employees wish to make their conditions known, and to obtain a larger share of the wealth they produce." Millard provided specific examples of the "wrongs" of mine managers and employers in Northern Ontario. To present the employees' viewpoint, accident hazards and the lack of compensation in families where accidents occurred were illustrated. The miner, under such conditions, is being derived of his "rights." Millard emphasized the lack of compensation as a matter of primary concern for society, not only now but in years to come, because of lost opportunity and individual talent.

The CCF speaker stated that the reason for mine accidents recorded for the Workmen's Compensation Board being surprisingly low in number was a result of a "phony medical policy" in operation in the mines.

"If the Provincial Government has the courage to write into legislation, at its next sitting of the legislature, the union security check off, we (the unions)- will postpone action in this regard and see if conciliation can be managers and employers in North- reached on other matters." This statement followed after Millard had criticized the government for refusing to accept the recommendations of a conciliation board on occasion when the Unions were ready to co-operate with the board.

Earlier Millard had observed that the employers and managers were most often Liberal or Conservative supporters. He pointed out the extent to which the Unions were willing to conciliate: "The government could work out long range plans and the Union would work out a scheme to complement this, if fully recognized."

UC Men Favour NFCUS Association With IUS UC Women Wait Brief

"Without giving any specific instructions to its SAC delegate the University College Literary and Athletic Society recommends that the National Federation of Canadian University Students become an associate member of the International Union of Students."

This motion was passed with one dissenting vote at the open meeting of the UC Lit. held in the An amendment was carried by a 16-8 vote which caused the word "strongly" to be struck from the original phrasing "strongly recommends."

The UC Women's Undergraduate Association decided at its meeting yesterday to instruct its SAC representative, Liz Scroggie, to abstain from voting at the SAC meeting tonight. "We are waiting for Taylor's report" Joan Seymour, Lit. Director, said last night.

Earl Berger, UC SAC rep., told the Lit that he felt no decision could be reached until Chuck Taylor's report had been studied. It was pointed out that this report, which was drawn up after observations at the IUS conference held this summer, was in Ottawa at present although "there is great agitation in the upper circles of the Student Christian Movement to obtain it."

Doug Brown, Treasurer of the SCM, said that "since the IUS has come halfway to meet us we should try to meet them." When asked what benefits IUS associate membership would bring to NFCUS Berger said: "NFCUS has little power and if it joins IUS it will have the advantages of speaking to the world and the strengthening that comes with belonging to a powerful and well-established organization."

Ron Gould, Lit Social Director, suggested that NFCUS join the powerful and well-established United States National Student Association. The suggestion was thrown out on the grounds that Gould was the only one present who knew about the organization.

Tory Club Will Begin 8 Tonight

The U. of T. Progressive Conservative Club will holds its first meeting in Room 4, Trinity College this evening at 8:00 p.m. Joe Slogan, president of the club, will speak on the federal political scene during the recent election and on his personal experience as the youngest candidate. The meeting is designed to welcome the new members of the club and acquaint them with the other members.

The Club was founded in 1925 under the name "The MacDonald-Cartier Club." Early in 1953 the name was changed when a new constitution was adopted. The first president was David Walker, a candidate in the recent election for Toronto Rosedale.

The club is an autonomous body designed for the study and perpetuation of Conservative principles. It is represented on the National Progressive Conservative Student Federation and the Toronto District Council of the Young Progressive Conservative Association.

Varied Ways To Take PT

As fall rolls around to the U of T, signs spring up in prominent spots saying, "Swim test by November 1st.", and all first and second year men start contemplating about forms of exercise. According to M. G. Griffiths, Assistant Director of Athletics and Physical Education for Men, "Students don't seem to realize the variety of ways of getting their P. T. credits."

Mr. Griffiths explained that in addition to gym classes there are classes in swimming, life-saving, and swimming instruction. Besides these 10.00 to 4.00 classes, credits can be earned in intramural sports.

Other, ways seemingly little known, of getting credits are in boxing, wrestling, gymnastics, fencing and track and field. Contrary to wide student belief, these classes after lectures are for beginners as well as men hoping to make Varsity Intercollegiate teams. All men students interested in some of these activities should look on the main bulletin board in Hart House and see the opportunities and time tables. Registration for Physical Education ends Friday, October 16th.

Just One Week To Go For SAC Book Sales

Until Friday Oct. 16th the Students' Administrative Council Book Exchange at 119 St. George St. will be open to students for the purchase of texts. Manager of the Exchange, Clarke Deller (II UC), estimates that although 5,000, books have been sold since they opened on September 21st, "there are at least 5000 more to sell."

The number of students who have brought books to the Exchange for sale this season is estimated at 15,000. They may collect their payment between 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Thursday or Friday of this week (today or tomorrow), or on Friday of next week at the Exchange. "The last and ultimate chance" to collect this money will be from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. on Sat. Oct. 17th. Anyone who has money owing from this or the last two preceding academic years may still collect it. This would facilitate operations at the Book Exchange.

Total sales at the SAC Book Exchange to date amount to approximately $6,500.00. Each book is sold for 75 per cent of the price for which it was last sold, 10 per cent of this amount being put aside for operating costs. The six students who are in charge of the Exchange are paid 75 cents an hour for their labours. In Mr. Deller's words, "The Exchange is a sincerely non-profit venture of the SAC."

Mr. Deller felt that next fall the Book Exchange would open on the same location, ready with a substantial supply of left-over books. The fact that the present location cannot be permanently occupied by the Exchange throughout the school year makes it impracticable to open after Christmas for the sale of second term books. Mr. Deller believes that a more central location would enable the Exchange to be of greater service to students and interested in this subject at a forthcoming SAC meeting.

Police Stop Rugby Fans' Beer Parties

Kingston, September 29—(CUP)—No cases of beer were to be allowed on the Toronto Rugby train last Friday. Railway police or Alma Mater Society constables were to stop all students at the train who were carrying suspicious parcels.

A proposal was also under consideration to use AMS constables on the train to aid the railway police. Fifteen coaches from the CNE constituted the student rugby train.

Last year the Toronto rugby train was damaged to the extent of over $500. This damage was paid for by a general levy on Queen's students.

Sad Sod

Let Byways Be Bygones

". . . and the green grass grows all around, all around,
And the green grass grows all around"

The paths across the front campus have been wiped out. No more will the thin brown strips reveal the quickest and most accessible route from one building to another across the campus. No more will students wallow ankle-deep in the mud after a rainstorm. Alas, that so picturesue a University institution should meet oblivion.

How, in the future, will a freshman find his way from the Physics building to U.C.? He will not have the carefully designed path his forebears have left him to direct his footsteps. How, in the gloom of the night will some ardent athlete find his way from Knox to Hart House without the help of the late paths?

What a pity that University officials have seen fit to remove those functional necessities in favour of grass; to exchange walking comfort for green conformity; to cover up years of student history with sod. And if perchance some neighbouring building should suddenly be swallowed up by the earth, future generations would know nothing about it. "Nothing has ever existed over there," they'll say. "Look, no paths lead in that direction."

But, to add indignity to the sodded graves of these paths, little white epitaphs have been placed at their ends. No poet has blessed these simple grave markers with un-dying sentiment, and no stone or wood carver has laboured endearingly over the inscriptions. "Please keep off the path," say the markers.

Yet all is not lost. There is an underground plot afoot to return the paths to their former erratic grandeur. They shall return just as crooked, and dirty, and shabby, — and useful — as they ever were.

Travelling Journalists Sightsee Thru Russia

Three American college newspaper editors who were successful in obtaining permission to travel unrestricted in Soviet Russia have returned with fascinating reports of their trip.

Zander Hollander, former Feature Editor of the Michigan Daily, Mark Edmond, former Editor of the University of Colorado Daily, and Daniel Berger, Editor of the Oberlin College Review arrived in Moscow September 28 with visas authorizing them to travel behind the Iron Curtain, and determination to observe Russian life as closely as possible.

Yesterday Reuters news agency announced that two of the travelling journalists had arrived back in Berlin after their week long tour. They reported completely unfettered travels, high prices, and issued sober warnings regarding the existence of anti-communist feeling among the populace. Speaking to those who believe that there is an anti-communist underground, Hollander said: "Nothing could be more dangerous than the belief of some people in the U.S. that there is a general unrest in Russia on which foreign powers could capitalize."

The duo visited Moscow and Kiev where they visited the University and a collective farm. The farm did not impress the students from America's farming Middle West with Hollander asserting that the farm was "average or poor. If it was a show piece, it was a poor one."

Both were surprised at seeing no statues of Stalin or Malenkov, even in the Kremlin and were astounded at the exorbitant prices for goods and food.

University Flyers Are Still Romantic

It all started in darkest antiquity, and in the last few years has rapidly got out of hand. Since the first low pass by a pigeon, doubtless an ancestor of the Queen's Park variety, man has been stirring to rise above the birds. This interest and admiration of the art of flight is witnessed by the highly developed art of falconry in the middle ages which gave satisfaction to the yearnings of earth-bound, armour-encased nobles.

Today the wail of jets and the muffled rumble of air liners find only a few rubber necks in the crowd. Flight has become a commonplace and, so mechanized that the old romance is almost lost. Almost but not quite!

The first flights were made in gliders from which stem all our present aircraft, and still only motorless flight can give the true thrill of soaring silently through the sky. The Wright brothers are given the credit of powered aircraft. Among the first on the North American Continent to attain powered flight were two Canadians, Baldwin and McCurdy. And so with frightening speed we leave the pigeon and approach the multi-engine transport of today in which flight is technical prowess bounded by radio ranges and confuses by a maze of dials and gauges.

But the romance of flight is not quite lost yet. There still remains a stronghold of flight with a minimum of technical gadgets to detract from flying, the light plane. It is possible for anyone in fair physical shape to experience the thrill of being airborn through the medium of light plane flying.

Before going any further we would like to dispel a few rumours. First, pilots do not, as the movies would have us believe, wear crash helmets, white silk scarves and half wellingtons and derive their greatest joy in life buzzing old ladies, small children and dogs, and spend their spare time flying under bridges. Second, there is no comparison with the motor driven mixmasters on the midway. You will find if you will give it a try that flying is not designed to frighten you into a quivering mass of delighted humanity. It's an experience worth having, and one you will enjoy.

Many students at Varsity alcan you have yours, be you man ready have their licences and so woman, or freshman. On the campus is an organization which offers you flying at rates that cannot be beaten anywhere in Canada. We refer to the University of Toronto Flying Club.

If you are at all interested the first general meeting is Thursday October 8th at 8:00 p.m. the Map Room Hart House. New members and those interested in private flying are welcome. We would like to see the coeds represented. Flying is not just a man's sport. Perhaps it is too much to hope for another Amelia Earhart or Jacqueline Cochran but we can dream.

Any inquiries should be directed to the president Roy Swanson at KI 2387, the secretary treasurer Vic Predergast at LO 1482 or the publicity man Bill Roderick at MI 8411.

Fee Increase, National President Big Topics When NFCUS Meets

By SALLY HOGG

Ottawa, Oct. 5 — (Special) — In an interview with Yves Pilon, executive-secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, it was learned that the attempt to raise, the per capita fee levy will be one of the main issues to be raised at the annual NFCUS conference. At the national offices here in Ottawa Pilon stated: "With rising costs and decreased enrolments the present fee does not give the national NFCUS office sufficient money for its existing needs."

At present NFCUS receives 20 cents per student from each of its member universities. There is a move on foot, however, to raise this to one dollar. The proposed increase would be used to facilitate existing services and probably widen other national and international NFCUS projects. Pilon made it clear that no new services were contemplated for the national services.

The conference, which will be held at McGill next week, will also consider a proposal to establish a national presidency. Pilon said he would recommend to the delegates that such a president be elected. The candidate will have to be prepared to give up his studies for one year, and assume the post on a full-time basis.

One of the main functions of a fulltime president would be to establish and maintain constant liaison between the various regions, Pilon said. In the past this task has fallen to Pilon, but the demands on the national office are such that he feels he cannot get away.

A national president would also be free to honor international commitments. This would include attending the annual conference of the Co-Ordinating Secretariat (Co-Sec) of the National Unions of Students which will be held this January in Istanbul, Turkey.

TORONTO'S REPRESENTATIVES

The 17th annual conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students will be held at McGill University next week from Monday to Friday.

The Students' Administrative Council is sending Scott Symons, SAC NFCUS Chairman, and Jennifer Rickard, Vice-President of the SAC, as the Toronto delegates. Bob Sutherland will attend as Chairman of the International Affairs Commission and Syd Wax as Honorary President of NFCUS. Both are past-presidents of the SAC.

"Poly-Ec" Will Hear V. Bladen

Professor V. W. Bladen, head of the Political Economy department of the University of Toronto, will speak on "Economirs and Industrial Relations", at the first meeting of the Political Economy Club Thursday, 8 p.m. in Falconer Hall.

Professor Bladen has been on the staff for 32 years. He is a former director of the Institute of Business Administration and last summer was a member of the U.A.W. Public Advisory Committee on the guaranteed annual wage.

The meeing will be the first of the new "Poly-Ec" Club, which is replacing the Political Science Club. The new club will continue to sponsor campus elections and Model Parliaments, and will also sponsor speakers on important political and economic topics.

NFCUS — IS IT WORTH IT?

The National Federation of Canadian University Students is a union representing the student body of the whole of Canada. It consists of 18 universities which have associated themselves so that Canadian student opinion may be voiced on as large a scale as possible. It is the students' pressure group to improve conditions on the national level and it is their spokesman on the international level. In these capacities NFCUS has petitioned the government for such things as the elimination of Unemployment insurance on summer jobs. It has also represented Canada at international student affairs, such as the one in Warsaw in 1950 when the Russian students were invited.

NFCUS seeks to represent the Canadian student wherever his interests are at stake. Its constitution states the purposes: "To promote, in every way possible, a better understanding among all Canadian universities student interests and provide a means for developing international relationships with students in other countries."

MEMBERSHIP

Every undergraduate attending a member university pays a 20 cents fee for the operation of the national office of NFCUS at Ottawa. At Toronto this is taken out of the $5.00 fee all students pay into the Students' Administrative Council on enrollment.

National government of the Federation is in the hands of a national president, a secretary-treasurer, and four vice-presidents representing four regions:- the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and the West. This year it is hoped that it will be possible to employ a full-time national president to co-ordinate work at all the universities. This job involves missing one year at university but arrangements are being made for the student to study under a scholarship when he re-enrolls.

WORTH IT

What has NFCUS done to fulfill its aim? It has sent delegates to represent Canada in international discussions. These have won an enviable reputation for Canada and nations now listen to her with an interest that exceeds what her comparatively small size would ordinarily command.

In Canada itself NFCUS has given university students these services:

A Regional Exchange Project. Students at one university are able to study at another of a different region during their third year and return to take their degree on their own campus. Free tuition and exemption from student council fees are given him while away.

A reduction in railway fares. This has been secured for students returning home during the Christmas holidays. A return fare costs the student single-fare-and-a-quarter.

A national travel service. This service, whose business was in the $20,000 range last year, offers inexpensive trips to Europe as well as specially arranged tours.

The Canadian University Press. CUP is a wire service for campus newspapers making it possible for members to cover the news on other campi in Canada at a reduced cost.

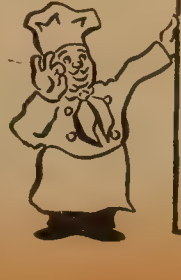
The Canadian University Debating Association.

PROJECTS

At last year's conference it was decided that NFCUS should not continue its policy of delegating its projects to the separate member universities. It was agreed that NFCUS would operate more efficiently if the whole organization was behind the different projects. Dependence on the efforts of small groups all across the country was seen to be destroying NFCUS power potentials as the pressure group of national body.

With this as its object NFCUS last year decided on the projects that its four commissions would work on over 1952-53.

The National Affairs Commission undertook to investigate Unemployment Insurance exemptions, the Massey Commission recommendations and a reduction in text-book prices among other things. The Commission for Administration and Finance will thrash out the $1.00 fee levy and the problem of financing a full-time national president. The International Affairs Commission, which Bob Sutherland of Toronto has chaired for the past year, will discuss the IUS Conference and the problems its raised. The Commission for Student Government and Educational Affairs will discuss such things as discrimination on Canadian campi.



PAPER ORGANIZATION

It has often been complained that NFCUS is a "paper organization" — because it produces a great volume of words and printed material but nothing concrete. The Federation is working on a lot of projects like the ones listed above and it has given the students many services, but critics complain that it is not 20 cents worth.

The Government turned down the NFCUS's reuests for implementation of the Massey Commissions report last year. Textbook prices rose again this year, and the delegation for Unemployment Insurance exemptions never really materialized.

The students on this campus last year voted in favour of a fee raise in a poll conducted in every college and faculty. President Smith has said that a scholarship would be awarded to full-time president if he was chosen from this university.

We stayed in NFCUS last year believing that it had great potentialties. Our representatives attending this year's conference have been given a difficult choice — perhaps the key to the realization of those potentialities.

Dr. Barron Sees Jewish Problem As Future Evolution, Not Survival

"Jews could not disappear via assimilation even if they wanted to". This was the opinion voiced by Dr. Salo W. Baron speaking on the question of Jewish survival in the Y.M.H.A. auditorium on Tuesday night. Addressing an audience of three hundred Dr. Baron who is professor of Jewish History, Literature and Institutions at Columbia University said "Even if every Jew agreed to convert himself to another religion, in a few years we would still have the emergence of a Hebrew Protestant Church, a Hebrew-Catholic Church, etc., for Jews have always remained a distinctive group."

Dr. Baron, pointed out that until a few generation ago people of all religions believed in the indefinite survival of the Jews. To prove that Jews have survived even against the greatest odds, he pointed to the Jewish Triumphs over the oppression they suffered u der Hitlerism and even more recently under Communism. Dr. Baron asserted that the Jews no longer have to fear survival, in the physical sense at least.

"The important question," he said, "Is not whether Jews will survive, but how they will survive and what kind of Jews they will be. Nineteenth and twentieth century nationalism which demanded a homogeneous unitarian state with no special privileges for minorities and unity in secular matters at least, presented a threat to Jewish survival. But," declared the eminent historian, "The threat to Judaism created by militant nationalism is diminishing. We are outliving that nationalism which came to a climax in the Fascist and Nazi states of Mussolini and Hitler respectively."

As to the question of whether Jews can survive inter-territorially Dr. Baron said "It is normal for Jews to live divided. They have lived in different parts of the world since the days of ancient Babylon and yet everywhere they have developed the same culture, traditions and religion.

Boyd Neel Chosen Dean For Music Conservatory

A medical doctor, a conductor, author and outstanding musician has been chosen to succeed Sir Ernest MacMillan as Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

He is Boyd Neel and a graduate of the Cambridge University of Medicine. However, Dr. Neel abandoned medicine for music in 1934 and since that date has been establishing himself as one of Britain's leading musicians.

"I am very keen about my new position said Dr. Neel, "It marks a complete departure from anything I have ever done before." Dr. Neel also stated that he will be glad to settle down after twenty-one years of touring both as a guest conductor and with his own orchestra.

During previous visits to Canada, Dr. Neel has appeared as guest conductor with the C.B.C. symphony and will conduct the C.B.C. Wednesday night series on October 7.

"It is difficult to estimate the merits and position of Canadian music after such a short stay," said Dr. Neel, "but I feel that the concert of Canadian Music which will be held in Carnegie Hall next week, speaks well for the future of music in Canada." One of Dr. Neel's keen interests is music for children, and he directed the Robert Mayer Children's concerts in London from 1946-1951. The younger members of the Royal family are often in attendance. During the concert the conductor talks to the children about the music and the instruments in the orchestra.

In England, Dr. Neel organized his own orchestra, the Boyd Neel Orchestra, in 1932. It was also invited to the Edinburgh and Salzburg Festivals. Last November, the Boyd Neel orchestra made a Canadian tour.

In addition to his experience as a symphonic conductor, Dr. Neel has also conducted the Sadlers Wells Opera Company and the D'Oyly Carte Company.

In appreciation to his services to music, Boyd Neel was made a Commander of the British Empire in this year's New Year's Honours List.

DIGBY

In The Highlands

David Walker, Collins—$2.75

Digby, David Walker's latest novel, is the now-hackneyed story of a harried American business-man who decides he must get away from it all. The new twist comes in the way in which he does it, by taking a long holiday in a remote, and quaint part of the Highlands. The result of this is something like a dull mixture of Babbitt and Brigadoon.

The opening chapters of the book are uninteresting and rather confused, perhaps on purpose for the sake of contast with the main part that takes place in Scotland. Digby Ross, a successful American business man with a beautiful wife suddenly starts throwing things at his secretary and insulting his wife. ("I told Madeleine she was a housewife," he says to himself in horror.) On the advice of that sage and stereotype old character, his fishing guide, he goes on a holiday. He has a quarrel with his wife, of course, before he leaves.

Once he gets to Scotland things are different. He becomes part of a compact little circle—his cousin, a retired Anglo-Indian (Highland version); his cousin's dumpy daughter Elspeth; Lord Balgersho, the daredevil ex-RAF pilot; and most important of all, Fiona, the beautiful and seductive Highland chieftaness. Digby becomes quite a different person under the influence of this strange place. In the first place, naturally, he falls violently in love with Fiona. Then, in rapid succession, he accidentally wounds his cousin while grouse-shooting (the Scotto-Indian colonel wears three large bandaids on his cheek throughout the rest of the book), gets arrested on various charges including riding a bicycle without lights and being drunk, and finds that he is a poet when he writes an inspired epic for a Gathering of Fiona's clan. But as you have suspected all along, everything turns out for the best in the end.

"There are no real people in this book," it says at the beginning. They don't have to tell us; it's pretty obvious. The only character that really becomes vivid is the swaggering ex-pilot. All the others, including Digby himself, remain rather lifeless. "A mad book—and extremely funny," the book-jacket points out. Well, it succeeds in being mad sometimes, although not so very mad, but it isn't often very funny.

—Mavy Burbidge.

STRAIGHT FORWARD

Story Of Challenge

CANADA, A STORY OF CHALLENGE, J. M. S. Careless, Macmillan, $3.50.

In the interest of good relationships and a closer understanding of one another among the people of self-governing nations of the Commonwealth, the Cambridge University Press has begun publication of a series of brief histories of Great Britain and the erstwhile dominions. The first of these books to receive promotion in this country is Professor Careless's Canada, a Story of Challenge.

In itself, Canada is a good straight-forward re-orchestration of a now familiar theme and variations. We have, after all been over these questions before with Professors Creighton of Toronto and Lower of Queen's, to mention only the authors of the leading one-volume studies of Canadian History. Thus any new work in such a compass is fated from its inception to appear to owe much to its predecessors. It is indeed to Professor Careless's credit that he has succeeded in producing a work in which his voice is the one most clearly audible.

Forced he is to re-echo, yet he writes with care and judgement. Except for an unfortunate reference to the encounter between the British ship Leopold and the American Frigate Chesapeake (unfortunate since "the Leopard and the Chesapeake" is a phrase perpetually graven upon the minds of all who read Building the Canadian Nation in high school), he has made no positive errors. Brevity has, however, led to a certain amount of possible misunderstanding. The reference to the Manitobe schools legislation is a case in point. The religious discrimination which the phrase "and abolished Catholic separate schools" suggests did not after all exist.

On the other hand, in his treatment of the question of political parties and party leadership, Professor Careless has displayed an impartiality so fine as to leave me quite baffled, on the evidence he presents, as to what party he supports. He recognises the identification of party with leader in Canadian politics. Thus each party, as it possesses the best leadership —MacDonald, Laurier, Borden, King—seems the best party for Canadians to have supported, as indeed I suppose they were.

On immediate politics the book is discreetly silent, though Mr. King and Sir Robert Walpole meet in a Sentence of delicate, if subjective irony. "Whig or Tory I don't know". Mr. Careless's impartiality and fairness is greatly to his credit, though I can't help thinking that perhaps after all if a historian looks closely enough at Canadian politics, ideologically divided parties simply disappear and coalitions of interests replace them. Perhaps one of The Varsity's page eight savants will enlighten me. The profuse and often entertaining illustrations, many of them familiar to the above-mentioned readers of BTCN, that enliven the book, and the chaste and handsome binding that encloses it, greatly enhance Canada, a Story of Challenge. Professor Careless is to be commended for the fluency, ease.

As to the Cambridge University Press, a good deal more could could be said. I hope this book is being offered with as much energy to its proper readers in the rest of the Commonwealth as it has been in Canada, where the neccessity for a further work of this nature is particularly to be questioned. If not then I suggest the press devote its talents to encouraging works which would not merely thicken but strengthen the rather insipid blood-stream of Canadian historical writing. We have had, after all, only one significant historical biography published in Canada, on MacDonald, and that is so recent as to be yet incomplete. No number of good clear superficial books make up for the missing back-bone of critical studies which leaves our written history as yet so bowed and amorphous in shape.

Roger Bull

CHILDISH CHARM

Wind and Caribou

Eric Munsterhjelm, Macmillan's—$3.50.

Perhaps the most interesting thing about Erik Munsterhjelm's book The Wind and the Caribou is its title which he has taken from a Chipewyan Indian proverb. The book describes the wanderings of the author and his friend in search of fur-bearing animals in Northern Canada and which never rises above the mundane level of a grade eleven student's composition on his summer vacation. Certainly his material is exciting and worthwhile, but unfortunately the author has not the powers required to intrigue the reader and arouse some spark of interest, even when describing such wonderful things as navigating swirling rapids in a flimsy canoe or huntihg the stately caribou and industrious beaver. The glorious changings of the seasons, the beauties of an arctic winter, canoe journeys across endless chains of lakes and rapids are treated in such a juvenile style and with such paucity of vocabulary and descriptive language that they become tedious and hackneyed. Even that certain feeling of sympathy that a writer usually manages to excite when he describes the trappers starving in the arctic wastes is never quite attained.

A man who has had the opportunity to live among Northern Indian tribes and observe their customs and peculiarities should not dismiss them with so little elaboration and detail, because they constitute a source of almost universal interest to the uninformed and eager reader. Surely the author could spare us from an inventory of his food just long enough to describe some of the more interesting aspects of Indian tribal life.

Among men who spend solitary lives amid rigorous natural surroundings, humour and the ability to laugh at hardship, failure, disappointment and pain must necessarily exist, but in this book, the attempts at humour are feeble and unconvincing. They mainly consist in telling how much the author or his friends laughed at a certain situation, and the reader is usually at a loss to discover the funny part from the description of the incident. This type of humour is purely visual, and should not be included in the written narrative.

The author's purpose in writing the book is most obscure. Perhaps it was for the information of future trappers and hunters, but this is impossible since it contains no advice of a technical nature that would be worth anything. It could not have been purely a desire to describe the landscape and climate, because the author's lack of descriptive power has already been indicated. It is also not the indomitable will of a man to conquer and subdue the North, and his conflict with it, since the only conflict that exists is between the author and the reader.

Reiterating the judgement of the publishers, it could be said that this book has a certain childish charm, but in order to sell, the title should be changed to Tales of the Northland for Little Folk.

—Margaret Nodder.

SIX SHORT NOVELS

Steinbeck Anthology

Macmillan's—$3.50

The art of John Steinbeck is considered by many to be excessively realistic, and by other extremists to be unwontedly artificial. The question, in this case, actually on the division between subject and technique, and the extent to which the reader does or does not appreciate Steinbeck's personal synthesis of the two. A case in point is Tortilla Flat, included in The Short Novels of John Steinbeck, here reviewed.

Tortilla Flat, a number of episodes about Danny, a paisano of Monterey, California, and the friends he collects around him, is cast after the same fashion as Sir Thomas Mallory's work on the legend of King Arthur. The artifice of a ponderous archaic style in many places is, contrary to expectation, curiously pleasing and effective. The utter simplicity and reserve of the narration in The Red Pony, the second novel in the book, is another case in which presentation and style are subtly moulded to the form and demands of the subject, in this case four fable-like episodes from the growing-up of a young ranch boy.

This anthology includes several other short works by Steinbeck: The Pearl, Cannery Row, The Moon is Down, and Of Mice and Men. The Pearl and The Red Pony, for those who are interested, may be categorized as Steinbeckian essays into the folk tale, and Tortilla Flat, Of Mice and Men, and Cannery Row fall, with other works of his like The Sea of Cortez and The Grapes of Wrath, into his great saga of the waifs, the bums, the wanderers, and the prophets. Steinbeck's interests in the west and in the problem of its dispossessed workers are synonymous. The summation of this work is to be found in The Grapes of Wrath, which is not published here. In Of Mice and Men, however, he produced a work of comparable stature which the editor has been able to include. By far the most impressive of these short works, its clarity, and the brilliance and compassion of the author's story-telling gift leave a memorable impression.

Lastly, the editor has included two of Steinbeck's double-purpose novels. The Moon is Down, written during the war about an invasion amongst ourselves, was both a play and a novel. The Pearl, a contemporary folk-tale of the same south-western region as Cannery Row and Tortilla Flat, was originally a film-script. The editor has also included a somewhat rambling introduction which, though clever, is not satisfyingly informative either about Steinbeck or the novels included.

—Germaine Clinton.

ERIC NICOL

Twice Over Lightly

TWICE OVER LIGHTLY, Eric Nicol, The Ryerson Press, $2.25.

Eric Nicol's lastest offering to the entertainment of his readers is a cheerful collection of essays presenting the trials of humanity in a light which makes them seem almost fun. After reading Twice Over Lightly at one sitting one is left with a feeling of satiety, but this is only to be expected since humerous essays, like mustard, are most palatable in small quantities. Taken separately each essay is amusing and entertaining—perhaps if one seeks deeply one finds instruction as well. This depends largely on whether or not one is the sort of person who likes to be instructed; some people, like Alice's duchess, can find a moral in anything.

Eric Nicol's style is that of the professional journalist, informal, colloquial, familiarly unpolished. Rarely, however, does he commit the error of oversimplifying his remarks, or of using slang where it does not gain a specific effect.

The ingreaients of his recipe for humour are many and varied—basically he adheres to Stephen Leacock's prescription of two pints of myope to one-and-a-half quarts of hyperbole. To fill in the spaces he adds variety of language and the usually successfully amusing if occasional hackneyed tricks which so many humorists revert to.

Most of the essays are more entertaining, when read aloud by someone else, especially if the some one else is a natural born comedian Under these circumstances, however, the main weakness of Eric Nicol's style comes out more forcibly—although his first lines are intriguing and his ensuing lines funny, his punch lines are inconclusive and unsatisfactory. One is generally left with a strong impression that he should have left off four lines furth - up.

In both style and material Eric Nicol's is essentially Canadian. Intentionally or not he carries on that homely humour of Stephen Leacock and Gregory Clarke, full of topical allusions, local personalities and benevolence. One conceives a picture of the author as a sort of rejuvenated Santa Claus clad in a warm business suit—an impression instantly destroyed by the picture of the young and very clean shaven author on the back cover. This characteristic of Canadian humour is not so all-pervading as to prevent any sophistication of finesse from showing through; our writers are fully capable of as clever a turn of phrase and as finished a style as anyone else; nonetheless, the predominant impression is one of back-fence philosophy and wit. Canadian humour possesses, perhaps, more knidliness and less cleverness, more of Bob Hope and less of Oscar Wilde.

Eric Nicol's subject matter illustrates his Canadian quality even better than his treatment thereof. Most of the essays concern the author's personal experiences and his reactions to them. Since these experiences are usually uncomfortable they are because of the peculiar construction of the sense of humour, funny. The fact that the lays himself open to laughter at every turn is evidence of his Canadian approach as well as his own good nature. Whether this willingness — nay almost eagerness — to make oneself an object of amusement to one's readers is an indication of the basic difference in philosophy between the old world and the new is an interesting consideration to bear in mind when pondering Canadian wit and humour, for it plays a large part in the Canadian writer's production of a funny story. In "Cuckoo in Kent", the source of amusement is the author's consistent faux pas all over a conservative English country house; in "I sipped with Nelson" it is the contrast between the author's imagined importance and actual insignificance; in "How to take a train" it is the poor little man's unreasoning fear of airplanes in a flippantly flying society.

Does the Canadian humourist laugh at himself simply because he enjoys it or because he dislikes laughing at other people? Certainly Eric Nicol seems to be enjoying creating a picture of himself as a laughable misfit; equally, on the other hand, he seems to enjoy poking fun at a love-lorn editor, at the city council and its battle against pigeons, at women drivers and at babies.

Let us assume therefore, that Eric Nicol is a both an impartial and a successful humourist, and that his fun is well worth taking seriously. We recommend Twice Over Lightly for the brightening of your leisure hours.

Nancy S. Donnell.

Speaking Of Sport

by JOHN ELLIS

An interesting item appeared in one of the downtown journals the other day. It appears that the intercollegiate football coaches have come out strong for an increased player limit. Well, there is nothing wrong with that except that they have been doing it for about as long as we can remember. If nothing else, it provides good copy.

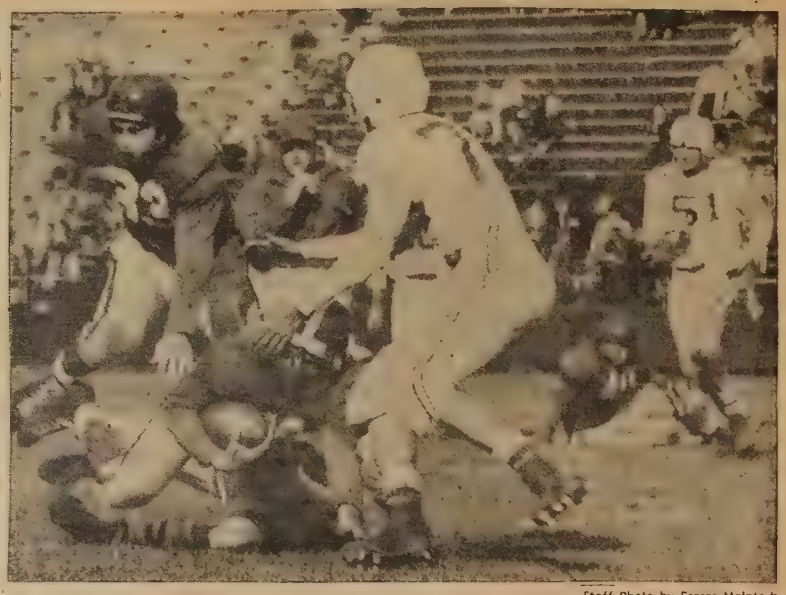
The whole story revolves around the intercollegiate ruling that a team may only dress 24 men for a game. That ruling holds even if the two coaches involved were to agree to dress more men. Before this year all four of the coaches in the intercollegiate had gone on record as saying that they were in favour of a player limit of 30. This year McMaster is in the loop and Coach Al Smith feels that his school would have trouble fielding 30 good men. They can dress 24 but not 30.

We'll buy that. Mac is the smallest college in the loop. Probably they would have trouble fielding a contender of thirty men. But then that argument would hold for colleges like McGill and Queen's if it were right. Vic Obeck and Frank Tindall, however have indicated their liking for an increased player limit. Which brings up the question "Why?"

Probably the best reason for the increased player limit is the fact that college ball is supposed to be for fun. As many lads as possible should get on the field to enjoy the non-professional atmosphere that prevails.

The second good reason is that a lot of fellows get hurt in games. Not seriously mind you but enough that a coach would play a substitute if he had one on the bench. We will remember for a long, long time the Queen's-Toronto game down in Kingston last year. The Blues started the game with four ends that were in reasonably good shape. At the end of the game all four ends required the attention of a doctor. One was through for the rest of the year. One played the last half of the game walking and running on his toes because the heels of his feet were badly bruised. The novicane had long since worn off. One end had an arm that was virtually useless and the fourth had a shoulder that was badly wrenched. Two of those ends played about 75 per cent of the last half without a rest simply because the other two were too seriously hurt to play and because there were no more substitutes on the bench thanks to the 24 player limit.

Looking at it another way, the way that Bob Masterson looks at it, a team has to carry about thirty men for purposes of practices. Along cames Saturday and six of those faithful lads are benched thanks to the player limit. Isn't that a grand way to encourage people to play football. Set them up as tackling dummies four nights of the weke and bench them on Saturday.



If the coaches could carry six men it would probably involve an extra end, three extra linemen and a couple of halfs. That would be mighty good insurance from the standpoint of the team and it would also mean that a player would not have to be played if he got himself hurt.

Probably the big question that arises out of the story in the downtown papers is this. The story in the other journal stated that Toronto was one of the two colleges that voted against increasing the player limit. In view of Coach Masterson's approval of an increased limit and in view of the fact that one objection might be that the college is too small to field 30, (Toronto is the largest school in the loop) we would like to ask the powers that be in the Athletic Depart ment—"How came?"

Odds and Sods: We hear that two ex-Blues, Bill Bewley and Joe Harris are up at OCE. Bewley started the football season playing for Calgary Stampeders of the Western Interprovincial. In one of the early games he had his jaw smashed and is out of football at least for this season. Joe Harris started with Ottawa Roughriders in the Big Four before deciding to go to OCE. We remember Joe as the big cop on the night beat at Union Station, Toronto. Wouldn't those two boys come in handy for this weekend in London. — Western has not lost a game to the Blues in London since before the last war.

The best that Varsity could do in those years after the war is three ties, two in the last two years. Wouldn't there be a hot time in the old town Saturday night for Toronto travellers if the Blues pulled this game from John Q. Metras' sweaty little hands.

Don't Step On Him!

A sample of the expected action this Saturday when the Blues play the Mustangs in London may be found in the above picture. This action took place in the Western game here a couple of weeks ago. That's Honest Steve Oneschuk that has been tackled by one of the Metrasmen. Lorne Hunter is seen standing over Steve with Bob Turner (51) coming up from behind. Frank Palermo (33) is stepping over Steve and Karl Kanteroff (40) is on the ground to the right. If you don't remember, the Blues won 11-1.

Dents, Forestry And Trinity Prepare For Interfac Openers

The increased enthusiasm to be seen these nights in the practises of the interfaculty football squads is indicative of the rapidly approaching league openers.

Dents football picture took another turn for the better last week as coach Ralph Hichen has received the welcome help of two football figurse who should need no introduction. Ray Yakasovitch and Danny Nelson, both with last years Blues, are now helping Ralph with the team. The Dents club has become probably the most scouted team on the back campus. With their all-stars of last year and four year men such as John Hemphill and Don Gilbert in the backfield, and lineman Walt Matulik this seems the squad to watch.

Across the field with the Forestry aggregation bystanders cannot help but be impressed with the potentialities of the team. But it remains the same old story. The list of those who have been approached by the boys in hopes of obtaining a coach is beginning to read like a who's who of ex-football players. Here is an excellent opportunity for anyone interested in coaching to handle a contending club. Anyone interested need only mention the fact to any of the fellows in Forestry. Even with this situation the team is rounding into shape under the direction of Tom White as back field coach and Bob Burgar as line coach.

The future seems brighter with R. J. Gray's Trinity men. The boys are fortunate in having their own back campus. Deward Farghesson, last year with the intermediates, has turned out to help John as line coach. Trinity's clash this coming week-end in London with Huron College should be an indication as to the play of newcomers such as quarters John Whyte and Dave Drynan during the coming season.

Watch This Man

Last year the sideline quarterbacks watched a freshman Blue run like mad in practice, but they didn't get to see much of him in the games. It wasn't because he wouldn't be useful but because he was on the sick list. We are talking about Bob Pinkney.

These same sideline quarterbacks got a look at what Bob might have been like in last half of last season, on Saturday last against the Queen's Golden Gaels. In the third quarter Ollie Mandryk tossed the ball to Bob who ran another 50 yards for the Blues first touchdown. That was the spark that got the Blues going for their first win of the young Intercollegiate season.

Last year Bob broke a thumb and had his right arm in a cast for the rest of the season. Barring the injury he would have probably been a lot of help to Varsity in the drive for the Yates that didn't quite make it.

Bob comes from Humberside Collegiate where he sparkled in TSSAA football. Among other things he was also a standout in track and field. He stands about 6 ft. and weighs in at 169 pounds. For the benefit of the women who might be interested he is blonde, single and nineteen.

PHE Figures In Triple Win

Trinity field was the scene of one of the highest scoring women's softball duels of the short season as PHE third year downed UC's mighty squad 13-10. It was the fastest moving match to date and by far the most exciting as these two very evenly matched crews battled it out for an unusual three inning session.

At the end of the first inning, both squads were held at 6-all. UC broke loose in the second to gain a total of seven but the physedders still led by three. Though they tried valiently, the UC gals managed only three more tallies in the third but PHE held on to the three point margin to win the match.

..It was Phys Ed all the way yesterday as the second year squad took Saint Hilda's 10-1. Judging by the scoring and the play, it was a one-sided effort all the way. Pitching for the winners was Inger Olsen who allowed one run, the single Saint Hilda's tally to go by.

The third match of the afternoon, played at the stadium, saw the first year Physedders trounce POT 11-6. This match was not completed and may be replayed some future date.

With three days behind them since the opening of the season, PHE third year has won two while Vic firsts and seconds and PHE firsts and seconds have won one each. None of these squads has lost yet.

Saint Hilda's seems to be on the losing end so far, all three teams having lost their matches to date. POT has also lost its sole match while UC is suffering from a double defeat.

Legal Flight

Imported Lectures

The Flying Professor is coming to Toronto. Prof. F. R. Scott, professor of Law at McGill University, will be flying to Toronto every two weeks to give a course in Administrative Law to the second year students at the School of Law. He will arrive at noon today and fly back on Friday.

This unheard of method of importing a professor to give a course throughout the year is a first time experiment for the School of Law. The staff asked Prof. Scott to give the lectures not only because he is an expert in the field of Administrative Law but also because it would give law students a chance to hear one of the deans of Canadian legal education.

Prof. Scott was a Rhodes Scholar in 1920, with a B.A. and B. Litt from Oxford. He began his teaching career at a High School in Quebec. In 1927 he got his B.C.L. from McGill University and was asked to join the faculty in 1928 where he has been to date. He was National Chairman of the C.C.F. party in 1942 and from 1936-46 a member of the National Council Penal Association. He is author of several books on Socialism as applied to Canada and has edited such periodicals as Journal of Ec. and Pol. Sci. and Canadian Forum.

Prof. Scott is also known for his poetry and has published a collection under the title Overture. His father was the late Canon Scott, Arch-Deacon of Quebec who is well known as a Canadian Poet. His wife is Marian Scott who is a painter of some note. She used microscopic details as her subject matter but has more recently turned to non-objective work.

Prof. Scott, the School of Law and the University of Toronto welcomes you!

C. Schaefer Supervises Art Group

Last night the Organization meeting of the Hart House Art Class was held. Again this year the class will be supervised by Carl Schaefer, instructor at the Ontario College of Art.

The students, ranging from rank neophytes to talented artists, with a preponderance of the former, learn the basic techniques of drawing and painting, using as subjects everything from vases to the human form.

Mr. Schaefer pointed out that the experience of taking the classes gives the students a genuine interest in art, and has even produced a few graduates who have made art their life work. The present curator of the Lee Collection in Hart House, Ed Cooke is a good example. Others have become active in Art Clubs in cities all across Canada.

Each year the students put on an exhibition of their work. Although the work is done by amateurs it can not be considered as an amateur exhibition. Exchange exhibitions have been arranged, and the work of the Toronto students has always created a very favourable impression.

Carl Schaefer has been with the Hart House Art Class since 1934 with the exception of a few years during the war when he was official war artist for the RCAF.

Camera Club Show Slides For Meeting

The Hart House Camera Club will hold its annual open meeting on Thursday Oct. 15 in the music room in Hart House, at 8:00 p.m. The guest speaker, Dr. E. C. Amsden, President of The Colour Photographers Association of Canada (Toronto Branch) will give an exhibition of colour slides.

Prospective new members are especially invited to come and see the dark rooms and other facilities. Refreshments will be served.

Moral Arms Race

What does the University of Toronto student think about yesterday's developments in the Korean situation? Does the fellow sitting next to you think it was settled two months ago, or does he take it for granted now. Sure must be wonderful to say it is one or the other, and hope someone will do something about it. If the U.N. Club were to hold a forum on it tomarrow, would you be there?

Of course, it must be said there is too much going on today for each student to have a keen understanding of the factors leading up to situations. But whether or not we have heard about it for three years, Korea is still the most important phase of current events on which a student should keep himself informed.

Why has President Sygnam Rhee again threatened to free 25,000 anti-Red North Koreans? Why shouldn't he want to rid his country of a belligerent menace from the north? After all, he has been overrun once, and the situation has not been changed after three years. Further, there seems no question that the Anti-Red Koreans would love to stay in a country fulfilling their fondest hopes.

What does the University of Toronto student expect the United Nations to do? Do they think the men there are wonders? Leaders can only succeed when there is keen debate, and strong minded thinking from every person they represent. East can bait, West only when they know there are no convictions among the people they must intimidate. University students could do a lot in putting us morally behind our leaders, and building a strong bulwark against the forces, not necessarily Communism, that are destroying our society.

Since September 20th, in the office here on the campus, or in the KCR, The Varsity has not heard a single word on Korean Affairs.

Law Monopoly

One interesting fact presented itself in the recently released enrolment figures for the University of Toronto. While first-year figures in all faculties and colleges remainded fairly steady, the School of Law shows an increase of over 60 per cent. A total of 45 students enrolled this year as compared with 28 in 1952-53.

It's even more interesting when it is realized that members of the University Law School cannot be admitted to the bar. The Law Society, which sets the rules for admission to the Ontario bar, requires that two full years law study be undertaken at Osgoode Hall and at least one year under articles.

However, students at the School of Law spend a third year of fulltime law study. As if this extra year wasn't enough, the Law Society insists that University Law graduates spend another year at Osgoode.

In a manner that smacks of monopolistic control, the Law Society is favoring students of its own school over the students of any other school of law. They give no adequate reason for this.

Aware of this difference students who have received their college degrees are evidently turning toward the University School of Law to get their legal study—even with the added year of work, and even with the realization that they may never be admitted to the bar.

If it is following its discrimination policy for "pecuniary interests" the Law Society is unrealistic and morally wrong. How long can it hope to remain in its privileged position when the School of Law has almost doubled in size. Our law grads are equal at least in merit to theirs.

Let's Unify It

NFCUS Is Valuable

The National Federation of Canadian University Students is in bad shape this year, again. The University of Montreal has withdrawn. If any touchy issue comes up at the conference, such as the question of affiliation with the International Union of Students, Laval and possibly other Universities may withdraw.

MCGILL IS DEAD SET against raising fees—they will leave only if compelled, and heaven they will leave only if compelled, and heavens only knows what that may mean. Toronto is considering withdrawal, although the choice has been left up to its delegates. Also, for the first time in recent history McGill and Toronto are in opposition on a major issue, the fee raise.

The Varsity three days ago suggested that if nothing is done to "save the face of a worthwhile skeleton," Toronto's withdrawal is inevitable. To save face may be termed childish.

BUT SHOULD THIS ATTITUDE be endorsed? Many students, particularly disillusioned student-politicians, say nowadays that NFCUS is a waste of time and money, and should therefore be abandoned.

But Canadian students have rights and interests, and only an organization such as NFCUS can look after them.

NFCUS has reduced the railway fares of Canadian students, and is trying to reduce them further.

NFCUS is the only body, which can ever hope to represent the whole of Canadian students abroad.

IF NFCUS COULD SAVE THE students the money they pay the unemployment commission, a policy which is completely useless to all who haven't worked for six months previous to the time when they want money, NFCUS could save the students many times the annual NFCUS fees. It hasn't achieved it yet, but NFCUS is trying.

Admittedly, NFCUS is weak. Admittedly, last year a minority forced the majority to give in, for the sake of unity. It was the fault of the majority.

This year again, Laval may threaten to withdraw. Let them! Anybody else? Let them!

BUT WHY SHOULD SOME OF THE Universities, the ones that form a majority give up NFCUS, withdraw, in effect yield to a minority, and quite probably kill NFCUS? Why withdraw, when we can rule it? Patience is a commendable virtue.

Perhaps, fees cannot be raised this year. But they have been raised before, and will be raised again. In 1950, the fees were raised and the University of Montreal (how strange) refused to pay the new fees unless NFCUS put an end to its federal aid propaganda campaign. The campaign is still going, and Montreal has paid. UBC wanted a smaller increase. But UBC has paid.

NFCUS IS AN EXISTING FRAMEWORK, within which various Universities can try to work out their problems. If there is no framework, there is no solution, unless another organization is set up eventually, which comprising the same members, would have the same problems.

It would have to be set up again and that would entail loss of time. No advantage could be derived from it.

Some people say that we could use the money we pay NFCUS ourselves—"We could really do things. We could invite the Russians."

So what? Can we hope to accomplish anything between the East and the West, when we are not able to make "peace" between camps far less prejudiced and hostile than the Russian students would be?

IF WE DID BRING OVER a few Russians, or went over ourselves, what would be the value of it, other than news value Or if we brought to Canada an African student to study medicine, could we improve relations between Canada and Africa? Or change Malan's policies?

True, we should not be narrowminded, we should try to better the world internationally, but why must Canadian students take the lead in such a project, when they can't even reconcile the differences between the various groups at home?

Would the money be better spent on an international project than a national one?

NO, LET US TRY TO unify NFCUS, if it takes fifteen years. And if somebody doesn't like the policy laid down by the majority now, let him get out. He will come back.

NFCUS can be moulded until it is alive. Once dead, it would be frigid and hard. And it would ferment for a long time!

Editor
The Varsity:

There is an old maxim to the effect that no man is important unless he has been dissected in print. Imagine, then, my delight when I saw Tuesday's Varsity, for I realized that I had crossed the barrier dividing the voluble nonentity from the man of distinction. Some Medsman, of whose very existence I was unaware, had been following with diligence and distrust the tortuous path of my career, and finally had been goaded into exposing me to the innocent world, that it might become aware of my malfeasances.

And how typical of 1953 are his charges! Obviously I belong to the class of egg-heads, whose intrinsic and conscious superiority to the polloi has incurred the natural wrath of that sovereign agglomeration. Nor am I innocent of the paradoxical ratiocinations characteristic of such presumptuous pseudo-intellectuals as Bernard Shaw.

Apparently my assailant's patience with my poor thoughts became exhausted when I enunciated the proposition that when almost no one is average, the average person is the exception—surely a tautology. I wasn ot aware that such an utterance would be considered an exemplification of the profundities of modern intelectualism. As a matter of fact, my critic emitted several remarks which are considerably less evident than my truism. I hesitate, however, to draw any conclusions from this observation.

Mr. Bernstein is, I am pleased to note, a generous man. He has offered to puchase, for my use, a ticket to any destination I choose to name. As a lover of Rapid Transit (an esoteric pursuit, I admit), I am eagerly awaiting my opportunity to ride in Canada's First Subway. Mr. Bernstein, a ticket from Wellesley to the Eglinton Avenue station, please.

We would like to draw to your attention that you have inadvertently made a misrepresentation of the stand of the Student Christian Movement re NFCUS membership in IUS.

The first three clauses of our resoution from the national scm conference were omitted. The essence of these clauses is as follows: The IUS has inaugurated the status of associate membership, a move which will ameliorate many of the impasses hindering relations in the past. We also believe that as all men are involved in a brotherhood created and exemplifies by the life of Jesus, therefore, we as Christians must support all means of contact.

We should like to point out that we did not advocate joining IUS without investigation, as your front page article in Wednesday's The Varsity might suggest. We did advocate the re-opening of negotiations leading to associate membership.

Sorry, Augustus

Editor,
The Varsity.

You do the School of Law of your own University great dishonour. It is barely tolerable to find you ignorant of our presence on the campus but to classify Toronto's most unique horse as belonging to the Queen's School of Law is unforgiveable. Sir, Queen's doesn't have a School of Law.

The polka-dot piebald at the game on Saturday affectionately called "Augustus" belongs to the Toronto School of Law. "Augustus" is a stallion of no mean order as the more observant Varsity fans will have noticed. Nor do we of the School of Law think well of Augustus's name being romantically linked with the emaciated little mare of the Blue and White Society.

Sir, to prove the faith of the School of Law puts in the strength and prowess of Augustus, we challenge all those who deign to call themselves by the name of horse to a race to be held at half-time of the next Varsity home game.

Rest assured Gentlemen, Augustus has been instructed not to trample on the Varsity Reporters on that occasion.

Without malice,
Alex Gigeroff,
II School of Law.

SAC Decides To

CONSIDER IUS DEAL

Here's How It Ticks

U of T Given Two Jets By UK Supply Ministry

Sir Miles Thomas, D.F.C., Chairman of British Overseas Airways Corporation, yesterday presented two jet engines to the University of Toronto. They were the gift of Britain's Ministry of Supply, as a result of a request made by Professor E. A. Allcut of the Department of Mechanical Engineering.

The two engines — a Rolls-Royce Derwent I and a Metropolitan-Vickers Beryl have been placed in the museum on the fourth floor of the new Mechanical Building. They will form part of a Canadian Museum of Internal Combustion Engines that has been established there.

"These are strictly museum pieces," said Professor Allcut. "A laboratory is filled with things that a student may learn to use, but a museum is filled with things that he may only look at. In my opinion both types of articles are equally important," he said.

"I have asked for these jet engines for our museum," he said, "because I have a strong opinion about the importance of history." He said that by studying that which has gone before we can reason what will come in the future. He felt the best way to look forward was — paradoxically — to look backward.

Professor Allcut said that knowledge was incomplete without the third of its three divisions. "Language lets us express ourselves to others, Logic lets us think reasonably but it is history that lets us progress by taking advantage of that which has gone before," he said. It is of note that history is now on the third Mechanical Engineering course.

The two engines presented are the most modern of the collection which has power plants dating from the First World War. The centrifugal-flow Rolls Royce engine and the axial flow Metropolitan-Vickers engine are no longer in production as they have been superseded by more powerful models, but their construction is basically the same in newer designs.

The Derwent was used to power Britain's Meteor fighter planes in 1945 and an advanced model of the engine, the Derwent V, was the power plant in the Meteor that set up the then world speed record of 606 mils an hour in November, 1945.

Saskatchewan Students Mix Welfare, Initiations

Saskatoon, Sept. 25 — (CUP) — University of Saskatchewan students and Saskatoon residents showed last week that co-operation was possible and profitable, as freshmen and senior students swarmed through Saskatoon offering their services to anyone interested for a nominal fee.

Part of a campaign to promote good relations with Saskatoon, the project was thought up by the Freshman Welcome Committee, and all proceeds have gone to the Community Chest. Some $350 was collected on this initiation workday.

Three hundred and fifty freshmen were given jobs by householders and firms in the city. One firm employing fifty. Senior students, contributed by providing transportation for the freshmen, guiding the work parties and collecting from employers.

An outdoor dance was arranged for the evening, which was attended both by students and young people from Saskatoon. Space was provided by a local parking lot.

Hamilton, Sept. 25—(CUP)—:Two former University of Toronto professors have received appointments to the staff of McMaster University, Hamilton. R. W. Thompson has been lecturing in economics for the past three years and M.A. Preston has ben assistant professor of Physics for several years.

Mr. Thompson is to be assistant spent five years during the war with the Foreign Exchange Board and the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in Ottawa. He has done post graduate work at the London School of Economics.

Mr. Preston has joined the Department of Physics as Associate Professor in Hamilton College. During the war he worked on the development of new anti-aircraft and radar equipment. He is treasurer of the Canadian Association of Physicists.

'Investigate Only' Council Resolves

The Students' Administrative Council passed the motion last night "that the SAC instruct its delegates to the Natinal Federation of Canadian University Students' conference to ask that body to investigate the possibility of associate membership with the International Union of Students with special attention being paid to the basis upon which NFCUS could enter into associate membership in IUS."

The motion was passed by a vote of 19-2 at the Special Meeting of the SAC held in the Board Room of the Mining Building last night. The two representatives from St. Michael's College voted against the motion.

The reasons from the recommendation from the Student Christian Movement were presented by Douglas Brown, Treasurer of the SCM, John Lofft, who was present at the IUS Warsaw conference held last August, was then called upon to give his observations and opinions.

Loffit concluded that "The advantages to be gained by association far outweigh the disadvantages." Brown said that "because of the one-sided political leanings of the IUS, the SCM does not feel that we should become full-fledged members of the organization.

Bill Baldwin, the Wycliffe College representative reported to the meeting that his College had instructed him to vote against the suggestion that NFCUS become an associate member of the IUS. (he voted for the motion as it was finally phrased)

He gave two reasons "(A) I do not think we could give such a definite mandate to support joining IUS on the available information and (B) We should consider not only NFCUS-IUS relations but also the relations within NFCUS." He felt that due consideration should be given to minority opinions as these could disrupt NFCUS.

Horace Krevery, Law representative, said that "if a question like this will wreck NFCUS then it is high time we got out of NFCUS." the statement was greeted by loud applause.

Paul Lorb, St. Mike's representative, felt that if NFCUS is to open negotiations it should decide on some basis for them. He suggested that IUS give a clear definition of its political stand and establish an equitable system of representation.

Pat Daniels, Ontario College of Education, assured the Council when questioned by Jennifer Rickard, St. Hilda's, that the World

SAC Backs Increase In NFCUS Fee

Varsity's delegates to the forthcoming conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students will go on record as approving both the increase in NFCUS fees to $1.00 per student and the Russian student exchange plan.

The Toronto delegates Scott Symons and Janet Rickard will urge approval of both these motions at conference.

On the Russian exchange question alone, NFCUS almost found itself split wide open at last year's conference as Laval delegates threatened to drop out of the organization should the motion be approved.

NFCUS turned down the plan at the time, preferring unity to Russian students.

Symons told the council that it woul like take the support of at least least twelve universities to make the visit possible at all.

On the fee rise question, council was told that university student bodies of McGill, Western and British Columbia have already indicated their opposition to the proposal.

"Toronto at least should be in favour of strengthening NFCUS, however," Horace Krever, Law rep, commented.

Symons argued that the Toronto stand was worthwhile, even if the fee hike was not approved.

The Students' Administrative Council met two new members for the first time last night. President John Stalker, Meds, introduced Pat Daniels representing the Ontario College of Education and Cliff Lawson of the School of Social Work.

Valuable Etching

Hart House Happy

By GORD FULLER

A few days ago Hart House lost its painting of the "House of Commons" from the wall of the Debates room. This painting had been on loan to the House and was returned to London. Nothing but a bare expanse of wall stared back at an on-looker . . . stared until one of you were forced to look away under the unwavering glance of the other. The wall usually won the battle of stares.

Then, the Gov.-Gen. Mr. Massey gave to Hart House an etching to put in this vacant space. The Gov.-General has always had great interest in the House and when he was asked to distribute in Canada [illegible] copies of a very rare [illegible] of the coronation of Edward VI by the Rev. P. B. (Tubby) Clayton, C.H., he very generously he very generously gave one to the House. The Rev. Clayton, founder of the Toc H club during World War I, has also shown great interest in Hart Huse. Of these prints five are in Canada, nine in the United States, four in Australia, two at All Hallows Church in London and two with the Society of Antiquaries. These are all prints that are known to exist. Open-market prices are high for these very valuable etchings, all of which are originals from the first steel engraving.

The scene is of the coronation procession of Edward VI from the Tower of London to Westminster. In the foreground we see houses and streets filled with people while in the middle there is the procession itself. Hills, trees and the Thames, complete with boating scenes, fill the background.

The people have been captured in a mood of gaiety and the scenes include street-fights between small children, duels, gambling on street cornrs and shop-keepers vending their goods amongst the crowds. Typical of all parades we see people climbing to the housetops and up statues and struggling with one another for the best places of viewing.

All in all the etching shows splendid technical workmanship (the printing is line perfect) and fine delicate artistic technique. a truly valuable addition to the debates room.

Reference Room

Library's Library

An unsung, almost unknown, but invaluable department for students and professors alike is housed in an oft overlooked corner on the quiet side of the University Library. The door numbered "3" opens into the Library's library—the Reference Room.

The Reference Room is tucked in behind the stairs, at the foot of the busy corridor now housing the filing cabinets. Here are kept the 22½-pound books, the bibliographies, the library catalogues, indexes, and books of general reference. Books are catalogued in bibliographies and the bibliographies, in reference rooms; that makes the Reference Room, the library's library.

Dr. W. E. Blatz, Professor of Psychology, once defined the library, in part, as a place of reference. The work of the Reference Libraries exemplifies this.

The Reference and Circulation Departments are charged especially with the task of aiding both undergraduates and graduates in their use of the resources of the Library. This includes direct, personal aid for anyone in search of information for whatever purpose besides various library activities especially aimed at making information as easily available as possible. Any queries that cannot be answered directly or that are too extensive are referred to the Reference room.

Another very important service offered by the Reference Room is the Inter-Library Loan. This involves the lending and borrowing of books to and from all of Canada, the States and occasionally England, Germany and Sweden. Periodicals are also exchanged periodically. Since the library has such a full collection more lending is carried on than borrowing: during last year 1800 books and over 700 periodicals were lent.

The present Chief Librarian, Dr. W. S. Wallace, fondly recalls his first desk in the present Reference Room when he first came some thirty-odd years ago. There was no Reference Department then and the room was used for vaious purposes including exchanges of periodicals. Later Dr. Wallace created the position of Reference Librarian, appointing the head cataloguer. Reference and Circulation are administered as one Department. The work of the Reference Room has ever increased till today a Reference Librarina and two full-time assistants are employed.

The bust of Dante presides over the volumes of the six-sided Reference Room: his stern glare affronting all who enter. On h' marble base is inscribed the following message for all those who can read English, Italian and Latin:

Presented to the University of Toronto by the Societa Nazional
Dante Alighieri
Feb. 1933—XI E.F. Nino Cloza Feeli

Besides Dante, the Reference Room houses the national catalogues of depository libraries such as the British Museum, the Bibliotheque Nationale and the Library of Congress. Also on file are the references of the different languages, foreign works and encyclopedias. And even more interesting reading may be found in the Checklists, Bibliographies of Government Documents and the Union Serials.

While carrying on many various services the largest part of the Reference Room's work is advisory, with the purpose of helping the reader to help himself. As it may be a breach of confidence to divulge any of the students' or professors' reference questions, no examples will be cited, but suffice it to say that all are interesting, some amusing and a few strange and mysterious!

Everyone is entitled to make use of the many special services freely offered in the Reference Room, but there will be no spoon-feeding. No sir, you can write your own essays.

The young lady pictured above seated at a desk is enjoying the facilities of the Unviersity Library Reference Room — "the Library's Library." Open to graduates and undergraduates alike, it tries to give as much assistance as possible to those who make use of it. It also houses an extensive collection of periodicals.

Unity Plan For Faiths Baha'i Aim

"The minimun requirement of any plan for world unity is that it must be big enought to accommodate all peoples," Miss Elizabeth Manser said in her address to the Baha'i Student Group on October 7th at University College. Miss Manser suggested that the Baha'i World Faith not only has a plan but has already established small, united communities the world over which include people from all racial and religious backgrounds.

Miss Manser cited the early followers of Moses, Jesus and Mohammed as a few of the examples of small, unrecognized groups who, from time to time, have given the initial impetus to tremendous forces of unity in history. But she went on to say that through time they became disunited, and today are faced with the problem of regaining their dynamic power. The speaker emphasized that this is a universal problem, for, at present, all the world's religions are operating on an individual basis. Miss Monser pointed out that the unique feature of the Baha'i community was that it involved not a "going back," but rather, the fulfilment of these previous revelations in a single, united organization.

"The Baha'i Faith does not give official statements concerning any specific political issues," rather it provides the foundations for the development of a world government based on divine law. She concluded by challenging the group to investigate the essential truths in their own religious convictions, and compare them to the principles revealed by Baha'u'llah, the founder of the Faith.

Bob Apple Captured Skule Scatters Vic

The sixty-odd year tradition is now over. The pole is down, but not by the Frosh. Yesterday the Skulemen took part of the pole to the little red skule house. Vic had to remain content with the other part which until 4:30 yesterday was still in danger.

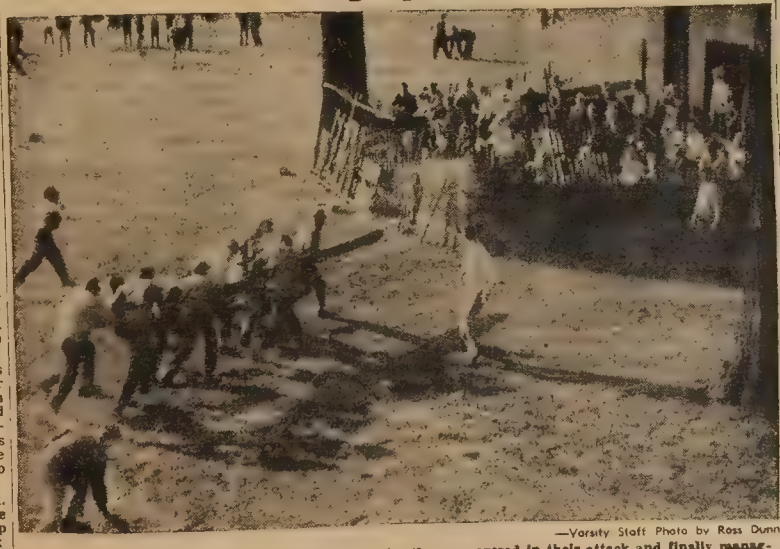
At a little after 3:00 the engineers came and the Vic boys barricaded off the little Vic field and pelted the Skulemen with rotten tomatoes. The engineers retaliated with very ripe oranges while they attempted to crash the gates. Vic defended the outer gates well but the battering-rams of Skule finally shattered the outer gates and Skule swarmed through.

The Vic men retreated to the pole which besides being heavily greased was surrounded by a mucky trench, more Vic men and a rampart wall of steel fencing, old wooden fences and stout wooden beams. Skule charged in behind their battering rams, but were met by a barrage of rotten eggs, tomatoes, ripe pears and chicken gut.

One of the mobile battering rams were captured by Vic, but after several charges Skule had broken in the barricade on the south and west sides. The north side was protected by Vic gym. The engineers tore the walls down with their bare hands and with ropes attached to the posts.

Vic beat back attack after attack. After one charge Skule had the pole shaking, but Vic, keeping up a steady barrage beat them back.

On their third attack the Skulemen were right in and the Vic men had to clasp arms and ring the pole. Skule promptly through out all the 'ammunition' and broke more of the barricades. From the roof of the gym the engineers tried to lassoe the pole, but all attempts failed. Ray Atkin, leader of the Sophs was dragged out of the enclosure and his shirt ripped to shreds. Engineers trapped inside were dumped into the muddy moat. By now the stench from the back field was terrific.



Engineer finally got hold of the hose Vic had been using and started dousing the Vicsters. One or two men tried to get up the greased pole but Vic held them off. It was about now that the roof patrol paid off. The pole was caught and the rope handed over to the men on the ground who then pulled the pole down. The engineers got the 'prize' on the top. However, engineers have a far greater lust for poles and again they broke in to drag the pole home.

The remainder of the battle was a see-saw-tug-of-war which saw the pole snapped in two. The scarlet and gold clad Vic football team who had been practising on the field now joined the fray, but one half of the pole got away and was marched down Queen's park to the strains of the Skule song. The other part was still being fought over.

An inventory of the ammunition showed: 24 six-quart baskets of ripe tomatoes, 13 crates of ripe pears; three boxes of chicken guts, 200 rotten eggs and two gallons of axle grease. These were used indiscriminately by the Vic men who showered friend, foe and onlookers with their weapons.

Actual fighting was very rare and when it did break out students on both sides were quick to step in and stop any rough stuff. Several students who did become overeager and became a little rough could be seen after they were parted shaking hands. All in all it was orderly, as orderly as anyone can be as one throws a rotten tomato at another person. There seemed to be no serious accidents or injuries.

Deaf to the jeers and taunts of the defending Vic boys, hefty Skulemen man the battering ram in an effort to crash the barriers set up by defending Sophs. They were met by a hail of over-ripe fruit, rotten eggs, and chicken guts. Held off at first, they persevered in their attack and finally managed to break through, ploughing through a mixture of mud and axle-grease. (By their concerted effort they brought the pole to the ground and carried off the "prize" on top.)

UC Parliament Favors Inter-Racial Marriage

Increased inter-racial and inter-faith marriage was upheld by supporters of the Government in yesterday's debate by a majority of forty-six to thirty-five. The Parliament of University College opened its first session with Lieutenant Governor John Roberts replacing Governor General Thomas Daly as speaker of the House. The Speaker read an address from the ill Governor-General and asked the House to observe a three second silence for his excellency.

Leading off in the debate the Prime Minister, The Right Honorable Harriet Thompson, showed how the Government upheld the resolution—that "this house would approve increased inter-racial and inter-faith marriage." It is human destiny that the world some day will be one. To solve the problem of trying to live with each other in such a small place inter-marriage is the solution. She added "colour will become nothing but radiation of different wave lengths of light".

Leader of the Opposition, Catherine May, did not feel that inter-marriage is a solution to intolerance. "Marriages of the modern day are not too successful because of individual differences" she added. How well can you expect two people from entirely different religious backgrounds and different spheres of friends to make a success of marriage?

David Powell, second speaker for the government felt that distaste to inter-marriage breeds "superficiality, ignorance, and hypocrisy". Superficiality in the aspect that "we should love our neighbour but don't fall in love with him" and ignorance because genetically all human beings are constructed the same. "Hypocracy develops because all racial beliefs hold that we should love our fellow man" he said. Mr. Powell closed with the remark that a perfect marriage depends on the individual person.

Earl Berger, final speaker for the opposition used the example of the Jewish people and their wanderings over the Earth as his argument against inter-faith marriage. Anti-semitism has arisen on the part of the Gentiles and now there is coming Anti-Gentilism on the part of the Jews. "How can so many hates and distractions on each side result in a happy marriage?" he closed.

Ottawa Report

National Scholarships NFCUS Current Aim

By SALLY HOGG

Ottawa, Oct. 6 — (Special) — So far as any information can be obtained from the national offices of NFCUS here, the Canadian student federation is still pressing the federal government for implementation of certain parts of the Massey Report.

In particular NFCUS has concentrated on the question of national scholarships. Last year a brief was presented to the Liberal Government urging more federal aid to students. Action by the Government has not yet been taken.

In answer to a letter from Raghbir Basi, student-president of NFCUS, Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent said earlier this fall: "The Government is just as anxious to deal with the various recommendations of the Massey Report as you and your associates are, and I personally have been giving consideration from time to time as to what may yet be done about the various aspects of the Report. . . . All I can do at the moment is to assure you that while it may not be possible to proceed with the recommendations you have in mind in the near future, I do hope that this can be done soon."

Bob Sutherland, chairman of the International Activities Commission (IAC) of NFCUS, and former president of Toronto Students' Administrative Council, also wrote to the Prime Minister. "On behalf of the students of the University of Toronto I urge the early implementation by the Government of Canada of the Massey Commission recommendations regarding a system of National scholarships," he wrote early in 1953.

Sutherland declared that increased tuition costs have made such a plan necessary. "In this country," he added, "no good student should be denied university education only for lack of funds."

The IAC chairman referred to the national scholarship plan as "the soundest of all possible investments in our country's future." He held it up to the Government as "as challenge and a magnificent opportunity."

From The National Office: Yves Pilon, executive secretary-treasurer of NFCUS, is slightly disturbed about Toronto sending only two delegates to the NFCUS conference. He said: "I feel the University of Toronto is showing a lack of interest in sending only two delegates. The other universities look up for leadership to Toronto and expect a good contribution from it. The Federation has shown this by choosing each year, for years, somebody from the University of Toronto for the five-man executive."

Progress In Prosperity A Bugbear Says Slogan

Last night at 8.00 the U of T Progressive Conservative Club held its first meeting of the year. Joe Slogan, club-president, spoke on his experiences in Manitoba as a provincial election campaign leader and the Progressive Conservative candidate in Springfield constituency.

The speaker stated that "The highest tariffs in the history of Canada, and Mr. Howe's failure in negotiation" had resulted in serious trade losses to Canada. One of the main losses, he stated, has been the British wheat market causing a "wheat crisis."

Mr. Slogan explained the broad outlines of the aims and purposes of the Progressive Conservative party and its position in relation to the other main parties. He analyzed the failure of the party in the last Federal election and said that the lack of complete acceptance of the P.C.'s sitxeen point program was that "people are afraid of progress in prosperity." The speaker predicts a change in public opinion in the next four years because Liberal trade losses, inefficiency, and unnecessary taxation.

He continued with a review of the Progressive Conservative party's achievements which included the sponsoring of Confederation, the uniting of Canada by the construction of the C.P.R., and unemployment insurance.

An outline of what the Club intends to do this year was given then by Mr. Slogan. He said that they will have meetings every three weeks, the next in the Vic Union. As in previous years the Club will enter the Model Parliament and political debates.

Saskatchewan Students Snakedance Downtown

Saskatoon, Sept. 25—(CUP)—A mammoth snake dance of students from the University of Saskatchewan wound through downtown Saskatoon, last week, despite a promise to city officials from the student executives that no such demonstration would take place this year.

Although "irresponsible" Home Economics students were reported as being responsible for the affair, officials intimated that engineers would be blamed for any damage, as they were generally given credit fo. the irrepressible mob which motorcycle policemen, campus officials and student executives were unable to stop.

The demonstration apparently started after the University's annual torch relay race, which the engineers won from the College of Law. The students in their wanderings interrupted the show in a local theatre, and, in a display described as "deplorable" and "asinine", took a memorial wreath placed at the cemotaph by airmen from a nearby air station and waved it above their heads. This incident, the prank of thoughtless students in a party mood, was the only unfavourable reflection on what waso therwise noisy, good, clean fun.

Included in the festivities was a 22-year-old horse driven by law students, which also, no doubt, contributed to the "noise parade".

UC CCF'ers Hear Batten

At the second meeting of the CCF Club held in room 4 in UC yesterday Bruce Batten outlined the case for Marxism.

His speech stressed the shaky foundations of capitalism, arising out of the class struggle that seems to arise naturally out of a capitalistic state. This struggle leads either to a synthesis of the two opposing factions, or maybe a revolution in which the ruling class is overthrown.

Speaking on capitalism, he made reference to the inability of capitalism to maintain a state of equilibrium, basing this assertion on the boom and bust cycles and also to the fact that Capitalism seems to need wars to maintain itself.

Following the speech a lively discussion period was held in which various members of the audience attacked the speaker's stand on Marxism.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Actress

The plight of the critic (especially this one) is most un'appy. There doesn't seem to be a good panning movie in town, least of all The Actress, at Loew's to which I went with the lowest of expectations. Ruth Gordon's play Years Ago has been turned into a moderately nostalgic film starring Spencer Tracy, Teresa Wright, and Jean Simmons, as a small-town family during the early part of the century. The author makes no bones of the fact that the story is about herself, even to naming the heroine Ruth Gordon Jones.

The play on which the film was based is of the perfunctory Chicken every Sunday — Life with Father variety, and, though competent enough, diminishes before the capable performances and superior art direction and photography which director George Cukor has given us. As the ranting ex-sea-captain father Spencer Tracy gives a somewhat magnified view of his usual performance. Jean Simmons is capable as his daughter, an aspiring actress, but the thought remains that it's high time this excellent player stopped enacting seventeen-year-olds and began developing the dark, sophisticated personality which keeps appearing from beneath her pig-tailed characterizations. The surprise of the evening was Teresa Wright as the mother. Her jump from the blonde and glamorous wife of The Steel Trap to the wispy, unlipsticked character-part of this film is both courageous and accomplished.

The most impressive thing about The Actress as a film, and that which lifts it far out of the ordinary run of movies, is the obvious care and taste which have been given the set-design and camera-work, the accurate, stylish recreation of the clothes and surroundings of an average 1913 family, is intrepid and highly successful. The camera work is creative, unobtrusive, and polished, and a number of fine, print-like effects have been achieved in some places by the use of what must be high-contrast film stock.

The fore-going remarks are typical of what is being said of many Hollywood films of recent years. The stultified camera techniques of the 1930's and early forties has developed, under the creative influence of men like Gregg Toland, into a mature and imaginative force in film, and one which has lifted many a third-rate movie far above its rut. This is particularly true of the films of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, where art director Cedric Gibbons has reigned with distinction for so many years.

contributed to the success of the day; the newspaper donated advertising space and a flying service bombarded Saskatoon with leaflets announcing the project. An orchestra for the dance was hired by the Junior Chamber of Commerce which also helped with publicity.

Directors of the event feel that it will probably be repeated next year, due to its unqualified success.

The Callboard

The University of Toronto Film Society will present its first film Trouble in Paradise on Sunday at 2.15 in the Museum Theatre. Trouble in Paradise is an American comedy made by Ernst Lubitsch in the early 1930's. The stars are Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis, and Miriam Hopkins.

On Wednesday, October 14 the Dublin Players will put on Pygmalion at Massey Hall, the first of the International Artists series. Things will really get started the following week, with Jupiter Theatre doing Ring Around the Moon at the Royal Alexandra; Venus Observed put on by the New Play Society; The first symphony concert with Horszowski; Blanche Thebom at Eaton Auditorium, and Antigone starting its run at Hart House Theatre.

Plans for most of the campus shows are now well under way. University College is making a big effort with the Show of Shows, which is a book show. The Vic Bob, Skule Night, and Dentantics will also be book shows.

The first Hart House Library Evening of this year will be held this Wednesday at 7.30. Pierre Berton, who is the managing editor of MacLean's Magazine, and a well-known journalist and radio commentator will discuss the function and writing of a magazine.

Propagate U Nations

Canadian students have a mission.

Marvin Gelber, Chairman of the United Nations in Canada, told members of the University of Toronto UN Club last night, that Canadian students have the duty of creating public interest at home and abroad in supporting the constructive program of the United Nations.

"Students have the opportunity," he said, "of meeting people from other nations on the common basis of scholarship and thus are better able to understand the ideas and customs of other nations than is the more inhibited adult."

Opinion of Canadians, he added, is respected in foreign countries, because Canadians are more interested in the general good than in purely their own advantage.

Gelber said that to be a civilized individual one must adapt himself readily to his environment.

"Foreign students are abundant on this campus," Gelber concluded. "Thus the civilized student will not be content to tolerate others but will attempt to understand the needs and ideas of other countries."

Gelber announced at the meeting that former president of the UN Club, Bud Trivett, has been appointed president of the International Student Movement for the United Nations.

HARRIS BACK IN LINEUP

Speaking Of Sport

by JOHN ELLIS

Tonight we're off to London town. That's right, the first football weekend is with us. So all the boys that think they are men down at the Little Red Skule House will get out the Bibles, that the LCBO issue, and prepare to prove what we have long suspected is myth. They'll be trying to drink those forty beer.

When the first football weekend of the season ralls around, there are always memories of the weekends of bygone years. The best one that we have heard concerning a certain hotel down in London. Apparently the management got wind of a party that was being held in a third-floor room. The long arm of the law was called in and the manager promptly marched up to the room of the party. Nobody would open the door in the name of the law" so the representatives of London's finest promptly rolled the door back. Lo and behold, there was an elderly couple resembling Ma and Pa Kette, sitting up in the bed looking like the world had come to an end. We can imagine the rosy completion of a certain hotel's management. This story is authentic, but to protect the names of the innocent we have omited any incriminating evidence.

The game proves to be one of the best in a long, long time. The Blues have a lot to revenge and we are inclined to think that One-eyed Benny's prediction of a 15-12 Toronto win (found on this page) won't be far off.

We're going to be watching number 81 in Blue and White. That's Steve Oneschuk. Last year down at Western Steve got the injury to his knee that eventually led to an operation last winter and also to some doubt as to whether or not Steve would be playing this year. It would be really great to see Steve score a few points in a winning cause. We think Steve would enjoy it no end.

The return of Joe Harris will be a big shot in the arm as far as Coach Bob Masterson is concerned. Knowing that Joe was all-star tackle last year, we think he will probably mean the difference between a line and a good line. Joe was in the press box last week to watch the Queen's game. That longing was in his eye. Joe's return comes at a good time, what with Alex Macklin out for the rest of the season with an injured knee.

See you in London.

Joe Returns For Western Tilt As Blues Seek To Break Jinx That Has Lasted Since 19?

By JIM PROUDFOOT

When Alec Macklin, the Varsity Blues' veteran tackle, was sidelined for the rest of the season in last Saturday's game, coach Bob Masterson knew he would have to find a replacment. But it's doubtful if even Bob expected he'd find a substitute of the stature of Joe Horris, an all-star last season, who wasn't expected to be eligible for intercollegiate play this year. Harris will play in Macklin's spot tomorrow afternoon at Little Stadium in London when the Blues tackle Western Mustangs, the defending intercollegiate Champpions.

Redheaded Joe graduated in Physical Education last June after a highly-successful career in college football. He was drafted by the Ottawa Roughriders of the Big Four and planned to play in Ottawa and attend OCE here. After working out for several weeks with the Riders, the 6' 3", 215-pound tackle suffered a recurrence of a calcium deposit on his leg. He left Ottawa to begin school here and has been working out with the Blues for the past few weeks. Two things have kept him out of the lineup — one was the medics' go-ahead, which has finally come through and the other was a confirmation of his eligibility, which didn't encounter very much trouble, since Joe had a document from the Ottawa management, stating that he had received no pay from them.

Harris will be one of the four starting tackles in tomorrow's game. Roy McMurtry and Joe Scime will be two of the others with Bob Masterson still to make up his mind between Carl Kanteroff and Jack Strapp for the fourth slot.

The same guards — Baz Mackie, Jack Meaker, Bob Waugh, Frank Palermo — will start and the same ends, Ted Kennedy, Don Smith, Bill Horton, and Bruce Johnson. The same halfbacks, Steve Oneschuk, Bill McFarlane, Bob Pinkney and Bob Dale, will go.

But those are the only positions about which there is any degree of certainty. Wingback Murray Hadlow has a severe charley horse and Bob Leeming and Al Haig are likely starters at that spot. Fullback Don Cheeseman has a bad elbow and may be replaced by Pete Maik, who has been working at that position. Phil Muntz, of course, will be out there. Then there is the quarterback problem, with Ollie Mandryk, Eddie Skrzypek and Doug Geekie in the scramble for the two starting nominations.

The team has been working on defe. e this week, pass defence in particular, and coach Masterson was well-pleased last night after a two-hour session. "They looked sharp, really sharp," he said.

About the Western game, Masterson said, "We'll be ready and eager." And, in connection with that Western ground attack which ripped through McMaster for 405 yards last Saturday, he retorted, "That's the same ground attack that hasn't scored a touchdown on us in four games."

Western hasn't scored a touchdown on the Blues in two years while in possession of the ball — their TD's have com as the result of Blues fumbles.

The Mustangs are expected to be pretty well intact for the clash. Their only loss so far has been guard Mike Newediuk, a Humberside collegiate graduate, who will

Benny Says —

After that catastrophic first week-end, One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, turned expert last week and hit two correct results out of three predictions to haul his average up to fifty per cent. He swaggered into the office last night and slipped us the following scores:

McGill 6 at Queen's 13.
Toronto 15 at Western 12.

Four Firsts For Norm As Vic Wins Jr. Meet

The junior interfaculty track and field meet yesterday at Varsity Stadium turned out to be quite a workout for Norm Williams, the latest addition to the U. of T. track roster. Freshman Norm registered four firsts, two seconds and a third to lead Victoria College to victory.

Scoring 51 points in the 13 events in which there was competition, the Vicsters dethroned last year's champions, SPS, who trailed with 42 points. Third was PHE, with a total of 32, followed by Forestry, 11, Medicine, 7, and Dentistry.

Nobody expected Williams to have much trouble in his specialties, the 120 and 220 yard hurdles, and he came through by winning both events. But the romp he made of the meet came as a bit of a surprise. He won the broad jump and shot put, too, and placed second in the discus and javelin throws and third in the high jump.

That high jump provided the best competition of a meet that was rather short of participants. George Stulac, the intercollegiate basketball and swimming star, duelled Engineer Bill West right up to 5' 6", where Stulac dropped out. West pushed the standard up to 5' 9½" before quitting. West also won the javelin throw and joined Skulemate D. Mason in pacing SPS to its second-place finish. Mason won three events, the 220, 440 and 880-yard runs.

Physical Education's total of 32 points, good for third place, was due largely to the efforts of George Stulac, who is becoming a top performer in more and more sports every year. Stulac had only one first place, winning the discus throw, but was second in the high jump, the shot put and the pole vault.

Next step for interfaculty athletes is the senior meet next Wednesday, with the winners boing to the intercollegiate meet as Varsity's representatives.

Colts Here Today

There's a big hot air front blowin out of West headed this way. Overconfident rooters for the Western Colts are rumbling that the Junior Westerns are going to ruin Varsity plans for a third Shaw Trophy in a row. The lads of London are basing their hopes on the Colts' stampede of Ryerson Tech. intermediates 27-2 last week.

Varsity's Baby Blues who for the past two years have fielded their leagues' top teams are stronger than ever this year (How good can we get?). Unless Western has improved a lot over the year their Colts will be going home with their tails between their legs. It has been a year since the Westerns have come within 15 points of our J-V's and from the looks of the present intermediate edition the visitors will have a rough time comng that close this time.

With a front wall averaging near 200 pounds Varsity is a good bet to check any attempts at a ground attack that the Colts may produce and ought to open a clear way for the speedy stepping of the swifties on the Varsity half-time.

Freshmen will see many familiar faces from High School football in the J-V lineup as coach John McManus is starting six rookies in his first string. Tackles Beamish and Miller, with guard Duart Farquarson will provide protection for freshmen backs Wally Buichak and Gerry Lansky while ends Karpinski and Risk will be out to snare passes.

McManus' need for a good kicker will be filled for this game by Ross Woods, down on loan from the Blues. Woods, a fast man should add much to the Baby Blues' offensive.

Several of the Varsity Intermediates will be out to prove that they should be with the Seniors. John Chisholm last year's outstanding intermediate centre and a grad of Humberside Collegiate had his chance at a senior berth marred by a training camp injury but has a good chance to move up judging by his solid play in scrimmages. Another possible senior is converted back Jim Keffer who after a good season carrying the ball, has switched to guard this year. Keffer handles his 195 pounds well and will be trouble for the Westerns should they come his way this afternoon.

Sad fact for the J-V crew is the 24 player limit. There are 37 men on the roster now which means that an unlucky 13 will miss their licks at the Visitors. The limited intermediate schedule which allows for only six games in the season also cuts the amount of experience that the future Blues may get, and hampers the development of some good men.

Defending champs Varsity will meet their challengers, the Colts, in Varsity Stadium this afternoon, starting at 2 o'clock. Admission Free.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

We were just beginning to sit back and take in a few softball games when "poof" the word got round that basketball practise was to get under way. Well, that's the way it goes this time of year. The inevitable inevitable is now upon us.

Basketball is about the biggest thing that happens to women's sports each year. Beginning with intramural practises and meets, it will reach a peak shortly after Christmas when the intercol squad gets into action. In Canada, at least it is the women's parallel to men's football, attracting fewer spectators even in interfaculty meets mind you, though intercol meets provide a terrific display.

Last year the interfaculty schedule was filled by 21 squads from the different faculties and colleges. It was a tight schedule to meet and this year's is expected to be even more cramped. "The more, the merrier", we always say though Nancy Kercher, head of women's basketball on the campus may disagree. It is expected that two or three additions will be made to the interfaculty squad listing, though all is speculation till practises actually begin on Tuesday. The squads will be grouped as last year when UC Jr.-Sr., PHE1, PHE3, UC sophs and UC frosh finished on top of their respective groups.

As may be expected, PHE won the final meet by a tally of 28 to 18 year before too. See what me mean? No malice, girls, you're right—we do need you around. You'll probably win again this year—but then, again, you may not.

There are no restrictions on playing both baseball and basketball at the same time unless you feel they are strictly academic. Practise schedules will be in The Varsity tomorrow and lists should be up on college bulletin boards by now for all aspirants.

With Help From JV's, Redmen Look Okay

Cooler weather can always be taken as a positive sign that football is at hand. It also proves to be a great aid to interfaculty coaches for inducing that much desired hustle in their aspiring "Nobby Wirkowskis" and "Doug Smylies".

Ken Yates, who is now at O.C.E. is back with the U.C. team again, but in the coaching spot. Ken played two years with the U.C. squad and previous to this spent two years with Port Arthur Mustangs in the intermediate O.R.F.U. as an end. The Tigers are hoping to use a two platoon system as much as possible this season running from a straight T offensively. Top quarterback prospect to date seems to be Dancy Paterson. Ed Richardson of P.H.E., down from the Intermediates, is another back whose performances have pleased the coach. Yates is especially pleased with his hard plugging linemen. Although a little light, the line is not short on speed and boasts two fine offensive ends. Jerry Love, at present out with a twisted anke, shold be back in time to start the season offensively at half and defensively in the safety slot.

S.P.S. is still struggling to enter the league with two teams. At present they would like to enter two teams both composed of men from all four years, but this plan must rest on the approval of the interfaculty football reps from the other teams. To date the boys have been practicing as two teams. Coach Jack McFarlane is feeling good about two ends who reached him via the Intermediates. Jim Parks, a newcomer to S.P.S. football wars, and Cal Weaver, in second Chemical, are the two boys in question. Fullbacks Moulton and Crandle with her hard-driving play were also in line for praise from the coach. Generally the backs seem to be rounding into shape with the line remaining the big question.

Other Blues Play Soccer

This week-end becomes the opportunity for most Varsity intercollegiate teams to turn the Purple and White of Western into Black and Blue.

This afternoon at 4.00 the back campus will be the scene of two inter-collegiate soccer matches. This will be the first home game for both Varsity teams as they take on the Western intermediate and senior teams. The Varsity teams undefeated in their first encounters, although the intermediates only managed a tie, hope to take another step toward a successful season.

Vic Girls Win Second In Row With 14-8 Defeat Of St. Hilda's

Vic firsts came up with their second win of the season when they took Saint Hilda's 14-8 in a high scoring, razzle-dazzle match at Trinity field yesterday noon.

Vic led the game all through. At the end of the first inning, they were ahead by a narrow 9-7 tally but increased the lead to win at the end of the second. Time intervened as it has in nearly every match this season so that no third inning was possible.

Marg Gemmel, a Vic senior and freshie Mary Foster pitched one apiece. Mary also hit a homer for the Ontario Stranders and looks to be about the strongest contender in the entire loop this season.

This win for Vic puts them at a par with phys ed, though this is hardly the time for summing up. Just as this was their second triumph it was the Saint Hilda's second defeat. A third inning might have changed the picture but as usual, Mr. Time or Mr. Timetable as the case may be, broke it up.

The games to date have been visited by a few spectators but darn few at that. This seems to be the case in such competition every season, though it has not dampened the enthusiasm of the contenders. We have only had one defaulted match so far and though this is not a bad record, the schedule makers would be more pleased if there were none at all. Drawing up a schedule is no touch. Another thing—medicals must be handed in as soon as possible. O.K. play ball.

Fast Paces Dents' Win

Ed Fast, playing coach of the Dentistry team in Division 1 of the interfaculty soccer league, gave his charges a practical demonstration in "fitba" yesterday. He scored the three goals that gave his team a 3-2 win over Pre-Meds.

Scorers for the doctors-to-be were C. Werry and K. Baxter.

Another noon-hour soccer tilt saw Junior SPS shade last year's division 1 champions, St. Michael's A, 1-0, on a second-half goal by Taylor.

University College blanked Trinity 2-0 in an afternoon game, Rintoul scoring once and Treliving adding an insurance marker on a penalty shot.

University Service and IUS would be able to co-operate. Daniels has worked on WUS for two years.

He also felt that the Co-ordinating Secretariat of the Western universities would in no way conflict with IUS in that it is "only a paper organization."

Scott Symons, NFCUS Chairman, agreed that the IUS question might raise problems at the conference next week. He said "if certain universities were worried last year about inviting a few red visitors —what will they do about a permanent contact with the whole of the nation."

When questioned Lofft could give no definite information on what fees NFCUS would have to pay as an associate member of IUS. He stated that the delegates attending last year's conference had deduced from its luxury that "students could not possibly have paid for it all. He described the conference as comparable to the CNE.

When asked what IUS does Lofft reported that he had been in the South of Poland when the projects were discussed. Symons described the IUS as a government-backed organization sponsoring a round of glorious rallies, and drama and sports festivals.

He was suspicious of its organization as the same delegates had been seen to return year after year and fill the executive posts.

be forced to sit this one out. Galloping Gino Fracas, their high-scoring halfback has an injured foot but will be ready to play.

In the game tomorrow, the Blues will be battling a tough jinx — they haven't won a game in London since 1936, when they edged the Mustangs 8-5. In 1937, they tried 4-4 and their next success was in 1947, when they again tied 12-12. The past two years have seen deadlocks at Little Stadium, too — 13-13 in 1951 and 7-7 last year.

Maybe the law of averages is still in operation.

UNIVERSITY AND EDUCATIONAL NIGHT

Paper Party?

—Cartoon by Mike McMurdie.

Now A Must

Toronto, commendably, has expressed a real interest in east-west student relations. Last night's SAC meeting decided overwhelmingly to instruct its NFCUS delegates to keep the door open on the question of associate membership in the International Union of Students.

It appears that while the details of association with IUS are still not known, the substance of the principle of international co-operation was understood and supported.

IUS itself has not enlarged on its amendment to the constitution. It simply states:

"Associate members shall be admitted, such members to be national unions of students who within the limitation of their own constitution accept limited obligations and in return receive certain rights of associate membership. These obligations and rights shall be determined by agreement between the IUS Executive Committee and the organization concerned and must be ratified by the IUS Council."

No other points were made known. The ball has now been passed to us, and we must begin to investigate "rights shall be determined by agreement." If there is a basis for co-operation we should not, must not, overlook it. As different and divided as we are, we must seek grounds on which to work together.

The question of what this attempt at IUS co-operation might do to NFCUS is a serious one. Will the same stresses and strains develop on the IUS issue as did on the Russian student exchange quetion? If so, will NFCUS delegates sacrifice principle for a vague and distrustful unity?

The whole point is that we can't cantinue to turn our backs on these vital issues simply because a small minority of universities want nothing whatsoever to do with things concerning Communists. This is isolation at its best.

Toronto should definitely reconsider its relationship with NFCUS if that Federation can only operate and concentrate on plans which "step on nobody's toes". NFCUS can act as a leader on the IUS question. Why shouldn't it?

It is obvious that Toronto cannot think of "joining" IUS until it hears more about the conditions and limitations inherent in the associate membership deal. Surely, we can ask NFCUS to look into these and report back.

Observers returning from the IUS Congress meeting held in Warsaw last August are repeatedly suggesting there is a basis for co-operation. At the right, a Toronto observers of the IUS conference offers the same conclusions.

The SAC has faced this question squarely. Similarly, it has made clear its stand on the NFCUS fee and the Russian student issues. Perhaps something will be done.

No Comment

After looking at the lawn in front of Hart House we wonder whether the students are feeding the pigeons, or is this actually the mess the students leave?

IUS Observer

Investigate At Least

John Lofft, III Meds, was the Toronto observer at the IUS conference in Warsaw last August, as well as other festivals in Europe. The Varsity presents, in totum, his report tabled at the SAC meeting last night.

Last August I attended the IUS Congress held in Warsaw as an observer for the Toronto SAC. The atmosphere of the Congress has changed very much from that of previous years. Discussions were carried on in a more restrainted fashion and a genuine effort was made to suppress the more vigorous partisan political outbursts that have marked previous meetings.

THE PROBABLE REASON for this is the fact that today the majority of National Unions of Students are now outside the IUS. The recent dissaffiliations of the National Unions of Brazil, Scotland and South Africa and the suspension of membership of the Israeli NUS are examples of what has been happening each year. In addition there has been the continued refusal of a majority of other national Unions to consider affiliation. These Unions have found that the violently political activities of IUS, for which the British NUS has dubbed IUS, "the student Branch of the Cominform," have been unacceptable and that they have been forced to withdraw from the association.

The first reaction to this declining membership is to accept partisan minority groups into the organization as if they speak for all the students of their countries. For example, at the last congress an American from a peace group somewhere in the east was called USA, The Student Labour Federation spoke for Australia; the organization of Progressive Studying Youth represented Holland; the Center of Architectural Students stood for Uruguay and so on. This reaction has failed to fill the gap left by former National Union members. This situation has placed many grave doubts in the minds of not a few Student Leaders from many colonial and undeveloped countries who realize that this organization contains only the Russians, the Russian satellite countries and themselves.

IT IS PERHAPS FOR these reasons, and other reasons which I will mention later that IUS has shifted its policy in an effort to re-establish contact with the West. This policy has changed in regard to a proposed associate membership which is extended to Western National Unions. The background for this proposed change stems from a proposal made by the British in 1952 that some form of membership be made that would allow cooperation between the East and the West without the West having to endorse any policies or activities of IUS that it did not approve.

This has resulted in the amendment of the IUS constitution which makes provision for Associate Members. It reads as follows:

"Associate members shall be admitted, such members to be national unions of students who within the limitation of their own constitutions accept limited obligations and in return receive certain rights of associate membership. These obligations and rights shall be determined by agreement between the IUS Executive Committee and the organization concerned, and must be ratified by the IUS Council."

This amendment is significant in that it is a concrete answer or step taken to a demand made by a Western Students Union.

Tonight we must consider the advantages and disadvantages of acceptance and also of non-acceptance of associate membership by NFCUS.

FIRST THE DISADVANTAGES of acceptance of associate membership:

1. It allows IUS opportunity to use Canada's name and attach to it various policies and activities IUS engages in. By this move we fit into a very well organized propaganda machine which will be able to say with little justification, "We truly represent World Student Opinion." In actual fact IUS uses Canadian students name, today, and has in past years often misrepresented us. Even at the congress Canadians were often invited to express opinions. These opinions would be published and the Canadian would be noted to be a participant in the congress, thus veiling the true rating of the observer. Therefore on this point little more could be made, and we, as members, would be in a better position to defend ourselves.

2. Acceptance will mean a long hard struggle with an organization whose membership for the most part represents an opinion quite different from ours. We must not kid ourselves that things will be easier ideologies is as real today as it has been at any time.

SECONDLY, THE ADVANTAGES of non-acceptance.

1. Some people hold the idea, perhaps desperately, that if we have nothing to do with IUS it will slowly stew in its own juice, dry up, and blow away. . . . This is a bit of wishful thinking I believe. IUS is still a very strong organization which happens to have a considerable financial backing from several well known governments, so that it will not die for lack of funds and sympathetic co-operation. More important is the fact that it attracts many students from colonial, undeveloped countries and countries which suffer from government oppression. Many of these student bodies have legitimate grievances. IUS provides for them a fighting organization that will champion their cause. We have nothng comparable to this so that the allegiance of these students is with IUS. At the present time we have little chance of wooing these students away from this organization.

2. The disadvantages of not joining are very significant. IUS has amended its constitution to allow us entry on an extremely limited basis on almost any terms we wish to make. It is a challenge they have put to us. We either accept and show we are interested in making some contact with the Eastern countries or we ignore them. If we ignore them they are somewhat justified in saying that they have compromised to make contact and to ease the world tension but we have not. This would make rather good propaganda and might convince other students of the world that we are not interested in discussing our differences with the East. We will in fact be building our own negative Iron Curtain towards the East.

3. The advantages of membership are several. The first reason is perhaps the most important and that is that we are still anxious to get together with the East and talk over common problems with a view to understanding our differences and also attempting to cooperate on at least a limited basis in practical projects of mutual concern. This action will prevent the East from making a super-abundance of propaganda.

BY GOING TO IUS and presenting our views we protect ourselves by the fact that we tell the East the true position of students in Canada. Otherwise this little duty may be preformed by some others such as the case with the Holland and the USA at the present time.

Another important aspect of personal contact with the East is that it affords an excellent opportunity to assess the true situation of the students in Eastern countries by private conversations. Needless to say, what is said officially by the student organization, for example of Poland, and by Polish students are often two entirely opposite things. The official report is what they would like to have in Poland, and the unofficial private report is what actually exists. If we abandon this organization we lose the only opportunity of intimate contact with the Eastern student opinion. We must realize that in these countries the majority of students cannot express their real feelings by letter or by any normal means of communication. To find out we must go there and speak with them.

OUT OF THIS ASSOCIATION can come many good results, particularly on practical cooperation in assisting students in need all over the world. This cooperation would eliminate the competitive aspects of assistance and would ensure that assistance would be provided in those areas where it is needed most without unnecessary duplication of services.

As you can see from these remarks there are disadvantages. . . . I feel the advantages outweigh the disadvantages. It is with these things in mind that I make a recommendation to the members of the SAC that they seriously consider an associate membership with the IUS.

Last Half Drive Gives UWO Win

By JIM PROUDFOOT

They played two games of football at London's Little Memorial Stadium Saturday afternoon. The first game was won by the Varsity Blues 10-0. The second was won by the University of Western Ontario Mustangs 13-0. Unfortunately for the U. of T. cause, these two matches were halves of the same game and, when put together, added up to a 13-10 victory for the Westerners.

After romping to a 10-0 lead in the first half on unconverted touchdowns by Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz, the Blues did a complete about-face and couldn't do anything right in the disastrous second half hen the Mustangs ran wild. It was Gino Fracas, Assumption College's contribution to the UWO squad, who killed the Toronto heroes. The speedy Windsorite, playing with an injured foot, roared through the Varsity defences for a pair of touchdowns and converted them both. Jacques Belec counted the other Western point on a kick to the deadline with the minute flag flying.

Though they were jittery throughout the first half, the Mustangs didn't have a weak link after they got rolling. Their line was more than adequate with fellows like centre Doug rew, captain Jack Thompson at guard and tackle Dick Martin—who blocked both of Steve Oneschuk's convert attempts —but was overshadowed by a driving backfield which plowghed for 225 yards along the ground in the second half as against a mere 70 in the first. Fracas, Jacques Belec, Garnet Mason and Brian Young carried the ball time after time, marking up 13 first downs in the second half against Varsity's two. Add to that the quarterbacking of Don Getty, who completed 10 of 14 passes, including six of six in the second half, and you have the story of the game, which prolonged the jinx which has seen the Blues go win-less in London since 1936, a 17-year drought.

Although they dominated the play right from intermission on, the Mustangs didn't hit the score sheet till the last play of the third quarter, Fracas cashing a march from the Western 30. They went for five consecutive first downs before Fracas ripped 17 yards into payoff territory. He was winded on the play but stayed in kick the convert.

The clincher came with about five minutes to play. Jocko Thompson, the UWO fullback, intercepted one of Olie Mandryk's passes at his own 35 and the Mustangs galloped all the way from there. The

Stress IUS, Fee Raise At NFCUS Conference

By RICH ANCO

Montreal, Oct. 12 — Staff. The 17th annual conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students got underway here yesterday with 20 universities participating. Already two controversial issues havs made their appearance on the conference floor.

The question of the NFCUS per capita fee raise was hinted at by the federations president, Raghbir Basi. He urged serious consideration of the need for a fee increase, and listed areas in which more funds were required.

The University of Montreal, which had withdrawn from the national student party last year, because a $1.00 fee raise was not approved, had an observing delegation present. This delegation was allowed to speak on opening day to make clear its position to NFCUS.

They explained that Montreal considered a $1.00 fee as essential to the well-being of NFCUS instead of sterile discussion on international affairs. The University of Montreal delegation urged more concentration on national problems and a complete orientation of NFCUS ideology.

However, an international atmosphere was evident at the conference from the very beginning. As the meeting progressed, it became interestingly clear that the question of the NFCUS associate membership with the International Union of Students (IUS) might be the most important at the conference.

To add to this atmosphere, representatives from several other national unions were introduced and allowed to speak. Pierre Trouvat, vice-president of the French National Union of Students, Clasus Resio, past vice-president of the German National Union of Students and R. Havroto, past president of National Union of Indian Students' passed on their greetings to NFCUS.

Lewis Perinbam, National Secretary of the World Union of Students of Canada (WUSC) brought greetings from the Scottish Union of Students. Representatives from the US students' union also spoke. Three new NFCUS members were introduced in yesterday morning's session:- The University of St. Dunstan's, Waterloo University, and Queen's University. NFCUS membership now totals 22 universities. St. Francis Xavier and OAC are not represented at this conference.

Along with the IUS and fees questions, two others will be holding most of the attention of the delegates. It appears that the Russian student issue may come up again at this conference. With this, a recommendation of last year's NFCUS meeting — The desirability of a full-time president, may reach final decision.

Masthead

There will be a Masthead Meeting in The Varsity office at 5:00 p.m. this afternoon.

Finn Choir Serenading For SHARE

Tickets to a concert to be presented by the Helsinki Male Chorus will be sold by the Student Help for Asian Relief and Education committee this year. Arrangements have been concluded with the Finnish Consul for SHARE to sell 500 seats.

The Students' Administrative Council was asked to sponsor the concert at its first meeting, but decided against it. Last year SHARE sponsored an appearance by the tenor Roland Hayes in October.

The Choir will sing in Massey Hall on November 16th. It will arrive at noon and be welcomed in Convocation Hall that afternoon. The Chorus is from the University of Helsinki with which the late Warden of Hart House, Nicholas Ignatieff, was associated. Its last visit to this country was approximately ten years ago.

The SHARE committee will hold a one week campaign this year from November 9th to 13th. In past years Share has raised funds by holding an Indian Goods Sale; organising a band concert in which bands from groups all over the campus took part; showing sports films; charging spectators attending the Saturday football games 50 cents for parking on the campus; and raffling off Shirley Eckle.

Fish Bones Anyone ?

Want to lose 25 pounds the hard way? Ray Vanstone did. has just returned home from spending 37 days in the bush land of Northern Quebec. His diet consisted of Caribou moss, berries and partridge, not to mention fish bones.

Ray was one of seven men who were forced to land after losing their way in a single-engined Norseman last August 25.

Circumstances seemed to be against them from the beginning. The country was only half mapped and it was the pilot's first run of this nature. Running low on gas they were forced to land on Lake Emmanuel.

Ray's first reaction to the situation was one of nonchalance. He recalls sitting on the place swatting black flies, waiting for the rescue that didn't come till 37 days later.

Eventually as the seriousness of their situation was realized the jokes gave way to speculation. As Ray puts it, there were always three possible ways out. The air force might find them. The Indian, at those campsite they were, might return and there was always the chance of finding their way out on their own. They had their low points, as when they lost their fishing bet, but they never really gave up hope.

When asked what they did in their spare time Ray replied that actually they had very little. They had to keep the fire going, hunt for food and chop wood. The rations that they had were not sufficient. They were notable for the absence of salt, sugar and chocolate. As soon as possible they tried to live off the land. After awhile they had to lock up the "grub box" to keep them going when they had reconnaissance tripes. As Ray puts it, they were slightly hungry.

The men baceme very close friends. From the beginning they acted as a team, when they could have given way to bickering and fighting. They talked mostly about their girl friends, families, children and food. When they had time they played cards, manufactured from cigarette boxes.

They called their camp "Chateau Aurora," because of the northern light.

On the last day of their stay at the Chateau Ray was about half a mile from the camp picking berries when he heard the sound of a plane overhead. He had heard that sound a few times before. Once a plane had passed overhead with only a wisp of a cloud in the sky. He hadn't seen them. This time Ray looked up to see the plane circling above them. He ran to the camp and found his fellows embracing each other shouting wild cheers. They arrived in Montreal to be greeted with a barrage of flashbulbs and reporters.

Right now all Ray wants to do is rest up, get back to school, regain his 25 pounds and "among other things" see his girl-friend Miss Ann Hutt, II UC, whose lucky locket he had throughout the ordeal.

Second Highest Military Award Earned By Engineering Student

On Tuesday October 5, The Department of National Defense announced its list of major awards and decorations for the Korean campaign. Among those winning the Military Cross, the empire's second highest award for bravery was a fourth year student in Civil Engineering, Charles "Chuck" Carter.

Carter is attending the University of Toronto after one year in Korea in order to complete his civil engineering course. He attended the Royal Military College in Kingston from 1948 to 1952. After graduation from RMC, he elected to join the permanent army and make a career in the Royal Canadian Engineers. Carter was posted to Korea as a first Lieutenant on the second of October 1952, and remained in that theatre on acitve service until he was posted to the University of Toronto in August 1953.

The citation telling Carter's exploits reads in part. "Lt. Carter served in Korea since Oct. 52. He was first employed as a liaison officer and assistant engineer intelligence officer with the 23rd Field Squadron and then as troop reconnaissance officer with the 59th Field Squadron" during this time he displayed "Outstanding qualities of leadership and proficiency and by his own fearless actions when under enemy fire, has proved a fine example of courage and devotion to duty."

"During January '53, he supervised the installation of field defences on the "Hook" during which his trooop was frequently subjected to enemy shelling," where he was an "inspiration to his men, remaining calm composed and cheerful at all times, and frequently exposed himself to danger.'

"From 14-25 May '53 he was "In charge of a mine lifting operation under most difficult conditions as it had to be carried out in darkness in the face of the enemy. Due to presence of numerous shell fragments, use of a mine detector was rendered ineffective and the mines had to be lifted by the slow, arduous prodding method.

"Due to careful planning and organization the operation proceeded smoothly from night to night and although the mine lifting party was frequently subjected to machine gun fire, Lt. Carter's steady, calm cheerfulness instilled a spirit of confidence in his team."

"The successful completion of this task under very difficult conditions, was due to this officer's high qualities of tenacity, devotion to duty and leadership. His disregard for his own safety, his untiring efforts and his fine leadership have been an example to his men."

When interviewed, Carter said "I think I got it because we did not lose any men."

Carter was born in Niagara Falls, Ontario in 1929 and spent his elementary and secondary school career there. At RMC he was

Archers At Home On Range

The Hart House Archery Club will hold an organization meeting in the Rifle Range, Hart House at 8.00 p.m., today, 13th October. Beginners are especially invited to join the club.

Competent instruction will be given by Mr. Gordon May. Equipment is provided for those who do not have their own. Shooting takes place in the range on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7.30 to 10.30 p.m.

Monthly tournaments are held in the C.O.T.C. Drill Hall, 119 St. George Street, in which visiting clubs participate. A series of matches are also held with O.A.C., Guelph. Two teams are usually entered in the Canadian Indoor Mail Match. Last year, Hart House Club finished in fourth place, Vancouver archers taking the honours. Other teams competing were: Oshweken Six Nations, King's Forest A.C., Victoria A.C., Nottingham A.C., Cedarvale A.C., Medicine Hat A.C., Kamloops A.C., Indian Head A.C., Edmonton A.C., Ivanhoe A.C. and Weston A.C.

The club welcomes all interested in archery, novice and champion alike.

Lost

Obviously the little girl is dejected. Reason: something has been lost. No, it wasn't the last yard of her skirt, and it isn't down the sewer. It was Saturday's ball game, kiddies.

Quiet Weekend ?

Remark overheard in the Hotel London last Friday evening: "This is about the quietest Varsity weekend I've ever seen here."

Moral: First impressions aren't always correct ones.

Some three hours later, at about 2.30 Saturday morning, the Hotel London burst into flames and that was the indication of things to come. It was on the fifth floor, just down the hall from where the Varsity Blues football team was bedded down, that the fire broke out, and the damage done before the blaze was extinguished was estimated at $4,000 by hotel officials. A guest — definitely not a U. of T. person — caused the fire when he fell asleep while smoking and one room was completely gutted by the flames.

The Varsity footballers were aroused by the alarm and some of them were among the first at the scene of the conflagration.

The London fire department, unheralded by sirens in order to avert a panic, arrived soon afterwards and, within an hour, smoke-filled corridors were the only evidence of anything out of the ordinary.

The Varsity supporters began to arrive in force Saturday morning — by train, by bus, by automobile, by thumb — and by game time more than 1,500 U. of T. fans had joined 4,000 Western homecoming alumni (and a Kelvinator convention) to make London a very crowded town.

Western's homecoming week-end had opened Friday night with a campus show and resumed Saturday noon with a float parade. Led by the UWO band and cheerleaders, the parade's 20 floats moved through the downtown section before heading up to the campus and Little Stadium.

Every nook and cranny of West- crammed by the opening kickoff. Seating capacity is listed as 12,000 and there were standees, gate crashers, fence-jumpers all over the place. A few score people stood on a hillside at the western end of the stadium and must have had an excellent, though long-range, view of the proceedings. In the valley between their natural grandstand and the end of the stadium, a UWO golfer nonchalantly practised his putting.

Both bands staged their halftime displays; the Varsity Blue and White outfit repeated the four-wheels formation that featured the Queen's game the previous Saturday. Western's band, with six majorettes leading the way, went through a series of intricate marches.

Varsity's loss, after leading 10-0 at half time, failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the U. of T. contingent, most of which stayed over for various festivities and wakes. Most popular social event was the campus roam-around dance, with three separate floors in which it was possible to roam.

Although the hardy and seasoned Western grads continued their convivial homecoming festivities for the remainder of the week-end, Varsity supporters trickled home in increasing numbers Sunday. Trickle? Float would be a better word.

Mike Pearson To Preside For Convocation In Arts At Victoria College Chapel

Hon. Lester B. Pearson will preside at the Convocation in Arts to be held at Victoria College Chapel tonight at 8:30. This will be part of the program arranged for Victoria University's Charter Day, which is celebrated today.

D. E. J. Pratt will peak at the Annual Dinner, to be held in Burwash Hall at 6.00 p.m. A plaque will be dedicated to the memory of those who died in World War II at 5.00. This will be followed by the annual meeting of the Victoria Alumni Association in Alumni hall at 5.15.

L. B. PEARSON

Pearson, Canada's Minister of External Affairs, is also the Chancellor of Victoria University. He graduated from Vic in 1919 before going to Oxford where he received both a B.A. and an M.A. He returned to Toronto in 1924 and lectured for two years in Modern History before being made an assistant professor.

In 1928 Pearson became the first secretary of the Department of External Affairs. He was appointed as a special assistant to the League of Nations in 1933. After serving as Canadian Minister to the United States for three years, he was the Canadian Ambassador in Washington from 1945 to 1946. The first Canadian Minister to the US was another Vic grad, the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey.

Dr. E. J. Pratt, Professor Emeritus of English at Victoria, is renowned in the world of poetry. He is on the three man Editorial Board of Saturday Night and has won the Governor General award for poetry. His poems include— "Breboeuf and his Brethren", "Towards the last Spike" and "The Titanic".

Bladen Urges Management And Labour To Co-operate Studying Market Conditions

The wage gap between skilled and unskilled labour should be widened, not narrowed, Professor V. W. Bladen told the Political Economy Club at its opening meeting at Falconer Hall. He felt, however, that considerable difficulties would be involved in such a policy.

He pointed out that increased skilled labour would expand productivity. In this way unskilled labour would benefit too, he said.

"The United Automobile Workers of America have shown more profound appreciation of the role of the economist than is generally found," said Professor Bladen. He has recently been appointed a member of an Advisory Committee to the UAW.

"It is not for the economist to pass judgement on collective bargaining as such." But it is his job, he said, to point out to unions and management that a new factor, an elastic monetary supply, has produced a new situation in the sphere of wage determination.

He emphasized that the forces of the market should be the guiding principle in the economist's advice to industry. Labour and management should, he felt, be criticized whenever they ignore the necessities of the market in collective bargaining.

To the question of an appropriate wage policy in depression as a means of combating depression, he suggested that other policies would be more effective.

The importance of taking the market into consideration was again expressed by Professor Bladen, this time in connection with the field of job evaluation. He hoped, too, that this field would become more scientific.

Proper Poster Procedure

Before you adorn the hall of University College with that gorgeous and glaring poster, you had better stop and check. Hear ye the decisions of a student-staff liaison committee at its conference last spring.

First, make sure you have only one poster, unless you are announcing more than one event. Carry it to the Principal's Office, where it will be signed and given to Joe, the caretaker. If you follow these steps carefully, the poster is guaranteed to appear soon in the alcove on either side of the rotunda in UC.

If this recipe doesn't work, Roger Bull, President of the UC Lit, will be fooled. He thinks it's a good idea. "It gives everybody a fair chance and helps remedy a situation which was getting out of hand."

Friday Eve Pep Rally Coming Up

A street dance will be an important part of the Pep Rally to be held this Friday night the Blue and White Society has announced. The dance will be in front of Convocation Hall where a bandstand will be set up.

Garth McDowell, Assistant to the Warden of Hart House, will act as Master of Ceremonies for the rally during which the members of the Varsity team will be introduced. The Blue and White band and the Cheerleaders will also be on hand.

The rally itself will start at 8:30 p.m. and will last until approximately 9.15 p.m. At that time the dance will get under way in a roped off section between the Skule building and Convocation Hall. Music will continue until midnight. Square dancing will be called. Pep Rally Chairman Bill Harris announced that food and drink will also be available.

"The Society considers this a crucial year in the status of the pep rally" Publicity Chairman John McKellar said yesterday. "If this rally is not a success the chances for future rallies look very slim. All the students on the campus are asked to support this activity," he said.

The street dance and rally are the beginning of a Home-coming Week-end. The float Parade will be held Saturday morning, the foot-ball game and the tea-dance in the afternoon, and the Home-coming dance at the Royal York Hotel in the evening. The Society has even planned something for Sunday. Caledon Hills Farm will hold an Open House.

Trinity Delegate Demands SAC Abolish Itself Now

The Students' administrative Council was asked to abolish itself at the special meeting held last Thursday evening. The motion was put before the Council by Scott Symons, Trinity representative.

At the last College Meeting of last year, Trinity College was asked to secede from the SAC by Dwight Fulford, who represented Varsity last year in the Bradings Trophy Debates.

This motion was considered out of order but a motion that the SAC representative be required to ask the SAC to abolish itself was passed "almost unanimously." Symons seconded the motion Ian Wishart, last year's Secretary of Trinity College Literary Institute, reported yesterday.

"The motion was passed" Wishart said "because it was felt that the SAC was wasting not only all its own time but was then attempting to waste all our money." The financing of a Russian Student Visit was being debated at the time.

Symons reported that Fulford, now studying at Oxford, had based his arguments on the stand taken by the SAC on regarding the Uraguaian Coffee situation and the Tibetan rice question.

The motion presented by Symons was ruled out of order. SAC Chairman Gorden Gwynne-Timothy ruled that Council could not discuss it at a Special Meeting.

Table Tennis Season Soon

The Hart House Table Tennis Club will hold its organization meeting on Wed., Oct. 14, at 7.30 p.m. in the Hart House lunchroom.

The club provides team competition in singles and doubles play, as well as a playoff for a club singles champion. Prospective new members and past members are invited. Tables will be set up for play and refreshments will be served.

French 'Culture'

Cercle Soirees

A ticket to Paris costs more than most students can afford but for twenty five cents and a little imagination, Paris awaits you here on the campus.

On Wednesday night, October 15, the Cercle Francais of University College will transform the Women's Union theatre into a corner of France. — that is, if French songs, dances and refreshments constitute France!

The French Club of University College has been active for many years trying to promote activities connected with French "culture." Skits written and produced by the students are the floorshows of the evening. For Wednesday's meeting, a parody on French History, "1789 x Tout Cela," has been prepared.

One of the main purposes of the French Club is to encourage people to speak French and to enjoy it. At the first few meetings, students draw apart and decide among themselves how to ask for a cup of coffee in professional-sounding French.

Songs ranging from "Aloutte" to the tongue twisting "Les Chemises de L'archi-duchesse" lead to a sense of familiarity with the language.

The big yearly project of the French Club is the production of the French play. This year, the play is "Robinson" by Jacques Superveille, a hit in Paris last winter. The cast of the play is composed almost entirely of students. It will be presented in Hart House early in November.

Happy Holiday Weekend As Exchange Pays Off

Many Toronto students enjoyed a happy Thanksgiving week-end. Clarke Deller (II U.C.) S.A.C. Book Exchange manager explained Friday, "Not only those students who drank their fill at London, but also those who were forced to stay at home, spent a happy time after picking up the cash owing to them on Friday afternoon at the Book Exchange."

Deller dispensed $1,495 in doses ranging from 14 cents to $40.00. These monies were given away as part of the payments on the books that the Exchange had sold for the students.

"The eagerness with which clients sought their cash amazed me," Deller continued. "The avid throng" which besieged 119 St. George, side door, was so vast that we found ourselves in the embarrassing position of being without bills at 4.30 p.m. With the holiday week-end ahead however the stu-qualm."

Again next Friday 1 to 5 p.m. payments will be made for the books that have been sold. Students accepted silver without dents are urged to make a point of collecting the money owing to them. This will be the last opportunity for them to obtain their money until next Fall. The Exchange will be open for one more 'Bargain-filled' week.

SADLER'S WELLS BALLET

The Sleeping Beauty

This ballet was first performed in 1890 at the Maryinsky Theatre of St. Petersburg, Russia with book and choreography by Marius Petipa and music by Tchaikovsky. Because of its extravagance it had limited performance, but has survived where other nineteenth century ballets faded, largely due to the richly rhythmic and melodic score of Tchaikovsky. From this time up until the Sadler's Wells revival in 1939 various grandiose or selective versions were attempted, the most notable of which were "Aurora's Wedding" of Diaghilev and "Princess Aurora" of Anton Dolin. The Sadler's Wells' production, the same one which is being presented in Toronto this month, remains the one most faithful to the original.

Three acts and five scenes unfold the story of the Sleeping Beauty from birth to marriage with a resplendent magnificence. The opening scene of the first act is the christening of Princess Aurora including the curse of the wicked fairy Carabosse and the gifts of all good fairies and the Lilac Fairy. Sixteen years later their Royal Highnesses entertain for the suitors of the princess when the evil prophecy is accomplished and the Lilac fairy appears to look after her part of the bargain. Time being nought in fairy tales, a hundred years passes between the first and second acts. With the aid of the Lilac Fairy, the amorous and valiant ("a young and amorous prince is always valiant") Prince Charming finds his fated one and enthusiastically kisses her free from the spell.

The final act showing the marriage celebration contains the many divertissements and solo dances which have been most often performed — both separately and in shorter versions. The "guests" who perform are characters from other of Perrault's tales in "Contes de ma mere l'Oye". There is the dance of four precious jewels, the dance of Puss in Boots and the White Cat, the Bluebird Variation danced by Blue bird and the Enchanted Princess Florine, and the dances of Red Riding Hood and the Wolf, of Hop O'My Thumb and the Ogre, and of Cinderella and accompanying Prince. The festivities and the Ballet end with the grand dance of Princess Aurora and Prince Charming.

But Perrault follows them further and notes realistically that "they had but very little sleep; the princess had no occasion . . ."
how do you do it? Give it to me that I may see
"'Ha!' said the princess, 'this is very pretty; if I can do so.' She had no sooner taken the spindle into her hand, than whether being very hasty at it or somewhat unhandy, or that the decree of the Fairy had so ordained it, it ran into her hand, and she fell down in a swoon." And that's how it happened in Perrault's tale, "La Belle au Bois Dormant", which forms the plot basis for The Sleeping Beauty ballet.

Wendy Michener.

Dance, Ballerina

In the picture above, Violetta Elvin, one of the principal dancers of the Sadler's Wells Ballet Company poses on "pointe". She will appear with the Company in its performances of The Sleeping Beauty and Le Lac des Cygnes in Maple Leaf Gardens on October 27, 28, 29, 30.

Max Orobio de Castro At Conservatory

The "Special Events" series of the oyal Conservatory of Music of Toronto last Thursday evening produced for its first recital Max Orobio de Castro, eminent Dutch cellist. To say that the program was a bit strenuous for a man well in his sixties would be perhaps the understatement of this concert season. And to add icing to the cake, the aging cellist added three encores in as many curtain calls.

Mr. de Castro opened with Fiacco's famous cello concerto, which he played with a modicum of technical accuracy and vigor. The third movement marded "Adagio" brought into prominence the old French School of which he is perhaps the sole remaining exponent. Unfortunately, I could not appreciate the phrasing he employed in the work even though the effect was unusual.

The "Toccata" by Frescobaldi, an often heard work was accurately played, if a little on the sentimental side. Following were three of Hindesmith's compositions in which Mr. de Castro and his accompanist Lloyd Powell seemed to be at odds most of the time, Mr. Powell preferring the precise side, and Mr. de Castro the delicate side of the composer.

Kodaly's intense composition for unaccompanied cello was the shining star in an otherwise unconvincing program. It is a virtuosic composition of intricate rhythms and surgin melodies in which Mr. de Castro was nothing short of sensational, (a rarely used word in a critic's vocabulary). He was consistantly sensitive, satisfying, and sincere. Mr. de Castro was at all times the master, holding a spellbound audience, sometimes by a single thread of intimacy, sometimes by the sheer force of the music. A rousing ovation greeted the cellist after the strenuous half-hour performance.

Ravel's "Habanera" followed — an unpretentious bit of music played reflectively and with great concern for its sensitive nuances and gentle intimacy.

The performance concluded with "Requierbros" by Cassado, and although his name is well-known in the cello repertory I still consider a good deal of his music well below the standard of good cello works. In short, "Requierbros" is a pot-boiler, and as such was played with the usual extravagance required of it.

Two encores followed sufficient applause. They were Saint-Saens' "Allegro Appassionato" and the "Prelude" from Bach's third suite for solo cello. The "Bach" was performed in excellent taste and was thoroughly enjoyable.

Dr. Edward Johnson formerly with the Metropolitan Opera and noted philanthropist opened the program with a few introductory remarks and an anecdote worthy of Bob Hope. He also had a consolin- word for all good Dodger fans. Bravo Sir, Bravo!

The next concert in the current series will feature Suzanne Block, lutenist, on November the fifth.

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Going His Way

In From Here to Eternity, at Shea's, it appears that the wide screen has finally come into its own. I don't know whether this one was specifically made for panoramic viewing, or whether the titles were simply designed with the increasing wide-screen trend in view, but eliminating the sawed-off credits that were so annoying in earlier films like Shane made Fred Zinneman's latest even more enjoyable than I had expected.

Obviously anyone who (like me) missed reading the book is at a great disadvantage in criticising the film as anything but a film. Rumour has it that the film is, to a high degree, faithful to the book—minus some of the rougher spots, I suppose. Be that as it may, it certainly creates an authentic atmosphere of its own. The superior qualities of pace and construction which make From Here to Eternity a coherent, impressive film are due, in large part to the : reen-play, on e the most expertly written recapitulations of a novel I have ever watched.

James Jones' bitter yet idealistic story of Prewitt, the gritty soldier who loves the army abouve all else, despite the rough treatment it gives him seems peculiarly suitable for the screen. The smooth, effective alternation of sub-plot and sub-plot are brilliantly achieved and counter-pointed. As Prewitt, Montgomery Clift gives his best performance to date, free of the annoying mannerisms he previously displayed. Deborah Kerr achieves a surprising change of pace from her usual lady-like characterisations as the frustrated wife of the company captain, and Burt Lancaster is excellent as her lover, the company's first sergeant, who is as dedicated a soldier as Prewitt, but a far more effective one.

Frank Sinatra, of course, remains the major surprise of the film. Many times in the past he has done a great deal with the leanest of roles—for example in Take me out to the Ball Game a few years back. Here, as Angelo Maggio, Prewitt's spunky pal who is beaten to death by a sadistic sergeant, he is superb—and that's all there is to say. Many of the kudos that have been given to From Here to Eternity are due to Fred Zinneman, who has made few directorial mistakes since his first directorial job, The Search. A few other films like this one and last year's High Noon, and Zinneman will be well on the road to film immortality, if he hasn't achieved that hard-won and somewhat dubious honour already.

Incidentally, one of the best UPA cartoons in a dog's age is also playing at Shea's. Though the audience seemed somewhat non-plused at the lack of blood-shed. Christopher Crumpet, (about a little boy who turned into a chicken every time he couldn't have what he wanted), was on the whole well-received. Its clever and intrepid animation is far better than anything that the always excellent UPA had ever done.

CHRONOLOGICAL

Old Man Mozart

It may not have the following of Martin and Lewis, but The Music of Mazart has its own enthusiastic circle of admirers. This unique series of radio programs, which is now in its second year, is heard every Wednesday night over CBL, from 11 to 12 p.m.

The ambitious aim of its producer is to perform every single work by Mozart that has ever been committed to records. Considering that even excluding all works of doubtful authenticity or late discovery, the catalogue consists of 629 numbers, ranging in scope from short piano pieces to whole operas and masses, there is ample material for programs for years to come.

Mozart's music is presented in approximately the order of composition, and just now the programs include chiefly the 330's of the catalogue, as well as catching up on some early symphonies that were not recorded at the time they should have been performed to conform to strict chronological order. This Wednesday's major work is to be the fragmentary opera Zaide, which has never been heard in Canada before.

Even admitting, as most people will, that Mozart is one of the greatest as well as one of the most prolific composers that ever lived, it is obvious that there will be some dull music if one does not make a selection. The object of the producer, Alan Sangster, is to show the greater works in their proper relation to the lesser.

On listening to Mozart's entire output in this way, one hears the tentative experiments as well as the finished marvels of Mozart's art, and one comes to realize the full wonder of the latter. One hears Mozart progress from an ordinary, competent composer of the late 18th century to one of the supreme masters of music. His masterpieces are revealed as works that are derived from a man's personality, in the same way that Beethoven's are.

Alan Sangster's program notes are brief and factual, and consist mainly of direct quotations from Mozart's letters, and the recognized authorities on his life and works — Einstein, Jahn and St. Foix. These programs present an opportunity few listeners will ever get again to become really well acquainted with Mozart's music.

IRC Has Open Meet On Near East Talk

"The Modern Near East" will be the subject of Professor John Wevers' address at to-morrow's open meeting of the International Relations Club. The meeting will be held at 4.15 p.m. in Falconer Hall.

He will give an analysis of the elements of unity and disunity in the economic and religious history of the Near East, in their relation to the understanding of recent and nascent problems.

A native of Wisconsin, Prof. Wevers' joined the staff of the University of Toronto in 1951 as a member of the department of Oriental Languages. Before he came to Toronto, he was on the staff of Princeton University.

In the summer of 1951 Dr. Wevers taught at the University of Berlin. He attended the International Congree of The History of Religions in Amsterdam.

CBC Opera Season Opens With Turandot Cosi Fan Tutte Next

This week begins the new season of CBC performances, with a production of Puccini's last work, Turandot. The CBC produced this opera some years ago, and they now feel that their opera company has matured sufficiently to warrant a repetition.

Turandot tells a tragic fairy tale about a Chinese princess (sung by Louise Roy) and her suitors. Puccini took care in writing the opera to diffentiate the Chinese idiom of this piece from the Japanese idiom of his earlier Madame Butterfly. Nicholas Goldschmidt will conduct the performance.

Later in the year, the CBC will present several other seldom-heard operas, as well as two that are more familiar. On November 25 they will feature a performance of Mozart's comedy Cosi F :n Tutte, of The School for Lovers. January will see a performance of Verdi's La Traviata.

In February the Montreal company will perform a double bill of two comic operas, Ravel's L'Heure Espagnole, and Mozart's The Impresario, famed chiefly for its overture.

The final production of the year will be A Tale of Two Cities, by the ost imposery Australian composer Arthur Benjamin.

Speaking Of Sport

by JOHN ELLIS

The University of Toronto Blues have not defeated the Western Mustangs in London since 1936. That was the theme of most writing prior to Saturday's classic at the J. W. Little Memorial Stadium. And it's the theme of most writing after that classic. We will go so far as to predict that it will be the theme of most writing a year from now when the Blues are preparing to travel into Londontown.

As all that are interested know, the reason that Varsity still has seventeen years of frustration to avenge is that the Blues lost 13-10 on Saturday. Various factors were instrumental in that loss.

The Blues probably contributed as much to their own defeat as the Mustangs. At the end of the first half Varsity had a comfortable 10-0 lead. That's right, a ten-point lead in the Mustangs' own backyard. Up to that point the Blues had capitalized on the breaks. Bob Pinkney completed a beautiful 43-yard pass play for a TD and Phil Muntz grabbed a Western fumble for the second Varsity touchdown and the final scoring play of the day for Toronto. Until half-time the Blues had played good, heads-up ball. The line completely outplayed the Mustangs for the first 30 minutes.

That's true in pretty well in every department. Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz totalled 96 yards rushing to 70 by Western. Passing was pretty well even with Olie Mandryk completing 3 of 7 passes while Don Getty was completing 4 of 8. Each team had had one pass intercepted. But Western fumbled four times to Toronto's once with the wide-awake Blues recovering their own and two of the Mustang fumbles. In other words, the picture was shaping up much like it had here in Toronto two weeks earlier when Toronto won 11-1.

After half-time the picture changed rapidly. The Blues line seemed to letdown badly. So badly that Western monopolized most of the play and to such an extent that they rang up 225 yards rushing to 46 for Toronto.

Bue we are going to minimize a spectacular effort on the part of four Mustangs by maximizing the letdown of the Blues. For our money, and we lost a fair bit, Gino Fracas, Garnet Mason, Jacques Belec and Doug Drew won the ball game for Western. We would be the last one to deny them the game on their efforts. They certainly deserved to win. You would have to have seen it to believe it. We think that Fracas, Belec and Mason will prove to be the best backfield threesome since the McFarlanes and Parry played for Western.

We might say that the Blues almost helped these four lads to look as good as they were. On the winning touchdown, Gino Fracas went around right end with three Mustangs to block for him. There was really no reason for his intereference to be there because there was no one out there to block. There was not a Blue within ten yards of the play and Gino made use of it going over FOR THE WINNING TD WITHOUT A SOUL TO PUT A HAND ON HIM.

The Blues will learn in practice this week that it doesn't pay to play for thirty minutes per game. We are very glad that we won't have to toil under Coach Bob Masterson's whip.

End Notes: Bill Bewley and Don Fawcett were guests in the press box during the game. It was bewildering to note that Fawcett, who is an Assistant Coach for the McMaster Marauders, knew the play numbers as well as Olie Manderyk. The reason being that Donny was a QB with the Blues last year. Gino Fracas now leads the Intercollegiate scoring race with 27 points. He collected 12 of Western's 13 on Saturday to add to his 15 from the McMaster game of a week ago.

went to the Blues' 46 in two plays and then Garnet Mason found a big hole and was just about away when Bill McFarlane, a defensive giant all afternoon for Varsity, nailed him at the nine. Fracas went to the three but the Westerners were penalized 15 for roughing. Mason got that back and Fracas went wide to the right to score.

The Blues still weren't beaten till Don Getty intercepted two of Olie Mandryk's desperation passes. The second time was on the Blues' 20 and Belec kicked his single from there.

Varsity's first touchdown had come midway in the first period. Bobby Dale set it up by running back a Western kick from his own 50 to the Mustangs' 43. On the next play, Bob Pinkney got behind Gino Fracas and gathered in a long pass from Olie Mandryk. He was in the clear but had to scramble over the line after Fracas partially tackled him.

They made it 10-0 and an upset seemed in the making soon after the teams changed ends. Brian Young received an Al Haig k ck on the UWO 40, butw as jarred loose from the ball when Varsity end Bruce Johnson tackled him. Fullback Phil Muntz picked up the loose ball and outran the Western defenders to the goal line.

Though they didn't get much opportunity to show their stuff after half time, Varsity's backfielders got in some fair running. Phil Muntz went well at the fullback spot and Bob Pinkney demonstrated some of the speed he's noted for. There were at least two occasions when he eluded the Western secondary for a touchdown pass and both times the throws just missed. Bill McFarlane produced some amazing runbacks of Western kicks—he had to in order to match Brian Young's work in the same department.

Big Joe Harris celebrated his return to college ball by blasting paths through to give Getty a few bad moments. Roy McMurtry was a stalwart at the tackle spot, too, recovering three Western fumbles before getting his hand stepped on for a six-stitch gash. Don Smith was great at end and his runningmates, Bill Horton, Bruce Johnson and Ted Kennedy had their moments, too.

Blue Notes . . . Olie Mandryk tried 13 passes, completed three for a net gain of 36 yards. One was the 43-yard TD play to Pinkney and the other two were screen passes which went for losses . . . Ed Skrzypek was the other QB who dressed for the Blues but didn't get in the game till the dying minutes, long enough to concede Belec's single . . . A capacity crowd of 12,000 turned up for the game, which was played under dark skies . . . Western returns to Toronto for a league game on November 7 . . . Next target for the Blues will be the winless McMaster Marauders next Saturday at Varsity Stadium. The Marauders are in the league basement while the Blues are tied with McGill and Queen's for second and Western leads the pack. . . Fracas now has 27 points in two gamse to lead all intercollegiate scorers.

Blues Defeat Colts 19-16 In Intermediate Opener

By MOISHE REITER

By defeating Western Colts 19-16 in their league opener last Friday the Junior Varsity squad set a true course of what is expected to be its third straight Shaw Trophy.

In their trampling of the Colts the Varsity warriors proved themselves "Indian-givers" of the first rank. After seemingly handing the contest to the frisky Colts in the first half, which ended with the Westerns ahead 11-0, Toronto's braves surged back the second half with a nineteen-point barrage that sent the Colts whimnying for their corral.

What was heralded as the best Varsity Intermediate squad in years looked like a good prospect for the biggest let-down in years during the opeing half of Friday's game. So dull was the J-V paly that one observer was moved to dub them the "Varsity Colts". In that whole 30 minutes of play the Baby Blues penetrated the Colt corral only once and even that feeble spark of attack sputtered out before they came close.

Fumbles in the backfield and a line that just couldn't hold the opposition or open up for its ball carriers told the story for Varsity in the initial half. The charging Colt wingline forced Varsity to fumble with Habros' recovery giving Western possession on the Toronto 12. Three plays later, despite the work of the J-V's star centre John Chisholm, Sweeney carried over from the one to put the Westerns 5 points up. Shortly after, Lorne Hunter interceped a Varsity pass 48 yards from the J-V goalline. This time it took the Purple and White all of six plays to notch another major with Fowler running the convert over to drop Varsity behind by 11-0.

Whatever John McManus fed his boys at the half must have been potent stuff because they didn't take long to wipe away all memory of their miserable start. The line got that punchy look out of their eyes and began ripping apart the Western defences while the speedsters on the half-line finally got a chance to move out into the open and do their stuff. Starting from their own 11 the boys in blue trudged up-field to Western 24 where the Colts took over temporarily. On the next play John Chisholm and Bill Miller caused, then recovered a Western fumble on the Colts' 14 whence Bob Smart and Jerry Lansky moved to the two. Johnnie Sopinka went over standing up bringing Varsity into contention for the first time all day.

Wally Bulchak's convert made it 6 for Varsity.

After this powerful drive the Blues faltered and the Westerns pranced merrily to the Varsity 14 in two plays and Lorne Hunter took it from the 14 to add 5 more to the Colts' total.

Things looked dark for the Varsity but they moved back into the game on Harry Wilson's passing. A fast 20-yarder out to Bill Karpinski started a fire in the Varsity crew. Gerry Banks added fuel with a 12-yard drive to the Western 31, and Wally Bulchak made things really hot for Western as he carried around end to the 12 men then lateralled to Al Wong who leapt through a pile of tacklers into the

Vic, PHE Lead Softball

The first week in the women's softball loop ended with another win by PHE second year as the gals took Meds to the tune of 11-6. The whole match was unusually short lasting only two innings and as a result there has been some doubt whether or not the match will be counted. Same old problem!

June Hansford occupied the pitcher's stand for the physedders with Sally Saries doing the honours for Meds very admirally as a matter of fact.

Meds were the late comers and as a result, the match was half-an-hour late to start with. So if anyone has to concede defeat you know who it will be.

Though there are still four weels left in the loop, it is still a good idea to take a look at the first round. PHE third and second year and Vic firsts have won two. Vic seconds and Physed's first year squad have won one each. None of these squads has lost to date.

Saint Hilda's, UC and POTs have lost all matches, UC suffering from a double defeat of last week.

A full schedule will be payed off today and Thursday with single matches slated for the remainder of the week.

Single Gives Gaels Win

Kingston, Oct. 12 (Special)—Frank Geard was the hero of the here Saturday when he kicked the single point that gave the Golden Gaels a 13-12 win over McGill Redmen before 9,000 fans at Richardson Stadium.

Ron Stewart set up the Queen's single which broke a 12-12 deadlock in the fourth quarter. He intercepted a pass from McGill's Len Shaw at the Redmen 40 and raced to the 19 where Geard booted on third down.

Queen's had grabbed a 12-6 lead in the first half on touchdowns in the opening quarter by Jack Cook and in the second quarter by Ron Stewart. Both were converted by Gary Schreider. Sandwitched in between was a major score by McGill's George Klein on a long forward pass and a 30-yard run. Fred Wilmot converted.

McGill made it 12-11 in the third when Herb English scored and then they tied it early in the final stanza when Jack Roberts was rouged on Wright's kick. That set the stage for Geard's game-winning kick.

Soccer Teams Score Lop-Sided Wins Here

By DAVE WOOD

Have you ever watched a soccer game? It can be quite exciting. But have you ever tried to watch a good soccer game whilst doing mental arithmetic on the side? On Friday last, the score keepers had some reckoning to do when the two home teams, between them, scored 20 goals to 1 for the visiting Westerners.

The Senior Blues came our on top of a 6 - 1 decision as centre forward Karl Tamberg scored his second hat trick in as many games. Adding to his stellar effort were Ron Finch, who played an outstanding game, Howie Ashburn and Tulsi Vembu with singles.

But the reason for it all can also found in the playing of men who did not hit the score sheet. Winger Rod Green, who insisted on keeping the mall in front of the Western goal and veteran Jose Atucha whose accurate headwork almost paid off on a couple of occasions. And at centre-half Ron Williams played an "all-around" game.

A special word should be said for the Blues spunky goalie, Ed Duru, who entered the game with an injury and seriously aggravated it as he attempted to stop the lone Western tally.

The JayVees almost outshone their big brothers as they romped to a 14-0 win over the bewildered Colts. That's a fantastic score and here are some details: Sal Liz, at centre forward, scored 5, using his head on three of them; Mike Lehman got 4, Ivan Davis and Dave Wood two each.

A couple of big bouquets go to David Murray-Auden who scored one goal himself and kept the play concentrated on the Western goal. Jack Munday, also in the backfield, played his usual stalwart game.

Cossar Wins Annual Mural Golf Tourney

It probably come as a definite shock to the "Bloop and "Tweeper" set, but football is not the only sporting event during the fall. Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of last week saw the playing of the intramural junior golf tournament.

St. Andrew's was the scene as 126 official entries, under the congenial supervision of Mr. Love, battled for honours. Of the 126 entries, only 89 score cards were returned with Dents leading in this department. Don Cossar, II S.P.S., gave Skule men something more to sing about as he carded a solid 79 to take top place in the tournament. John "Sach" Wilson, III Pharmacy, and D. R. Sortome, IV Dents, tied for second -spot with 82 as N. Schipper of II Law completed the top four with 88. Tom Luck, II Law, 90, L. Schipper, I Law, 91, Don Gilbert, II Dents, 92, and Bryan Fines, II U.C., 93, were other notable scores returned.

Blue Rugger Teams Split Two Decisions

The University Rugger team playing before an unprecedented crowd of about thirty spectators, won its first game of the season on Saturday against Irish II's. The Irish had the better of the first half and their try scored by Charlie Ash, and converted by Doug Brown, was well-deserved.

In the second half the University's forward-play greatly improved but, with Irish desperately striving to maintain their lead, play became extremely to -h. The University's first try came about half-way through the second half, when Bill Chadwick, the Blues' new scrum-half took the ball from a loose scrum and carried it over to score a try which was not converted. About three minutes from the end Ron Ham picked up a loose ball and hurled himself over to put University ahead.

Final score: University — 6, Irish II, 5.

Varsity, with two players injured, was able to field only 14 men against the undefeated Barbarian II's yesterday. In spite of their win, Barbarians did not show the superiority expected of them. University held them well and their first score was a penalty goal, kicked by Bill Webb, (3 points).

In the second half University struggled hard to carry the play to their opponents, but were unable to break through. Chris Bicknell increased the Barbarians' lead, carrying the ball through a mass of University players late in the game, to score an unconverted try.

Final score: Barbarians II 6, University 0.

UWO Wins Senior Golf

McGill University lost its Intercollegiate Union Senior Golf championship to the University of Western Ontario last Friday in a tournament at the Cataraqui Club in Kingston.

Queen's University, the host college, came in as runner-up, a slim three points behin- the winners. The four-man Western team clubbed a 655 total, Queen's ended with 658 and McGill shot 673. Carleton College had 684, University of Toronto 700, Loyola College, Montreal, 703 and the University of Montreal 754.

At Guelph, a combined four-man score of 316 gave University of Toronto the Intercollegiate golf championship.

Second was McMaster University of Hamilton, with 325, and third, the defending champions, the University of Western Ontario, with 341.

The members of the winning team were F. Cope with 76, N. Monteith 79, H. Sampson 80 and L. Loach 81.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

For the benefit of those fortunate, or unfortunate as the case may be, souls who failed to journey as far west as fair London town this weekend, we will give you an account of an early morning interview we had with Gloria Weichel sports scribe on the Western Gazette.

The purpose of the meeting was to see how things ran in women's athletics at that Un- sity, the facilities available and a few other details. Before this meeting we had been feeling a bit low about the cramped way we had to work with our limited facilities, what with four gyms, a couple of swimming tanks and great playing fields. Not that things are so grim up there, but just about as tight.

The amazing thing about Western Women's sports, is that they share facilities with the male members of the campus in a beautiful spacious building called Thames Hall. This five-year-old edifice houses a gym far larger than any on the Toronto campus, a 75-foot swimming tank with under water lighting for synchronized work, women's and men's common rooms as well as mixed common rooms. Golf plays a more important role than here. For ten dollars per year women students may use the spacious cour of the London Hunt and Country club which surrounds the campus. The physed offices are found in the athletic building instead of wandering about the campus, a we do here, to find members of the department, equipment, etc. There is a center for all athletics. A wonderful set-up — what?

Toronto might have had the same set-up had the city not grown up as it has. So as a result, we find ourselves nipping from place to place for our practises and games. Western really has the ideal and such an ideal will never exist here — unless Hart House becomes co-ed. That will be the day!

Women's athletics at Western are divided into four instead of two groupings here. Besides intramural and intercol leagues there is an Interwestern grouping which is a kind of intercol league in which members, usually those in diploma courses vie with squads from Alma and Waterloo colleges. Then there is the Westomatic league which includes squads from MacMaster, OAC and Western. The winner of this league in basketball goes on to play the intercol series in February.

The gals go in for the usual sports being engaged in intramural softball right now. Squash is included in the program, though little enthusiasm has ever been shown. Swimming is the big thing as Western and intramural competition is not battled out till the intercol loop is contested. In this way, those on the intercol squad do not interfere in intercol practises.

By the way, although PHE gals are competing in the intramural loop, to date there have been no protests to the effect that they have been sinning everything. No further comment from this corner! That's a promise.

The third quarter was just under way when Gerry Banks snared a pass from a Colt's fingertips and brought the Blue and White to the Western 33. Wally Bulchak smashed through to the 20 and from there Harry Wilson heaved a long one right into the reaching fingers of Gerry Banks for the third Varsity major. Bulchak's convert sailed over the bar to put the Blue and White ahead for the first time in the day.

Bob Smart added a single in the final minutes, making it 19-16, on which note the game ended.

REQUIRED PHYSICAL EDUCATION MEN — 1952-1953

By order of the Board of Governors each man proceeding to a Bachelor's Degree must participate in the required Physical Education programme during the First and Second year of his attendance of the University. The Physical Education requirements include a Swimming Test which must be taken before November 1st by all First Year men and by men admitted to the Second Year from other Universities. Swimming classes are compulsory for all students who fail to pass the Swimming Test. First Year students are requested to complete this test immediately.

For the current session the Board of Governors have seen fit to make the attendance of ex-service men in this course optional.

At the same time the University Health Service and the Department of Physical Education — Men, wish to emphasize the importance of recreational exercise and athletics. The course as offered at this University provides a means for all students to maintain some measure of physical fitness.

Physical Education credits may be obtained by participation in intercollegiate and intramural sports and instructional classes as noted below.

McCarthyism

How Not To Do It

It was once said that if children learned the facts about sex, they would become promiscuous. Today, there are people who really think that if children learn the facts about communism, they will promptly join the Communist Party.

But results show both arguments to be completely unfounded.

The second, in particular, reveals an utter lack of confidence of some people in their own beliefs and institutions. It is these people who, behind the guise of the smear and the witch-hunt, are making the words freedom and democracy vague and senseless.

"Objectionable" people daily run the gauntlet of public persecution. Vigilante groups, taking the law into their own hands, have increasingly set themselves up (usually with secret funds) as "judges" of schools, of speakers, of books, and of radio programs.

Investigating committees, in the US, acting under congressional immunity, have in too many cases destroyed the reputation of individuals through misrepresentation of the facts, and have continually reached conclusions not based on sufficient evidence. The facts, not wild accusations, are needed.

Today, in anti-communist propaganda, we are told to hate something we do not understand. We are told to condemn a man before we understand the reasons behind his choice of belief. We are told to criticize before we know.

We need not mention the names of people who feel that the challenge of communism can be met without understanding. Every day they smirk at us from blaring headlines. We should, indeed must, abandon their way of overcoming the Communists.

Thanksgiving

The long weekend has come and gone. The Varsity hopes it was appreciated by the students as much as The Varsity appreciated it. But we wonder if, in all "the getting away from the grind" that went on this weekend, enough of us thought of the reason for our fun.

Certainly, Thanksgiving is a time for rejoicing. And what better way is there than getting away from it all. Everybody likes a football weekend. But let us bear in mind the things we are rejoicing. We do have a lot to be thankful for, and if we didn't have it in mind over the weekend, it might be well to take five now, and count your blessings.

Why Not Now?

The Myth Of Socialism

Ed Lowry, III UC, queries the proposed health program of the CCF party.

The C.C.F. party has persistently urged the Canadian government to introduce a National Health Plan by which every Canadian can obtain a complete programme of medical service, financed by the government. They feel that the Canadian poeple are willing to cover the cost in taxes, and that the programme should be non-profit socialistic measure.

THIS PARTY HAS EXPRESSED much interest in our welfare and much confidence in the success of the venture. Now I would ask, why does the C.C.F. party not take advantage of the economic freedom in this country and establish their own health service? It would not be easy; no more so than the other economic ventures which have made Canada what it is today; but they could do it. They are assured of capital through government and private loans, and their own supporters would surely invest heavily. They can hire doctors, rent, buy and build hospitals. They will have to operate on something less than a national scale to start, but soon they can fling the doors open to the clamouring public.

THOUGH I DO NOT share their optimism, I agree that it would be a success. I would certainly subscribe to such a programme, because I would expect a more complete, integrated service at lower cost than exists in the present system of private practices, independent hospitals, and health insurance companies. I believe that our economy has reached such an advanced state, and the medical profession has become so complex and independent, that the time is ripe for such a bold reorganization of health services. Then why does the C.C.F. party not take the initiative, and win the respect of the Canadian people by showing them that the C.C.F. party has the economic foresight and the humanitarian outlook which it claims?

THE REASON IS: that it would destroy the myth of socialism. It would bring the C.C.F. party to face some realities which it has persistently ignored. They would be shown that medicine is a large competitive industry, in which there is little room for profiteering. They would be shown that the only economic functions which a government can handle more efficiently than private enterprize are the services which are insensitive to competition, because the economy is not large enough to support a number of highly competitive independent companies in that field.

This venture would show that there is only one difference between government and private enterprize, that is that public business gets capital from forced taxation and private business gets it through voluntary investment. If an enterprize is so unworthy that it cannot attract voluntary investment, there can be no justification in forcing people to contribute.

IF THE C.C.F. PARTY accepted this challenge it would demonstrate clearly to everyone what socialism is. It is redistribution of wealth, pure and simple. It is a charitable system under which the wealthy are taxed to help pay for medical and other expenses of the poor. Of course I agree that that is how it should be, and so does every political party in Canada. I only wish that the socialists would say so directly, without obscuring the fact with so much economic hocus pocus.

I expect that we will see in the near future, this reorganization of medical services, as a great co-operative enterprize between the Canadian Medical Association, private insurance companies, and private investments, co-ordinated and assisted by the Liberal government, to the satisfaction of all Canadian people.

". . . and above all, don't forget to be yourself. Don't be afraid to let yourself go."

This familiar exhortation drifted out to cat on the somewhat stuffy air from Invocation Hall.

"Freshies, of course" thought cat. "Poor young, innocent, confuse. freshies." Wondering if the speech had changed at all he followed one of his private passages and arrived at the closed prompter's box underneath the podium, just in time to hear what he recognised as the thirteenth point in the sixteen-point lecture for tyro students.

"These are your years of opportunity, the opportunity of a life time. Seize it — or as the Latin sage said: 'Carpe Diem'."

Cat licked his lips. "Carp eh?" That' a new one. Through a small hole he spied out at the audience. When his eyes adjusted to the obscure light he s v about eighty specimens of 'cordata humanis', half-cocked and half-dozing and otherwise seated facing the hassive dig-'' abov him.

The barker-like voice continued: "I must ask you most earnestly to let your own personalities burgeon forth, and to throw off the standardizing shackles of-ah-of-ah-of-

"Of our modern mechanistic civilization," prompted cat with a loud hiss. Hearing no response he repeated: OF OUR MODERN . . . ! Then he heard it, too. A heavy rhythmic shuffling coming closer and closer. He looked out aghast. The student class had arisen. Too late he tried the retreat. He was caught in the volley of clip-board pencils, books and other such vicious weapons. One, two, three four, five lives out of nine were lost in the raucus fray before he could make good a panting escape! Immediately afterwards the lecturer jetted forth from the hall with the words "In gloria diem carperunt" engraved on his bare chest. "No comment" thought cat as he limped from the scene.

CLEO.

Orchestra & Chorus

Last Tuesday night the University of Toronto Orchestra and Chorus held their first rehearsal at the Royal Conservatory of Music. There was a good turnout for both organizations and everyone got away to a good start. But I feel it is necessary to point out to the campus at large that the facts that the University of Toronto Orchestra and Chorus have been reorganized this year, and that the students in the Faculty of Music are required to belong to one or another of these two organizations, do not reserve these organizations for the Faculty of Music alone.

The University Orchestra and University Chorus have always been considered campus-wide activities and are still conceived to serve that broad purpose. As has been said before, I should like to reiterate that anyone in any faculty on the entire campus who has a desire to sing or play and who can meet the requirements which, for the chorus, include a not unpleasant voice and an ability to read music, is invited to apply. It is not necessary for any member of the chorus and the orchestra outside the Faculty of Music, to be studying music at the present time. The only requirements for membership in the orchestra, in addition to those for chorus, are naturally, a proficiency on an instrument.

Therefore, Mr. Editor, I would appreciate if the invitation to join either of these organizations could be issued again so that anyone, who up to this time has laboured under a false impression, might have a chance to change his mind and make his application at the SAC Office this week. Every applicant will be considered.

Prof. Richard Johnston,
Faculty of Music.

Fight On, Pierre

Bob-Apple

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Vic extends congratulations to the Engineers, who made off with two sections of the "Bob pole" yesterday. The largest portion, however, may be claimed by Vic. It's still in the ground.

Despite the 3.1 odds, Vic must compliment the first wave of Engineers on the battering-ram, who were at the mercy of our side. (No one has reported any losses of shoes, shirts, arms or legs yet.)

When the activity was lagging, the sophs and frosh from Vic sang a chorus of "So-long, It's Been Good to Know You". This was the cue for another unsuccessful attack by the Engineers.

The pole was pulled down, finally, by the "bottle-scared" yets, who lassoed it from the top of Little Vic gym. This was against regulation 27a of the "Victorian Bob Apple Battle Code", which states that "no one shall pull down a pole while standing on the roof of Little Vic". It is, therefore, the privilege of the officials to disqualify our worthy opponents.

The object of the battle, a scarlet and gold box, was completely ignored by the Engineers. A Vic freshman stowed it in his jacket, and is hereby declared a Hero by everyone except the Engineers.

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Gee whiz, did that fellow Pierre ever tell off that doc from Meds. I'll bet that nobody will ever try a dirty trick like that doc did again. It served him right too. He said that Pierre had paradoxical ratiocination and malfaisances and lots of other bad things. Imagine anybody telling a pseudo-intellect, that Arts fellow, that he doesn't know what he's talking about.

Boy, did Pierre ever give him a lacing on Thursday! He said that he didn't even know the doc was around. Bet that really set him back. And all those other things he said too! Gosh, the doc won't even know what half of it means.

You got to hand it to Pierre though. He can really stump everybody in that intellectual stuff. I'll bet he's a real philosopher too.

Did you see him show his chest to that doc though! He's the man to beat all right. They tell me he even used to be a scientist. Boy, he must really know what's coming off.

Keep on fighting, Pierre!

Spanish Union Of Students Gets NFCUS Recognition

Montreal, Oct. 13 — Staff — The National Federation of Canadian University Students' conference yesterday settled down to two days of debate and discussion on two distinct topics. Conference delegates split up into commissions on national affairs, finance and membership, international affairs, and student government.

In the International Activities Commission, chaired by Bob Sutherland, former president of the University of Toronto SAC, the question of Canadian students' relations with the Spanish iversity Syndicate (SEU) was decided. Both unilaterally and in relation to the International Coordination Secretariat (COSEC) NFCUS recognized and supported the SEU.

A motion was proposed by Toronto with the NFCUS executive to establish a relationship with the SEU "with a view to exchanging information." However the Toronto motion emphasized that "any such relationship is not to imply support of SEU's organization or structural policy." It was felt that if any contact was to be made with Spanish students, then it would have to be done through the state-operated and state-controlled syndicate, the SEU. According to Bill Hoyt, NFCUS observer in Spain last summer, SEU was the only national union of students.

On the international level full backing of the SEU was urged by Elohim Raman of McGill. Western moved that NFCUS support any move to get the Spanish syndicate into COSEC.

The practical nature of the secretariat plan was stressed by Sutherland, who felt that every attempt must be made not to involve COSEC in political questions.

Toronto opposed the motion from Western because it believed that full admission of SEU could not help but have political implications. Most of the delegates in the commission emphasized that, in order to be consistent, any working relationship with the SEU has to be extended to the International Secretariat of National Unions. The minority, headed by McMaster, believed any connection with "fascist organizations or governments" should be kept to a minimum.

Hoyt's nine-page report initiated the final proposals which were adopted by the Commission. Considering the "peculiar structure of the Spanish State" Hoyt urged that "a program of exchange and

Eastern Swing Possible In Germany—Friedmann

"Germany: Friend or Foe" was the subject of a panel discussion presented at the Modern History Club last evening.

The problem of East Germany was discussed by Professor R. Flenley. Professor Flenley felt that the main problem was the subdivision of east Germany into three separate sections, the most important of these being the large section granted to Poland.

Professor R. Spencer presented the group with the case of West Germany. He pointed out that Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's recent election victory has been mistakenly regarded as a victory for the west. Mr. Spencer feels that the election results were, rather, due to the prosperity of the country and to Adenauer's clearly formulated foreign policy.

Professor W. G. Friedmann of the School of Law, and a native Berliner, stated that, to him, Berlin expressed the main theme of conflicts which dominate German internal and external relations. All the conflicts between East and West are to be found in Berlin. To Mr. Friedmann, Berlin embodies the conflicts of Germany, and in this, is to be found both the importance and the tragedy of

WUS Goal For Relief $20,000

Montreal, Oct. 12 — (CUP)—Canadian World University Service this next year hopes to raise $20,000 from Canadian students across the country for material relief for the universities of the depressed areas. This target figure for the next year's efforts of W.U.S.C. was decided upon at the eighth annual national assembly of the organization held this weekend at the University of Montreal. The figure represents an average 50 cents contribution from all Canadian students.

Forty per cent of the money that the organization raises this year has been earmarked for one major project: a health center for the University of New Delhi in India. It is estimated that this project will cost upward of $5,000, and could be finished within one year should sufficient money be raised for it.

The national assembly also decided that the organization should attempt to hold a seminar (similar to the one held in India last summer) in the summer of 1955 either in Africa, Asia or the Middle East.

The assembly agreed to hold the Indian handicraft sale again this winter and a large number of universities are beginning to prepare for it. It will arrive at McGill, on December ninth and will stay for four days. It opens this week in the Maritimes and will travel right across the country.

The meeting was addressed by Douglas Aitken, International Journal Secretary of W.U.S. who attended the conference while on a brief visit to Canada. The delegates were also introduced to the new travelling Secretary of W.U.S.C. Lewis Perinbam. Mr. Perinbam will be speaking this Wednesday Evening at the S.C.M. house on the subject of the importance and problems of Asian Universities.

Vic Argues US Policy For Korea

The Vic Debating Parliament reopens activities to-night with the topic "Resolved that this House disapproves of American foreign policy in Korea". All interested persons are invited to attend at 7.45 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

Sam Murphy, IV Vic, president of the Club, will uphold the affirmative with Bill Morris, IV Vic. Sam contends that "American foreign policy in Korea has not only been unrealistic, but also short-sighted." The leader of the opposition, Ron Price, III Vic, and his colleague, Don Stevenson, II Vic were not available to be interviewed.

Decide "Pioneer Spirit" '53 Float Parade Theme

Most of the faculties or colleges were represented last night at the final meeting of the Float Parade Representatives. The Float Parade is a featured annual event on Home-coming weekend. This year, however, all floats will conform to a general theme which will unify the spirit of the parade.

This year's theme will be "Pioneer Spirit". Ted Desjardine, Blue and White Float chairman, hinted that, among other things, the floats would represent "Canada's First Subway", "The U.C. Centenary", and the ancient "Roman Baths".

Desjardins said that he was approached by a representation of co-eds from Whitney Hall seeking permission to enter a float. Permission was granted, for, "After all," said one co-ed, "Whitney Hall has greatly influenced many lives."

S.P.S. announced that their entry would consist of eight small floats, one for each engineering club, two tractors, and the Lady Godiva Memorial Band. Desjardins also stressed that the floats should be "clean" this year, as many objections were made in this respect last year.

Horses, motorcycles, animals, bands, and clowns will again be much in evidence. The winner of the parade and the Alumni Plaque, emblematic of float superiority, last year was the Faculty of Dentistry. Art and Arch., however, who won two years ago and was a close second last year, advised the others groups to "accept as a foregone conclusion that we will win again this year."

The parade will be led by a motor cavalcade, followed by the Blue and White cheerleaders and band. The floats will proceed from Devonshire Place at 10.30 this Saturday morning and will move east on Bloor, south on Yonge, west on College and north past the Wallberg Building into the campus. It will pass before the judges' stand on the front steps of U.C. three times.

The third time, Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University; Principal Jeannerat of University College, John Stalker, S.A.C. president, and Paul Lorch, Blue and White Chairman will make the awards.

"Although the number of entries this year appears to be approximately the same as in previous years," said McKellar, "the overall standard will be much improved."

Two bits of guidance

It's In The Book

By CHRISTINA McCALL

So you're still wandering around in a fog. You never did find the museum so you could attend those lectures on the Origin of Man (oh . . . you don't care about his origins, all he has to do is breathe). Look kid, you'd better buy a copy of the "University of Toronto Students' Handbook" right away before the fences go up on the front campus and Life has passed you by. Without doubt it's a valuable piece of property — a telephone directory, address book and diary combined. There's even room for a time table to accommodate those dissenters who attend lectures.

"For every member of the University the Students' Handbook is a useful vade mecum" states the President in his annual message included in the Handbook and for the eager types who wonder what he meant, the phone numbers of the executives of a couple of Classics Club have been very thoughtfully provided..

For just 25 cents (it used to be free back in the days when your parents didn't have to mortgage the house to send you to college) you can buy this store house of information on everything from the number of women's fraternities to the date of the Skule At-Home. Want to rent tails, get a free chest X-ray, listen to some records — just buy the Handbook and your troubles are over. Have you always wondered what the I.C.I.D.U.D.T. is — the answer is in the book. Want to buy an auriscope, a blazer, some insurance — read the handbook and you'll know where and how.

It lists every campus club and organization. Every organization, that is, except the Undergraduate Women's Association. Not who wants to make a date with that? But if you feel reckless you can phone the University switchboard and ask for it. She has a pleasant voice, and she's listed.

There is another "organization" which has been the victim of a mistake (?). Someone has tried to do the women graduates out of dates. You see, every time you phone Falconer Hall (their residence), which is listed under MI 9530, a manly voice informs you that this is Emanuel College, and no, he isn't going out tonight. The Falconer phone has been changed three years ago to PR.5877 and that's what it is.

The Book contains the yells of four of the five Universities in the Senior Intercollegiate loop (nobody here gonna' cheer for McMaster?) and the dates of the annual examinations in all faculties. You'll find the index helpful in locating the particular club or organization you want information about. Several of the ads sprinkled through the book offer 10 per cent reductions to students.

The calendar-diary section is just packed with fascinating items including a telegram from "Doc" inviting "Betty" to the Meds At-Home. Betty is obviously the cautious type; she wired back nine days later after she'd made an extensive survey among her friends to find out how many were going — they all were. Also included are two maps — one of the city of Toronto and the other of the University. Be careful where you unfold the city map; it's about three feet wide and it takes an hour to put it back together again.

The handbooks weren't available at registration time as a guide through the first hectic days. However, they're useful all year around and worth every cent of that quarter you had left over after you paid your fees. Buy yours today at the SAC office — you'll wonder how you lived without it.

Skule Defends Track Championship Williams Makes Vic A Threat

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Varsity's short track and field season reaches its highlight this afternoon at Varsity Stadium when S.P.S. will attempt to defend its senior intramural track championship. Most colleges and faculties are fielding the strongest teams they can muster in the hope of removing the Rowell Memorial Trophy from the trophy case of the Skule-house. The meet starts at two o'clock in the Bloor Bowl.

Another cup that is up for competition is the Chancellor Cody Trophy for the individual winning the greatest number of points in the intramural track and field meet. Last year's winner was Bob Hamilton of S.P.S.

The senior and intermediate teams, who will represent the U. of T. at the college meet at McGill on Oct. 21, will be chosen on the basis of performances at this meet and the junior inter-faculty games last Thursday.

Engineering has a very strong squad to defend the senior championship. Hamilton will be back and is entered in several events and a Skule sophomore, Dick Harding, is highly-rated in the various running events.

Victoria College is relying on its freshman flash, Norm Williams, to win a big share of points. Last week, in the junior meet, Williams took four firsts, two seconds and a third and will be out to repeat that performance. Williams is Ontario champion for the 120 and 220-yard hurdle events and holds the Canadian junior records for both distances.

Dentistry has speedster Jack Wall entered in most of the sprint events. Physical Education, meanwhile, is relying heavily on two men, Juri Vrzesnevski and Endel Tulving, in the field events—javelin, discus and shot put.

Events to be run off this afternoon are discus, pole vault, javelin, 120-yard high hurdles, 880 yards, 100 yards, shot put, broad jump, 220-yard low hurdles, three miles, 440 yards, one mile, one mile relay.

HART HOUSE THEATRE'S TWENTY-SEVENTH ALL-VARSITY PRODUCTION

UC, POT, Meds. Girls Win Softball Matches

By ANN STARK

Yesterday's triple-header produced three tremendous women's softball games. The play was fast and exciting as blood pressures rose on each of the damonds.

The spirited U.C. and P.H.E. III teams again battled on the Trinity Field. After six—yes, six — speedy innings, the Red and White women emerged top-side with a 3-2 score. Vera Boyko was the start-off pitcher for Phys-ed, but retreated after the first inning to let Shirley Roberts hurl for the rest of the game. A lot of P.H.E.'s strength is in their batting, and probably the greatest force in that section comes from Helen Bienosz who has the helpful habit of producing a homer per game.

Mary Craw pitched a fast hard game for U.C., and Deanne Connacher proved again that she's a good person to have on the team, as first baseman or batter.

Over in Varsity Stadium, two more games were in progress. P.O.T's played Vic II in a three-inning whirl that ended with Vic II the holder of a 9-6 score. Pitcher Karen Fisher along with Vic's fielding power brought the team out on top.

In another corner of the Stadium, Meds neatly trimmed St. Hilda's to a 10-8 score in the third speedy game of the noon hour.

Coming up today, St. Hilda's 1 will battle against U.C. over on Trinity Field.

SOCCER

Emmanuel College opened defence of its Division Two interfaculty soccer championship yesterday by shading Victoria College 1-0 in a front campus game. Davies scored the counter for Emmanuel that broke a scoreless tie.

Meanwhile, in another game on the front campus pitch, Knox College started off with a bang by blanking Forestry 3-0. The Knox scoring was well-distributed as McKinley, Swan and Costerus each sank a goal.

Tennis Play Starts Today

University tennis moves into the Toronto Lawn Tennis club again today with the three-day intercollegiate tournament scheduled.

Last year, Varsity tied McGill for the senior title while the Blues intermediates ended in a three-way deadlock with McMaster and Western.

Gert Lukk, the intramural champ, will be Toronto's strongest hope.

Volleyball

The interfaculty volleyball season opened yesterday with a full schedule of games in the Hart House upper gym.

Both University College teams, Junior and Senior, started off with wins. The seniors tripped Vic in two straight, 15-8 and 15-4, while the juniors upended St. Mike's 15-10 and 15-7.

Who Leads Who

Over the Korean peace negotiations looms continually the insidious question of War or Peace. It is becoming increasingly evident that the South Korean President, Syngman Rhee, holds the answer to that question.

Rhee, it appears, will not rest content until war breaks out in Korea. He almost sabotaged the truce negotiations when he released thousands of prisoners of war early in the summer. Now he has threatened to move against the neutral Indian-led commission looking after the exchange of prisoners.

Moreover it seems that the day to day decisions made by the United Nations command in Korea curiously echo American Foreign policy from Washington.

Even more important, America, faced with the choice of Rhee, or her other allies, is choosing Rhee. Realizing that Rhee is bent on war, she has regularly compromised and appeased him.

South Korea has yet to settle back and say it was satisfied. Compromise has encouraged and emboldened Rhee.

The question of US Foreign policy in Korea will be discussed tonight in a Victoria College debate. Two things must be considered. One is that the US is really the leader of the western world, and unfortunately, has relative control of the United Nations as a whole. Also, the UN, under US "guidance" is forming a Korean policy which is, over time, giving way to certain demands of Dr. Rhee.

The debate tonight then, must look into both of these. If the UN has given way to American authority, is American policy at least in line with UN principles? And if UN policy in Korea is a combination of assembly decisions and Rhee desires, who is leading who?

To our disappointment, an examination of American foreign policy is too often a revelation of South Korean domestic policies.

South Africa

In The Limelight

Believing that the University of Toronto students should know the gackground facts of the problem in Africa, The Varsity presents a resume from a number of articles on the problem.

It is exactly 300 years ago since Dutch traders, plying between Holland and India, first established the colony of Capetown. At about the same time natives were settling in the northern and eastern parts of what is now South Africa. With the pressure of population, tribal wars, and the effect of Arab slave raids, they had migrated from the equatorial highlands of Africa to their new hope in the south.

After the Napoleonic wars, the Dutch colony was taken over by the British. The settlers were not happy under this rule, and in 1837, thousands, with their families, made what has become known as "The Great Trek" to the north. Here, after bitter conflict with the newly arrived natives they established two republics, Transvaal, and the Orange Free State. In setting these up they laid down a fundamental in the constitution which stated, "There shall be no equality between white and black in the church or state."

For one hundred years white men and black men fought each other sporadically until the black were compressed into small reserves. Henceforth the black, called Bantu could live in a foreshortened tribal society under the paternal oversight of the whites. The Bantu would only be tolerated in the white man's cities temporarily to minister to the white man's needs.

But unlike the aborigines of most of the newfound world, the African Bantu population is still steadily increasing. At the same time industrial development in gold and diamonds necessitated greater reserves in cheap labor The vacuum must obviously be filled by the overlow from the Bantu reserves.

Today three million natives live in their tribal reserves and nearly twice that number live in European areas. South Africa's problem today is a demand on the one hand and a refusal on the other to recognize the permanency of their internal immigration.

THE NATIONALIST PARTY, in power, recognizes the immigration, but will try to restore the Bantu to their reserves. They will try to develop two societies, each along its own line, according to its own ability. The Bantu must have neither rights nor home in a European area.

The United Party, on the other hand, does not quite agree with the present apartheid policy, and suggests permanent economic integration. They still stipulate that social integration must not take place In both cases the white man is the enlightened trustee of the Bantu, and neither suggests an end to it.

AS IF THE PROBLEM of African Natives were not enough, there are two other racial castes in the same communities. The larger, about a million, are of mixed ancestry, and are generally in the Capetown area. But there are also over 300 thousand Indians, who cannot be included in any other group, and who must be given more than serfdom in a strange land. The largest group of all is the African native, numbering over eight million. There are 2,640,000 white South Africans.

At present the whites have almost all ruling control. The non-whites are permitted to elect three representatives to parliament, and these must be white also.

BUT THOUGHT of an immediate solution is ridiculous. In the reserve the Bantu is little removed from his ancient tribalism. In the European cities many have their tribal superstitions, but an increasing few are working steadily toward intellectual equality with the white. In this confusion the white man has no other choice than to cling to the hope in racial segregation.

The strongest segregation is that of the economic bar. As a carryover from European trade unions, the African is prevented from obtaining skills which would elevate him in social segregation. There will not be as great an immediate problem if the Bantu could be maintained as bank of cheap labor.

Strongest demonstrations today are the result of the Pass Laws, affecting every native in a European area. Each one must carry up to eight passes with him at all times. One is permission to work among the Europeans. Another is a certificate that he is employed, or that he has permission to look for work. Separate passes must be had for travelling at night, working at night, or visiting in another home at night.

BROADMINDED THINKERS among the United Nations would have South Africa develop an enlightened liberal policy. But the passive resistance riots of 1952 occurred in communities where natives had received the most progressive attention in the Union. They had been subjected to a minimum of restriction, were accommodated in modern housing developments. Since then the South African parliament has declared its intention to resist such agitation and will arm itself strongly in that direction.

Crime Does Not Pay

They whispered furtively in the gloom of the darkened room. Whenever they heard a footstep, they hunched over the table trembling, afraid lest anyone should hear what they were talking about.

"Personally I prefer lager beer," said the youngest in the group.

"Sh!" The rest whispered hoarsely.

"Do you want someone to hear what you said and report it to you . . . ?"

"No, no. I'll be quieter. I hope no one heard!" the young man said.

The talk died away into an inaudible mumble, the sound being soaked up by the walls of Hart House. The four men, with their collars turned up, glanced uneasily over their shoulders from time to time.

Soon however their whispering became more passionate and louder. They thrust aside their wariness in the heat of argument.

"But I say sex is a vital part of everyone's life", one of them almost shouted.

"You're right. But not the most vital", another answered loudly.

"Both of you are wrong. Sex is secondary to beer and high life", passionately announced a third.

The fourth young man acted as a mediator. He tried to keep them quiet. "For Pete's sake, lower your voices. He may have spies down here, listening to what we talk about. You know what'll happen to us if they ever catch us talking about beer and sex." he made a suggestive gesture at his neck.

"He's right. If we're caught, they'll make us get up and talk about intellectual things in the beer parlor."

"Gad, I'd never be able to digest my beer."

Suddenly loud footsteps echoed down the empty corridor. Three brusque PhD's and an M.A. burst into the room.

"It's the Intellect Police," someone shouted.

"This is a raid," snarled the M.A.

"You were caught talking about sex," snarled the first PhD.

"And you weren't having a cultured intellectual discussion," snarled the third PhD. The four culprits looked at each other aghast.

"If only we hadn't read that letter in The Varsity that said there was plenty of intelligent discussion around the University, we would have been all right," wailed one of the four suspects. "I thought that since there was so much culture being talked about, we would have been safe enough to talk about . . . ".

"Don't say that forbidden word," snarled the Intellect Policeman with the M.A.

"Take them up to the second floor—you know where," snarled a PhD.

"No, no, not to the second floor," the four men shivered. "We'll talk about anything you like. We'll talk about Sophocles and Kant, and Why Philosophy Is Good For the Digestive System."

"We'll talk about modern art and If We See A Donkey, It Should Only Happen To Salvatore Dali."

"Please don't take us up to the second floor."

The Intellect Police were dragging them up to the second floor of Hart House, grim, but intelligent, expressior on their intellectual faces.

"You should have thought of that before you talked about those abominable vices," snarled the M.A.

"Intellectual crime does not pay."

Germany.

Although Germany now seems to be linked up strongly with the west there is always the strong temptation for a reversal in policy. Even before World War One, Germany was drawn to Russia because their economies complement each other. At present, Germany is economically quite strong but her markets depend on exports to the west. Since the partition, she has lost her once lucrative eastern markets. A failure in the western markets could mean a complete change over.

In order to minimize the pull to the east, Germany must become a strong European partner. At present, the trend is towards the west because of a German aversion to any extension of the Soviet regime. Mr. Friedmann feels that any action towards a stronger Germany and its integration in a strong Western Europe should be taken now while Adenauer is in power, because of Adenauer's popularity with the German people and his attitude towards both these questions.

US Policy Condemned At Victoria

The Victoria College Debating Parliament last night deplored American Foreign Policy in Korea. The motion "This house disapproves of American Foreign Policy in Korea" was passed by a vote of 32 to 16.

Sam Murphy IV Vic. Prime Minister and first speaker for the government, pointed out what he thought were the mistakes and inconsistencies of American policy. He said India's seat on the Korean peace conference was blocked, against the wish of the majority of UN nations, only by the two thirds majority rule. Murphy declared that in this matter the U.S. was inconsistent. Their reason for excluding India was that India was not a belligerent. Russia was also a non-belligerent but the U.S. supported its inclusion in the conference

Ron Price, first speaker for the opposition, said "the United States had assumed world leadership against her will," and this leadership would only be effective with full support of the rest of the free world. He pointed out the Americans were instrumental in stopping world communism by stepping into Korea, and then they used their common sense by preventing the spread of the war in China. Price also said that if Inida were admitted to the peace conference there would be no conference since South Korea would walk out. He said "The U.S. has brought a new ideology to Korea." This was characterized in her stand on the prisoner repatriation issue.

"If we fulfill our function as a university we must criticize" said Bill Morris IV Vic. second speaker for the government. Don Stevenson II Vic second speaker for the opposition declared "Without the U.S. there would be no Korea, it would be behind the Iron Curtain."

TORONTO REP DISSENTS

BY RICH ANCO

Montreal, Oct. 14 (Staff) — In what can be considered a unanimous vote, delegates in Commission 3 decided to investigate "possibility of a qualified relationship with the International Union of Students (IUS)." They made it clear that there should be no consideration given to the idea of joining IUS at this conference.

While Toronto was the lone dissenting vote it did not oppose the content of the motion but rather the tone. The Toronto delegate felt that the proposal as presented by Laval took a negative instead of a positive view of associate membership with IUS.

The motion which will be presented to the plenary session today reads: 'Whereas the spirit and activities of IUS have not fostered an International student community because of its partisan and political approach in the past both students in society; and Whereas association with IUS in its present form would create disunity when unity is essential for an effective NFCUS; and Whereas NFCUS is desirous of fostering greater international understanding be it resolved that NFCUS will not enter associate membership with IUS at the present time, but that the executive of NFCUS will be empowered during this year to investigate the possibility of qualified relationship with IUS'.

The Toronto representative believes the motion gave the impression that NFCUS should follow a 'hands off' policy as long as possible. He said that the Commission should emphasize, more than it had, the desire of NFCUS to have relations with IUS, and to support world-wide student understanding. Both Laval and Montreal felt it was important to state the fact that IUS had not lived up to expectations. A Toronto amendment to change the spirit of the original motion was ruled out of order. The commission heard Bill Dentzer, a member of United States' Students Union, speak against any association with the Communist-dominated IUS. He said that NFCUS could not obtain any more as an associate-member that it had as observer. However, chairman Bob Sutherland declared that he did not believe there must be two worlds: "They are human beings and we must try to reach them." He said, "it will be difficult and the division is great; but this only makes the necessity of getting together more important."

Discussion of the Russian students' question was shelved although the Russians had informally invited NFCUS to again exchange students this year.

Accommodated

Students who have been sitting on the marble steps of the basement stairs in Hart House have one consolation. One large chair has been placed half way down the stairs and students, as many of them as can be accommodated, are enjoying it.

NFCUS Observer Reports Recommends IUS Merger

Montreal, Oct. 14, — Staff — Charles Taylor the official observer to the recent International Union of Students Congress at Warsaw presented his report to the National Federation of Students at Montreal yesterday.

He recommended that NFCUS affiliate with IUS to express the opinions of Canadian students to the student members of IUS.

"If we do not state clearly our views and beliefs, what we have done and what we intend to do no one else will state them for us," he said.

He stated that some of the political tone of IUS has been modified, but the ideological and partisan bias remains very much in evidence.

"It can perhaps be somewhat mitigated and moderated, but there seems little hope that it can ever be fundamentally changed," he said.

He viewed the change in IUS policy as a reflection of the change in the line of Communist Parties throughout the world.

He pointed out to the conference, that the policy followed at the recent congress represented in many ways an about face from a previous congress at Prague.

He said that whereas at Prague IUS seemed to have wanted to drive all Non-Communist Unions out of the organization, at Warsaw, IUS repeatedly showed its desire to draw the Non-Communist Unions into its work, to give them a much wider scope of action within it and to find as broad a basis of cooperation as possible with them.

Taylor presented the following information in his report.

Playhouse Broadcasts In Toronto

Programs of the Varsity Playhouse will be broadcast this year over local stations, Radio Committee Chairman, Britta Fredrickson told the Students' Administrative Council last night.

The committee decided to send letters to the various local radio stations asking them if they would be interested in putting over the air programs by the committee. The SHARE Committee also plans to have a program for their campaign, Miss Fredrickson said.

The committee would like to make arrangements for the radio station engineer to be present to rehearse the programs as well as at actual broadcasting time. The casting would be done by certain key people connected with college and faculty drama groups, she said.

UN Schedule SE Asia

Communism in South East Asia will be the topic of Mr. Murray Hewer in his address to the U.N. Club today at 4.15 in the Women's Union. Mr. Hewer has travelled to the Philippines, Indonesia, Thailand, Malaya and Ceylon investigating the problem of Communism in these countries. His speech will be illustrated with coloured slides. Non-members are welcome.

McGillers Plan Going On Waves

Montreal, Oct. 5 — (CUP) — Students at McGill have taken the first step in their long range plan of opening a regular commercial radio station. They have instituted a weekly radio program to deal with activities on the McGill campus.

This is the first venture of its kind that has ever been attempted by McGill students. The program will be a 15-minute news show about campus events. It may expend to half an hour in the future.

A Montreal radio station CFCF has undertaken to give the Radio Workshop participants instruction in all phases of radio production. It is expected that over 200 students will take part in the course. Station CFCF will give them certificates attesting to their proficiency.

Rogers Elected Head Of Toronto YPC Club

Last evening Ted Rogers was elected President of the Toronto Young Progressive Conservatives at the annual meeting of the YPC Toronto District Council. This is the first time that a U. of T. student has held a major executive position in their organization. Rogers is one Vice President of the Toronto District Council is composed of representatives of the YPC'S in the 18 ridings of Toronto, the Yorks, the University and Osgoode Hall.

Ted Rogers at age 20 has had a remarkable career in politics. Graduating from Upper Canada College and spending a year in business school and attending Trinity he is President of the Rosedale YPC's and is on the policy committee of the Progressive Conservative Students Federation. He is a strong believer in organization and advocates increased political education particularly among young people.

During the recent election Rogers got leave of absence from his summer job as a radio announcer in Windsor and organized the Young Conservatives in Rosedale Riding who took a major share in the campaign.

A good public speaker and debater he spoke to numerous groups across the province during the campaign. Joe Slogan, President of the U. of T. Conservative Club said that he was happy to see that the views of university students would be represented in a senior executive of his party.

Sticks And Stones

One Library — Coming Up

That clink-clanking resounding in the crisp clean autumn air is not a rehearsal for the 'Anvil Chorus' but is the noise of busy stone masons. (Busy stone masons always clink-clank). Nor is that hungry maw, still in its embryonic stages, that devours concrete, stone and steel at the north end of the Main Library going to develop into some dark, damp, dismal, dungeon for dissenters. This structure is the new extension to the University Library.

Dr. W. S. Wallace, head librarian hopes, barring strikes and shortages of materials and bad weather to see the roof put on the new wing by Christmas and that next September he will ba able to have the books moved in. This book-moving will be a task in itself, as Dr. Wallace expects it to take about a month.

"It was decided," stated Dr. Wallace, "that the old stacks, in the old wing, will hold the books in the sciences including medicine. The new wing will then be devoted to the humanities and the social sciences. These two stacks will be entirely separate from one another. It will be as if there were two separate libraries side by side."

A scale model is on display on the library desk showing this proposed new wing. A unique feature of the extension will be the inclusion of a reserve book reading room containing about 20,000 books which will be on open shelves in the middle of the room. This room is modelled on the Lamont library at Harvard (another university down south a bit).

"The extension will meet the increasing student demands but it will also require a much larger staff," said the Head Librarian.

Funds for the new wing are coming from the Board of Governors who voted 1.5 millions from a building fund campaign of the University, and another 1.5 millions has been given by Dr. Sigmund Samuel.

For the next year or so the students will have to put up with wierd cacophony from the workmen. The new wing will look very attractive, if the model is any indication. For those who go to the library and can see past the pages of the books it would do them well to take a look at the model. Then they would know that their disturbed studies are not for nothing.

LPP Says Huge Fees A Disgrace

"The successive increases in fees with the consequent decreases in enrolment constitutes a national disgrace, a blow at the foundation, the future of arts, letters and sciences in Canada." This is part of a statement issued by the annual conference of Labor Progressive Party student clubs.

The clubs will call upon the National Federation of Canadian University Students to initiate a wide petition campaign to secure direct federal and increased provincial aid to students. This proposal will be presented in a brief before the NFCUS conference in Montreal, which starts on Oct. 12th. The brief proposes that the petition campaign should seek the endorsement not only of university students, but also of the entire population of Canada.

Exploration Club

Wanted: Wanderers

During the summer hundreds of Varsity students left books, exams, and the hot city behind them and disappeared into remote corners of the country. Toronto students were to be found from the Labrador coast to British Columbia in the northern "barrens" and on the McKenzie River system, in fact, in every corner of Canada.

With enthusiasm for travel high even among the less fortunate who remain in the city, the Hart House Exploration Society is holding a Summer Travel Night on Wed. October 21. It is planned to have a number of short informal talks and slide-showings by students whose travels are of wide interest, while providing a general get together for everyone interested in

Continental Bike Tour With Wife

After buying a tandem bicycle in Paris, and cycling throughout Europe with his wife, Bud Trivett, ex-president of the United Nations Club, and editor of "Torontonensis", was elected president of the International Student Movement for the United Nations.

Over twenty countries belong to this international student U.N. organization, including Korea, Austria, Cuba, U.S.A., the Gold Coast, Germany, India, Great Britain, and as of this August—Canada.

Trivett was largely responsible for Canada's entry into "ISMUN". Last November he invited interested people from vaious campi aoross Canada, to the U.N. Club Caledon Meeting. These speakers returned home, and discussed the matter with their university, and in August accepted Canada.

Students for the United Nations. Where previously there were only two UN clubs in Canada, now there are ten. This spring Canada applied for membership in "ISMUN".

This August at the conference in Paris Bud and Margaret Munnoch (II Trinity) were present. Canada was admitted to the organization, and Bud Trivett was elected president.

He is living in Europe for the year, and when last heard of, was picking grapes in the Loire Valley.

One of his plans for the future is the hope of expanding ISMUN into South-East Asia, and gaining at least eight new members. He also wants each group to sell "UNICEF" Christmas cards on the campus. The Toronto UN club has made plans to do this.

University College Tale Told by Half-Centuries Lectures Start Oct. 22

"Since the business of each one of us is to teach literature we thought we would like to discuss it in its various relationships," said Professor R. J. Getty, chairman for the Centennial Year Lectures being held at University College.

In order to do justice to the history of the college, Principal Emeritus M. W. Wallace, on October 22, will speak on "University College: The First Fifty Years"; in the closing lecture Principal F.C.A. Jeannert will close the cycle with "University College: The Last Fifty Years", on December 3.

"To ensure complete academic freedom in this college famed for nonconformity, each lecturer has been left to handle his own subject."

"They are all big subjects," stressed Professor Getty, "and you must follow the argument where it takes you."

Topics such as "Literature and Philosophy" by Professor F. H. Anderson on October 29, "Literature and Religion" by Professor F. V. Winnett on November 5, and "Literature and Learning" by Professor Getty on November 12 will be part of the series.

It is the ordinary series of public lectures given by the college, said Professor Getty, "but this year we decided to depart from the usual, and to have a common theme for the lectures." Thus even such diverse subjects as "Literature and Society" by Professor Barker Fairley on November 26 will be discussed.

All members of the university are cordially invited to hear these lectures in the West Hall of University College at five p.m. on Thursdays from October 22 to December 3.

Sigmund Samuel
Gets And Gives

Collecting is a life time occupation and obligation commented Dr. Sigmund Samuel LL.D., F.R. Hist. S. (Eng.) in an interview Tuesday. Few men have the interest, ability, enthusiasm, persistence at all to be a collector of note. Dr. Samuel explained that a favoured few are in a position to collect the fine material that come to light from time to time. It requires great research to build a collection. Of the many collectors few have the enthusiasm and wealth to follow up their taste especially with Chinese or Greek antiquites.

Dr. Sigmund Samuel, will lay the cornerstone of the new edition to the library on Friday, October 23. This is but one of the many honours he has received in recognition of his efforts, not only for his collecting ability but also in his work for the Royal Ontario Museum.

All Canadians shoud be interested in the progress of their Museums and Dr. Samuel is proud of his thirty-year connection with the Royal Ontario Museum, which he served in various positions from Member of the Board to Vice-President. His work in the museum has mainly been associated with the Chinese, Grecian and Canadian Collections.

Dr. Samuel has greatly aided the flamboyant Chinese collection of the Royal Ontario Museum to become one of the finest, not only in America but also in Europe ranking with that of the British Museum.

Recently he presented the Museum with an important collection of Chinese gowns and textiles making the Royal Ontario Museum's collection one of the largest.

When the Mu Chinese library of fifty thousand volumes was offered for sale, Dr. Samuel was very much taken with this opportunity and aided in securing the library for the Royal Ontario Museum.

The library, on arrival in Toronto, was found to be too large for their proper display. To do justice to this superb collection it was essential to provide new facilities and Dr. Samuel thereupon assisted in the erection of a new wing for this purpose.

Today Dr. Samuel has again offered his assistance in meeting the requirements for a proper housing of a library and thus a two million dollar wing is being constructed to the main Library..

When Bishop White, for many years head of the Anglican missions in China, instituted a School of Chinese Studies at the University, Dr. Samuel formed a scholarship for Chinese students doing graduate work on Chinese Studies. Bishop White has written a major opus "History of the Jews in China", three volumes of which he has dedicated to Dr. Samuel.

In addition Dr. Samuel's aid has made the Grecian collection at the Museum one of the finest and most comprehensive in the country. Dr. Samuel said that he himself would like to go to Greece to study the storehouse of material in that country self.

SAC Will Extend Invitation For NFCUS - WUS Delegates To Confer Here Next Year

The Students' Administrative Council voted last night to invite the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the World Union of Students to hold their conferences in Toronto next year.

In his report of the conference held last week in Montreal, WUS chairman, Doug Hamlin said that the conference had not been held in Toronto for over six years. Since universities which are a great distance away send a single delegation to both conferences they must be held in the same city.

There will be over 60 delegates from 20 universities at the two conferences. Dick Davies, Pharmacy felt Toronto would not be able to accommodate all the students who would attend and that it was a great deal of work to take on.

SAC President, John Stalker said holding the conferences here would do much to strengthen Toronto's position in both NFCUS and external affairs. "We are a big university well received in both Canada and the United States and if colleges as small as Western can billet the delegates we can too," he said.

This year the WUS conference was held at the University of Montreal last weekend and the NFCUS conference is now in session at McGill.

"Students of the world, Unite, You have nothing to lose but your flat beaches." The Surroundings and furnishings of this particular lecture hall added much to the enjoyment of the contented adience. Possibly the Dale Carnegie Public Speaking Course never considered such impediments confronting their budding Ciceros but the listeners approved. If the Caput would equip class rooms in this fashion there would be no complaints about fee increase. If the suggestion goes through, they might just as well incorporate a dispenser for O'Keffee-burgers, a brace of tickets for the Grey Cup game, four McGill weekends per term and a portable Medusa's head for unwary Professors who blunder into the students' sanctuary. Oh yes, a blonde secretary complete with shorthand. Her place is not in the home.

Press Too Superficial Misses Many Facts Magazine Editor Says

The daily press has become more superficial and frivolous in the past few years and it is the magazines' purpose to fill the void that has been left by this development. Pierre Berton, Managing Editor of Maclean's Magazine, expressed this opinion in his address in the Hart House Library last night.

"We should be worried about the modern press," he said. "In their search for speed, newspapers tend to get some of the facts fast instead of all the facts slowly." He said that man has learnt to, prese..e and freeze everything—except news. This remains the most perishable item in the world.

Mr. Berton described the manner in which the newspaper and magazines have switched functions. He said the readers' habits have changed. Some English newspapers are still magazines and are slowly digested by their readers during breakfast. Now people live farther from work and the news must be read quickly—gulped.

Newspapers are brief now because people want them that way. Man has become more realistic after his experiences during the Depression and the Second World War, he said. He wants facts.

This has also changed the character of stories appearing in the magazines. One no longer finds articles lauding a man for his business successes, Mr. Berton said. People are now suspicious and cynical—they want men that have three dimensions, not just the one dimension of goodness. He said that the man about whom an article was being written in the magazines, actually used to have the privilege of editing the article.

"A newspaper reporter now has half the time he used to have to write a story." All the facts cannot be gathered in this time and it is the Magazines' job to answer the questions the readers ask or would ask if they took the time to think.

"This is a job that requires a lot of soul-searching and objectivity," he said. Magazines have gained a lot of freedom in the past, and have shown a tendency towards the factual style of presentation. Magazines do not pull their punches now and this is what the readers want. "The proof is that the three most popular magazines are of this type: Time, Life, and Readers Digest." He would not vouch for the objectivity of Time.

Mr. Berton announced that Maclean's will put out a French edition in the future. He said that the magazine bought 4 of the 5,000 articles submitted last year and 18 of the 5,000 short stories. When questioned he answered that the opportunities for writing on magazines in Canada were good but that writers were only hired when they had done some free-lance work for the magazine.

"I feel that serious humour has a great part to play in our magazines. There is no contradiction in terms here. We do not want superficial humour." When questioned Mr. Berton could call to mind only two Canadian humorists.

Near East Problems Unsolvable At Present Claims Prof. Wevers

"Dulles is whistling in the breeze" by suggesting that the United Nations and the Near East unite against communism, said Professor John Wevers in addressing fifty students at the opening meeting of the International Relations Club in Falconer Hall yesterday afternoon. "This is a hopeless dream and psychologically impossible."

He said that the situation of 1,200,000 Arab refugees living in tattered tents is one of the most explosive in the Near East. "I can see no solution for it." Professor Wevers referred to a third "sticky problem of the Near East", the Egyptian situation. "It always looks like war will break out by morning if not before. Naguib has taken a strong hand. He knows the way to stay alive in Egypt is to stay out with the British."

According to Professor Wevers there are tow parallel forces in the modern Near East: westernization and religious conservatism.

The Near East is a complex region of very few resources held together by a religious bond which is not too strong. The founding of Israel as a state became the biggest thorn in the flesh of the Arabs. Previous to this, the Moslems had held a healthy regard for the Americans but they lost faith in the US because of it attitude to the new state. They had lost faith in Britain after World War I. He emphasized the fact that eastern nationalism is partly characterized by a hatred of foreigners.

SAC At A Glance

In addition to inviting the WUS and NFCUS conferences to Toronto for the autumn sessions of 1954, the Students' Administrative Council at its meeting last night named Thursday, October 22, Red Feather Tag Day and heard a proposal for an improved system of inter-faculty debates — discussed the question of four-page issues of The Varsity. A cut of $500 in The Varsity budget means that the paper must reduce its number of issues or produce one four-page issue a week.

Mr. E. A. Macdonald, business and Advertising manager of The Varsity told the meeting that this cut was necessitated by the poor sale to date of the Student's Handbook, and increased expenses in the new SAC and Varsity office Building.

— heard Mr. Macdonald urge the sale of the Handbooks by the year representative in all the colleges and faculties. The increased sale of the books might mean that the Varsity's budget will not be cut.

— heard the Blue and White Society announce that almost all of the 1,000 bloops ordered have been sold and that an order for an additional 500 has been placed in anticipation of the homecoming crowds.

— heard the plans for the Homecoming weekend as drawn up by the Blue and White Society. It was pointed out that tickets are still available for the dance to be held in the Royal York on Saturday night.

— expressed appreciation to the Blue and White Society for their work on the Homecoming Weekend.

— heard the President encourage attendance at the Street dance and pep rally to be held on Friday night.

— heard the Student Service Commission plan to organize a blood campaign to be concentrated in mid-January.

— heard the report of Doug. Hamlin, IV UC, one of the delegates to the WUS conference held in Montreal over the weekend. This report outlined WUS's plans to raise $6,500 for SHARE this year. Hamlin told the meeting that 70 per cent of the money raised by SHARE on the Toronto campus will go towards a new Health centre to be established in Delhi.

— SHARE's main money raising projects will be the concert by the Helsinki Choir to be given in Massey Hall on November 16. Parking at the one game held this year

Woman's Place In The Home

It is to her advantage, to the advantage of mankind, the advantage of the home that she do so. For by fulfilling her duty to civilization, developing her potentialities, she is becoming a fuller person, a better mother and a better wife. By all means let's not imprison womankind in the home.

Norma Siefried
II Meds

Return !

A woman's place is in the home — most certainly. Man was once sufficiently foolish to permit the female to invade his private fields of endeavour. She has shown considerable success in her adopted world and at the same time has managed to maintain complete dominance of her primary function. But now man can compete with her at her own game. I cite the case of Christine Jorgensen as a case in point. Woman—return to the home and prevent man from gaining a foothold in your world as you have in his.

J. M. Lewis,

We think a woman's place is in the home so that she may devote her full time to her husband and family. If she is working, her home cannot run properly and the children will not get the care and affection they require.

Ed. Note. Well, Skulemen, what are you waiting for?

Let Them Go

No. Women have been fighting for equality too long. Now they can have it. Let them go out and work, leaving the easy home life and the television set for the men. Let them earn the money and hand over the pay envelopes unopened.

There is an opportunity for women to be on equal footing with men. Except for certain emotional irrationality in times of stress, women are, I feel, quite capable of men's work.

So let them offer their seats to gentlemen in streetcars. Soon they'll be crying for unequal rights.

Or Is It?

A Woman's Place Is In The Home

A Challenge

The well-knit family unit is still the most noble and most useful institution in our modern society. The moving force behind the family, the creator of the house, the custodian of the world's most precious raw materials, is the wife and mother. For men to consider the task neither difficult nor important shows collossal ignorance; for women to reject the challenge it presents shows grave responsibility.

Bob Bellamy,
IV C and F

Commonsense

If women are confined to the home humanity automatically eliminates fifty percent of the race from making any contribution to the arts, industry, commercial life, education and the professions. Therefore, a woman's place is not merely in the home, although she no doubt has her place there too, along with her husband. A common-sense community would provide the day nurseries, etc., needed to allow women to play their full part.

Norman Chalmers,
II Law

Natural

In family life there exists a natural division of labour which becomes more pronounced as the number of children in the family increases.

From this I conclude that every woman who is married and has children should stay at home. Those not married would better spend their time for the future married life.

A few unhappy exceptions to the above rule may be seen aimlessly wandering about, but the days of those sad cases are numbered.

Hubert Anto,
IV SPS

Suspicious

To my way of thinking, it depends entirely upon the circumstances that apply to each particular situation. In certain cases, it is financially expedient for the wife to work in order to keep the household in the black, so to speak. But otherwise, surely the housewife's place is at home where her job is. Furthermore, when she is at home, you know where she is. If she's away from home, certain doubts are bound to exist. In other words, my answer would be: solvency first, principles second.

Jim Proudfoot,
IV UC

The Anchor

A woman is to a marriage like an anchor to a ship. As long as the anchor stays in its place, the ship is safe. As soon as the anchor is lifted and wanders, the ship is swamped.

Doug Geekie,
O.C.E.

Housework

Even with a moderate-sized home, it would take a woman all her time to do her housework properly. Not only this, but the children, when young, require the constant care of a mother.

Bob Leeming,
IV SPS

Polygamy

Yes, I agree, is perhaps too simple an answer. It is not ambition to be half a man that sends women out of the home, but lack of opportunity to be a woman. Statistics have triumphed over biology. There aren't enough men to go around. Thus some women are denied the husbands and children they need to fully exist. As it is, woman is just a form of cheap labour in business and industry. I don't favour the household drudge, but the woman outside the home is a sort of frustrated hybrid, neither fully flesh not fully fowl. Perhaps polygamy is the answer. One might as well be broke with three wives as with one and it would at least get them back where they belong and at heart wish to be.

Roger Bull,
IV Modern History

FORUM

Soft Touches

An Indian looking into this question would speak in favour of keeping his womenfolk in the home.

Women are the emblem of peace, tranquility and the soft touches which we so much covet to get in our home after we retire from the busy bustle of practical outdoor life.

Women are welcome in the outside world too but I think there is hardly any scope for exercising their feminine faculties outside their own home.

Rejeshwar Mittra,
Grad Studies

Ja?

I believe with the Germans, that woman's sole task is "kinder, kirche, und kuche."

J. Scott-Thomas,
II M and P

Decided

Woman's place is in the home? We may debate this question if we will, but it has already been decided. The cold truth is that women no longer like homes and are getting rid of them as quickly as they can. Consider the facts. In 1900 no respectable man would dare propose marriage unless he could offer a commodious house and a bank account from which to furnish it: his wife prided herself on her light hand with pastry, her shining jars of preserves, her rows of starched and ruffled offspring. But in 1950 a woman will accept a man who offers her a single room: the popularity of quick-mixes and can-openers shows the decline of interest in cooking: one child is considered a tremendous achievement! All this could not happen if women really liked housekeeping. The female sex has obviously determined that its place is not in the home, and who, pray, is better qualified to judge?

The reason behind the decision is simple: women have a sneaking desire to be men—witness their love of slacks and their persistent attempts to get into Hart House; education and full employment have now given them the means of gratifying some part of their wish, and their yearnings for masculine freedom are gleefully encouraged by rapacious manufacturers of labour-saving devices.

Frances Norwood,
University College
Dept. of Classics

Fiddlesticks

Woman's place is not in the home—or in any place else for that matter. I fail to see the point in exlaiming that one half of the human race belongs in this place or in that, while the other half can work or not, survive or not, in fact find any place it pleases.

As soon as woman tries to do this, one half the populace says her place is in the home. Fiddlesticks! Just because most women are happier in the home than not, is no excuse to try to jam the rest of womankind in there, too.

Catherine May
III M and P

Get Out!

The only reason most girls get married now is so they can stay at home. The problem is to get them out of the home.

Olie Mandryk,
III UC

The Bees Can

A woman's place is definitely not in the home. Speaking from the medical point of view, it seems woman can do as many things as men and then a few more. Therefore, I see no objection to letting the wife go out and earn a living and the drone-like husband can stay and mind the children. After all the bees do it, why can't we?

John Lofft,
III Meds

Who Else?

It all depends on who else is going to live in it.

Elizabeth Endicott,
III Eng. Lang and Lit.

Why Not?

I emphatically disagree that a woman should be confined within the precincts of her home all her married life. What is this—a man's world?

Do we ever suggest that all men be engineers and nothing else? Then why should all women be housewives? Woman is just as capable a human being (notice I didn't say animal) as man; abilities and desires may vary among her sex just as in man's. She desires to be and can be as good a lawyer, a doctor, or a teacher as a man. Why shouldn't she be?

Times have changed since the cave-man days, despite some men's opinion. The world has extended beyond the confine of the home and a man's duty beyond that of the family. Just as a man now necessarily contributes much more to civilization than bringing home the food and protecting the home, so should a woman do a little more than bear children and keep house.

SPS WINS TRACK MEET

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Back in 1894, Sir William Mulock donated a trophy — the Mulock Cup — to be fought for by the interfaculty football teams of the University of Toronto. Therefore, if mental arithmetic is reliable, the name they engrave on the handsome old chunk of silverware this fall will be the sixtieth. Even if this is only the 59th time the mug has been for grabs, it's still the oldest football prize in Canada — and that includes the Grey Cup, which people go to a great deal of trouble to win.

When he handed out the trophy, Sir William was Vice-Chancellor of the university. Later, he became a Member of Parliament, Postmaster-General of Canada and was eventually promoted to the position of Chancellor.

The cup he had struck in 1894 has had quite an illustrious career, too. It has seen some very fine football in those sixty (or is it 59?) autumns. And, during that time, especially since the last year, it has reached the point where it can find its way across Queen's Park to Victoria College by itself. It has made the track up to Bob's place 17 times, all told, and six times in the last eight years.

Time was when the interfaculty squads regarded the Mulock chase as important enough to hire such illustrious chaps as Annis Stukus to guide their destinies. In 1941, Big Stuke was coach of the Senior S.P.S. entry while brother Frank masterminded the Skule juniors. Stuke went on to coach teams like Toronto Indians, Edmonton Eskimos and, at present, the Vancouver Lions. In that 1941 season, his strong team was dumped in the play-offs by (you guessed it) Vic who went right on to the intramural championship.

But the brightest moment for the Mulock league in the last decade was in 1948, when St. Mike's cracked the Scarlet and Gold monopoly. Two years later, of course, Forestry chopped another hole in the monopoly but the Woodmen of 1950 couldn't boast a name like the 1948 Irish team who had Dick Brown at quarterback. The inevitable happened the next season when Brown slipped into the blue and white togs of the Varsity Seniors where he played one season at halfback before becoming a highly regarded defensive linebacker with Hamilton Tiger-Cats of the Big Four. One suspects that Brown must have been something of a standout in the intramural circuit during that '48 campaign.

Even before that, senior and intermediate coaches had found the interfaculty league worth a frequent look. In 1947, Brown was with St. Mike's, Alex Lawson toiled for the Ajax and Tony Cecutti was a Meds star. Lawson quarterbacked the Blues to the 1951 intercollegiate championship and Cecutti was a senior before that.

In 1950, Bill Burley was piledriving through opposing lines as a fullback for Junior S.P.S. and he did the same task for the Blues in 1951. Bill Horton was an all-star quarterback for Junior Skule in 1941, although Bob Masterson has found him more useful as an end or flying wing with the Blues. Two of St. Mike's footballers of last season have moved into tougher competition — John Prendergast, now a centre with the Blues, and Bill McKenna, who now does his playing for Toronto Balmy Beach of the ORFU.

So if you go by past performances — and what else is there to go by? — it's a sure bet that there will be some senior, and maybe professional, material on display in the loop this fall.

There's not much question that the type of ball played is good to watch — some people say that the interfaculty is the roughest league in the country. And then there are those who argue that sports at the intramural level are the most important, that they fulfil the real function of a university athletic program. But that's not the concern of this particular column.

Still, there's no need to try to sell interfaculty football to you. All you need to do is see a few games. First opportunity is this afternoon when the schedule opens with a doubleheader on the back campus.

Lawyers Win 1-0

Two games were played yesterday on the intramural soccer scene. The feature game saw the new Law team celebrate its' debut in the league by dumping Architecturs 1-0. The lawyers' win came on a goal in the second half by Doug Andison.

A Group One soccer encounter saw Senior S.P.S. shade Victoria College seniors 1-0.

In volleyball yesterday, the second-year Pre-Meds team took two straight over Junior S.P.S., 15-5 and 15-6.

Skulemen Snatch Rowell Trophy For Second Consecutive Season

For six seasons, from 1946 until 1952, the Rowell Memorial Trophy, the prize for the interfaculty track and field championship, was the exclusive property of University College, bolstered by the athletes of P.H.E. Then last year, School of Science broke the spell by carting off the silverware and yesterday at Varsity Stadium, they made it two years in a row.

It was the closest meet in years as second-place U.C.-P.H.E. was only 15 points behind at 34 and Victoria College came third with 30. Dentistry scored 12, Medicine 11, St. Michael's 3 and Pharmacy 1.

Actually, the Skulemen took only five firsts in the 15-event meet, but piled up points on seconds and thirds. Three of those firsts were the work of speedy Dick Harding, one of Lloyd Percival's Toronto Track club students, who dashed home first in the 100, 220 and 440-yard runs.

However, that wasn't enough to win Harding the Chancellor Cody trophy for the individual track and field championship. That went to Norm Williams, the C. and F. freshman, who notched 18 points to lead Victoria College to third place. Williams, a clubmate of Harding on the TTFC Red Devils, won the 120 and 220-yard hurdles, was second in the broad jump and shot put and third in the high jump.

Last year's Cody winner, Bob Hamilton, picked up 11 points for Dentistry, winning the broad jump and finishing second behind Williams in both hurdles events.

Juri Vrzesnevski, the Physical Education strong man, was another multiple winner, topping the javelin throw and the shot put. He had a second in the discus trow, too, for a total of 13 points for the day. Victoria College's Pete Watson won both the half-mile and mile.

The performances at this meet are the basis for picking the Varsity teams which will go to McGill next Wednesday for the intercollegiate meet.

Don Not Colorful? Facts Say Smith Has Loads Of It

By MOISHE REITER

Standing six-foot-one-inch, weighing a muscular 183 pounds, and quite convinced that "there's nothing colourful" to write about him, is The Varsity Blues' stalwart left end, Don Smith.

Colour, as it happens, abounds in the Smith Story. In his earlier days Don was a member of the fabulous Oakwood C.I. football editions of the '47-'49 era and, though he set no scoring records, laid a good foundation for the gridiron career that brought him into the Blue camp. Out of Oakwood in 1950, Don tied up with the classy Cobourg; "Galloping Ghosts" as their first-string end. After a season of haunting all their opposition Don and the Ghosts wound things up in grand fashion by winning the Dominion Intermediate Championship.

At last in 1951, Don Smith, having had enough of the bush leagues, came to Varsity. He entered Dentistry and in his freshman year starred at left end for the J-V's as the Baby Blues regained the Shaw Trophy to begin their present reign as lords of the intermediate college loop. This season Don scored his first, and to date only, major in University ball. This is surprising as he is rated one of the top ends in the league.

"One of the best defensive ends in our circuit" is Olie Mandryk's apparisal of Smith. "Don has a good pair of hands", continues Olie, "They haven't been utilized much . . . but that will be changed, "was Olie's promise.

Though he hasn't used his hands excessively in football Don has had good use of them in his professional training. Now in his second Dental year, he has only two years more till he can hang out his shingle as a Dentist.

In 1952, his first season with the senior Blues, Don proved himself one of Varsity's most valuable men. He spent most of the time spiking the big ideas of the opposition ball-carriers, and when a punctured plural cavity, suffered against Queen's, sidelined him for the last two games of '52, Don left a big gap in the Blue lineup. It should be noted that this injury was caused by a broken rib, with which Don played most of the season before it finally got him.

With only a few years left to him to be a Blue, Smith came out this year to make the most of the remaining time. Thus far Don has performed brilliantly, though mainly on defence. Now with the prospect of a big part for him in the Varsity scoring drives we can expect to be adding a lot of polish to Don Smith's already bright rec-

On the matter of last week's Western upset Don could only say, with a strong certainty, "We'll beat them next time, and then we'll take the Yates Cup."

Firster For St. Hilda's

It took a couple of weeks to do it but good old Saint Hilda's finally came up with a win in the women's interfaculty softball loop. It was the second try of the season for this particular squad whose other two college cohorts have yet to tally a win.

The strangest part about it was that the Saintly ladies were being matched against UC who, last season had one of the strongest crews on the T.O. campus. The final score — 8-5.

UC took to bat in the opening round with Jaon Martin scratching the first score in what turned out to be one of the best games of the second week. With two on base, Heather Chipman failed to push them farther, and at the end of the first, the score sheet read 2-1 for Saint Hildas.

UC pulled ahead in the second on tallies by Mary Craw, Deanne Connacher and Heather Chipman, but the saintly ones overpowered them in a wild spurt which finished with six. Thus at the end of the second, the Saints were ahead 8-4.

Mary Craw did it again for UC in the third but her team mates failed to raise the scoring any more, so that at the end of the match, Saint Hilda's was ahead 8-5.

A full schedule will be matched off today with the same Saint Hilda's squad against the unbeaten Vic I ladies. Also, unscathed this year, PHE second year will duel with Saint Mikes who defaulted their only other match of the season. Saint Hilda's thirds will be out against POT at the stadium — which looks like a prety fair noon hour in the softball ranks.

Interfaculty Ball Begins

This afternoon the back campus will be the scene as the opening games of the interfaculty football schedule set the season in motion.

The west field will see St. Mike's and Dents clash while Vic, last year's champs, take on S.P.S. Vic is in the unfortunate position of having lost a sizeable chunk of last year's team. Lost through graduation will be last year's captain and fullback, Mel Fraser, plus guard Pete McMurtry, center Jim Rodger, and their famed kicker George Hevanor. Notable additions to this years team though will be Bruce Dunlop, all-star tackle of two years previous, returning after five years out of action, and Pete Potter of senior basketball fame at quarter. With 16 of last year's club returning, headed by such stalwarts as guards Don Mills and Ross Murray, the scarlet and gold, sporting their imported coach Stan Riva from N.Y.U., are looking to another good season with hopes high for a repeat of last year's conquests.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

This could be called "little sports week" because, besides big sports week' cause besides big doings in softball, little things like golf and tennis have been going on, rather unnoticed we regret to say on and off the T.U. campus. We say little to include those activities where the participation is small and in one case, interest, is even smaller.

The most minute of the group appears to be golf. Why? No clubs? Headache?—Or just plain chicken. Every year, the University sponsors a women's golf tourney at Saint Andrew's ande ach year the participation diminishes. This year the constestants were whittled down to three. We know as well as you, there are more golfers on the campus but according to a downhearted Ann Armstrong, UC, who headed this activity the gals held back because "they felt they had to be pros".

When the tourney was announced, eight people signed up. Co.. took two, rushing and miscellaneous took three. The strange thing about one of these colds is that one of them was out to play baseball the day of the match.

So, let's face it, golf has just about had it at Toronto. True enough there are no nearby courses but it is also true that more than these girls around here play the game. Over fifty boys turned out at the men's interfaculty meet-guess that shows us. By the way, winner of the match yesterday was Shirley Grant, first year POT.

While baseball bats we.. swinging in Trinity field and golf clubs were rotting in mouldy cupboards the semi-final round to decide the intercol tennis squad began yesterday behind Saint Hilda's. Nancy McKay, Dianne Merrick, Mary Lynn Boyf and Mary Rideil finished on top of the first round which is slated to continue this afternoon. This is one little sport which went over in a big way this year and if predictions mean anything at this early date, we'll pick Toronto to win the intercol meet at Queen's on the twenty-third.

Meeting

There will be an important meeting of managers and coaches of women's intramural basketball teams this afternoon at 4.00 p.m. at Falconer Hall. The purpose of today's meeting will be to give instruction in the new 1953-54 ruling.

The constitution of IUS has been amended to provide for associate memberships.

The unrepresentative character of the IUS secretariate is due to the unrepresentative character of the IUS in general. The IUS executive have offered a seat to Canada, should NFCUS become a member.

The obvious political discrimination by the IUS against the Yugoslav student body has been partially rectified. They were invited to attend, although they were too late in accepting and so were not recognized by the congress.

Non-members were given full rights in speaking, and in replying. "There was no faulty method" of forcing through or defeating resolutions, but the communist element was in majority.

There was a desire on the part of the publicity and information departments of IUS to have more representative news coverage in their publication. Taylor felt this was a step in the right direction.

IUS definitely wanted to cooperate with World University Service in the field of student relief.

U. of T. Netters Unbeaten As Tennis Tourney Opens

The University of Toronto's tennis team couldn't have made a better beginning yesterday as the intercollegiate tournament opened at the Toronto Lawn Tennis Club. Varsity netters won all nine opening day matches to lead both the singles and doubles section of the tourney.

Only four teams are entered in the tournament this year—McGill, Toronto, University of Montreal and University of Ottawa. Each school has five singles players here as well as two doubles teams.

The tournament is being conducted on a round-robin basis. Each team rates its' entries from 1 to 5 and the first man on each team plays the first man on each other team, the second men play each other, and so on. The same system applies to doubles play and the team scoring most match victories wins the team championship. On Friday, any unbeaten players may challenge the top players for the individual championships.

In yesterday's singles play, Toronto's number one player, Gert Lukk, who is intramural champion, staged a stirring comeback to defeat McGill's Charlie MacMillan. The McGill netter won the first set 6-4 but Lukk evened it by taking the second 6-3. MacMillan grabbed a 5-2 edge in the third but Lukk steadied to win it 10-8.

Other singles results yesterday were: Harry Hall, Toronto, defeated Jean-Guy Richard, Montreal, 6-4, 6-2; Mike Breber, McGill defeated Jean Salvaiz, Ottawa, 6-2, 6-0; Hugh Peacock, Toronto, defeated Pat Northey, McGill, 2-6, 6-2, 6-3; Jean-Guy Mongeau, Montreal, defeated Jean Cantin, Ottawa, 6-3, 6-2; Raymond Page, Montreal, defeated Jean Valiquet, Ottawa, 61- 6-1; Ken Lawson, Toronto, defeated Pierre Lamoureux, Montreal, 6-4, 6-1; Danny Lazare, Mont real, defeated Robert Bacon, Ottawa, 6-1, 6-4; Robin Arnold, Toronto, defeated Nadeau Papineau, Ottawa, 6-1, 6-4; Myrto Messier, Montreal, defeated Don Johnston, McGill, 6-1, 6-2.

The first two rounds of the doubles section of the tourney were concluded yesterday, too, and the following were the scores: Lukk and Lawson, Toronto, defeated Baron and Valiquet, Ottawa, 6-3, 6-0; Page and Mongeau, Montreal, defeated MacMillan and Northey, McGill, 6-2, 6-2; Arnold and Hall, Toronto, defeated Johnston and Breder, McGill, 3-6, 8-6, 9-7; Desjardins and Messier, Montreal, defeated Cantin and Papineau, Otta wa, 6-4, 6-0.

The second round matches saw Toronto remain undefeated, too. Lukk and Lawson defeated Page and Mongeau of Montreal 6-1, 6-1 while Arnold and Hall stopped Montreal's Cantina and Papineau, 6-2, 0-6 and 6-4. MacMillan and Northey of McGill took Baron and Valiquet of Ottawa 6-1, 6-1 and Desjardins and Messier, Montreal, defeated Cantin and Papineau 7-5 and 6-3.

Team scores yesterday were Doubles—Toronto 4, McGill 2, Montreal 2 and singles—Toronto 5, Montreal 3 and McGill 2.

We have seen a presentation of the facts in South Africa. The facts of Africa's relation with the rest of the world are another story. There can be no question that South Africa is a strong competitor with the Soviet Union for the most unfavourable publicity in North America. Africa as a leader among nations has been, out of necessity, virtually ignored.

In fact, the United Nations unquestionably feels that the South African problem is one of her worst thorns. The question has been raised repeatedly in debate at the UN, and the Union has fought back at every suggestion. There seems no doubt but that she is ashamed of her position on the UN, but at the same time she refuses to be helped. She not only refuses, but she has tried to antagonize the British Commonwealth against the United Nations, saying no country has been left with any reasonable degree of freedom.

The Varsity admits it is difficult to keep face with yourself or a voting population, and at the same time call in help in a rough spot. But at a time like this, when the west must be a model of perfection in the eyes of the critical, there should be no question about enlisting the help of friendly nations. It would be bitter medicine for a member nation. But when one country is in trouble to the disgrace of her associates, she must either clean up or get out.

Possible solutions would seem to rest with positive action from the United Nations. This would at least prove that the western world is willing to try to solve its own problems. It is difficult for an association such as the UN to impose itself on its members, but this was the responsibility it undertook. At the same time, South Africa undertook a responsibility to accept help with her internal problems of an international nature. If she does not soon open her mind to suggestion, disciplinary measures must be inevitable.

Health Insurance

Norman Chalmers, II Law, explains why a national health plan is essential, and suggests means of taking steps in that direction.

Just half the young Canadians who tried to enlist in their country's army during early 1952 were rejected as medically unfit. Canada has an infant mortality rate double that of Sweden and New Zealand, half again as great as that of Great Britain.

IN 1951 CANADA lost 137 million man-hours-worth of production through illness — despite the fact that Canadian governments and individuals spent $671 million on health care. Finance companies do some of their biggest business lending to those hardest-hit by hospital and doctor bills.

There is one doctor for every 2,400 people in Newfoundland, one for every 860 in Ontario; seven of every ten Canadian doctors live in urban centres, where they serve only 45% of our people. Canadians with incomes in the low $2,000's spent about $60 per family on health ni 1951; those in the over-$5,000 bracket got upward of $157-worth of health care per household.

That's the case for a national health plan in Canada — or part of the case.

IT'S TRITE TO SAY that the state of the nation's health affects us all. But it bears repeating, illness cuts down the amount of wealth we can produce as well as the usefulness and fullness of the lives we can lead. In the last analysis, the health of every other member of the community will affect our own even if we measure its effect only by the risk of our catching a communicable disease. Health is a community affair, which a civilized community must deal wth through community institutions. And the most effective of these, for all its much-publicized faults, is our government.

Needless to say, a national health plan can only be introduced by stages. Facilities must be expanded and doctors trained — more rapidly than our present governments are prepared to expand and train them. (Provinces have been able to use only $100 million of a meagre total of $165 million available in federal health grants — because of both their own lethargy and because of the federal strings attached to the grants.)

THE FIRST STAGE is hospital insurance. In Saskatchewan hospital services are already available to all — and with reservations, this is also true in British Columbia. The next is free medical and dental care and — most important — free drugs, paid for by taxes and by per capita contributions. This has been achieved in Britain. The goal is "socialized medicine" in which the "health centre" approach substitutes a focus on prevention for concentration on after-the-fact cure. Administration of such plans in Canada would clearly, at all stages of their development, have to be decentralized. Provincial and local governments would have to take responsibility for many phases of health scheme development.

This objective of collective responsibility for the health of the individuals who make up the community will not be achieved by private hospital and medical plans. Their administrative costs run to some 8-10% of expenditures as compared to 4-5% under Saskatchewan's province-run plan

Private plans exclude those who need health care most — the already ill, and (usually) the residents of rural area. They tend to by-pass the self-employed.

ONE SUGGESTION MADE in this space a few days ago was that the CCF party should start another private health plan of its own. Just this is likely to be done by the trade unions which support the CCF demand for health insurance. In the face of government failure to meet their request, it is increasingly possible that they will demand and obtain single-industry plans. These will care for their own members and leave the rest of the world out.

Apart from the bad effect on what economists call "the mobility of labour," this is — and the union men would be the first to admit it — a long way short of the higher aims of a labour movement which seeks to improve its own members' lot by raising standards of living in the community as a whole. The CCF especially is not purely and simply a cooking class organization and is bound to view as a stop gap any scheme which is organized with the labour movement to benefit its own alone.

Private plans, finally, are paid for equally by all recipients — there can be no attempt to relate contributions to ability to pay. Since redistribution of wealth must be an objective of all social security schemes, including a health plan, graduated taxes are therefore a way of supplying the health scheme wherewithall preferable to flat-rate payments to private plans. This is doubly true in Canada where redistribution of wealth must be geographic as well as among individuals.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE among patients and physicians, on the other hand, is something it has been possible to preserve in the UK's National Health Service, and there is no reason why it should not be preserved here. Some outlying communities which now have no medical service might find one doctor imposed upon them, but objections would probably be minimal.

Socialists feel, generally, that the medical profession and in particular the well-established and conservative specialists who tend to dominate Medical Associations should not be allowed too heavy a hand in the direction of a health scheme. The best professional is seldom the best administrator — the biggest criticism of the British scheme has been that it bogged doctors down in paper work.

IT'S WORTH MENTIONING that the British Medical Association has accepted the principle of the Health Service although North American Medical Associations with no experience of such service continue vigorous lobbies against them.

Community responsibility for community health is accepted, understood and practiced in Britain, most countries of continental Europe, and in Australia and New Zealand. There's no reason why Canada should lag behind other nations in health plan development — and why the people of the world's second richest country should continue to tolerate resulting high infant mortality rates and and other indices of poor health standards.

Thirty-four years ago the Liberal party promised health insurance in some form. Procrastination and much-exaggerated constitutional difficulties have kept Canada waiting for fulfilment of this promise. But like Gallup Poll figures and the 100,000 signatures on the CCF's health plan petition of a year ago, Liberal lip-service to health insurance indicates that the demand for it has more than just CCF support.

In fact, however, a national health plan does imply a measure of progress towards Socialist goals. It can only be effective if it is administered in harness with a full-scale integrated social security program which we do not as yet have in Canada. For example, sickness insurance to maintain earnings during the illness of a breadwinner is an essential complement to such a plan. The biggest difficulties of a health scheme stem from the cost of giving free care to chronic diseases many of which — like tuberculosis — are diseases of poverty. Similarly, widespread mental disease is undoubtedly aggravated by the strain of person life in a competitive and acquisitive society.

THE COSTS OF A NATIONAL HEALTH plan are a fixed charge on the national income, and would involve a greater commitment to physical economic planning than has yet been undertaken by Canadian governments to ensure that national income was maintained at high enough levels to carry it.

Socialists would look on the introduction of health insurance of some sort by others as a step forward due largely to Socialist effort. But only Socialist administration of such a scheme could be fully successful because only Socialists can fully accept all its implications.

The basic assumption of health plan advocates is that there are some things we must do together if we are to be civilized. That is a Socialist assumption.

Recognition Soon

Editor,
The Varsity;

Your editorial titled "Law Monopoly" which appeared in last Thursday's edition of The Varsity was read with more disappointment then surprise. It was to be expected that The Varsity would be overcome with the temptation to join the hue and cry so ably carried on by Dr. Wright, onetime Dean of the Osgoode Law School, but I confess disappointment with your treatment of the question, which, obviously, resulted from lack of research.

A number of joint meetings have been held between representatives of the University of Toronto Law School and the Osgoode Law School. Had you examined the minutes of these meetings, together with the correspondence exchanged between the two, you would have seen that the sole reason, that graduates of the U of T Law school are not allowed an immediate call to the bar in Ontario upon graduation, is that the Benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada, whose duty it is to see that only qualified practitioners of the law are allowed to practise law in Ontario, feel that every student must spend a considerable period of time learing the practical phases of the law before being allowed to practise. Rightly or wrongly they have determined that this period under articles should be for a term of two years. That there should be some period of office training is beyond question, and I submit the situation is analogous to that of a medical student interning.

So the issue then is not one of academic merit and, I trust, not one of pecuniary interests, as you suggest, but simply a matter of office training.

If this defect was overcome by your University authorities, you sacred right to recognition would, no doubt, soon be granted.

D. G. Haig,
IV Osgoode.

Principal's Message

For one hundred years University College has sought to keep faith with its founders, to be a college with a university spirit, a community of teachers and students dedicated to ideals of higher learning. It is grateful for the contribution made by more than fifteen thousand graduates to the well-being of Canada, in Church and State, indeed in almost every sphere of the life of the nation.

In this Coronation and Centennial Year — and what a truly happy coincidence is so marked in 1953 — University College salutes sister institutions of higher learning, friends, benefactors, former teachers and students, and thanks all for their assistance and good will. Very special gratitude is expressed for the gift of a new Men's Residence and Dining Hall.

University College will commemorate the Centenary of its establishment on October 16th, 17th and 18th, 1953, and has the honor to invite you be present at and to join in this Anniversary Celebration.

S. C. A. Jeanneret, Principal.

The "Gay" Nineties

Today, most Varsity coeds would count it a feather in their caps to be seen talking in the halls to one of the so-called "big wheels on campus." But to a Varsity coed of the class of '95 to be seen talking to any male student, much less a prominent one was something to be avoided, because it would likely be followed by a stern lecture from Miss Salter.

Was this Miss Salter a local ogre? No, she was simply the official chaperon for the thirty or so women undergraduates who attended University College during the gay nineties. She undertook to see that these girls conformed to accepted standards of ladylike behaviour as long as they were inside the walls of UC.

Clothes rarely presented a problem to the UC coed of the class of '95. If you had two serge dresses for school (with high necks of course), a good Sunday dress and a party dress, you were all set. Naturally these dresses had to be floor-length. In those days a lady never showed her legs in public. "I was considered a bit of a revolutionary," recalls Mrs. Abbott laughingly, "because I always wore my skirts four inches from the ground."

One hint of the cost of a university education for a coed of '95 would set a modern day coed longing for the good old days. Tuition fees in Arts were twenty-five dollars a year in 1891, but by 1895 they had sharply increased and coeds were required to pay a then outrageous fifty dollars per year. Room and board for out-of-town students, and a single room at that, would probably cost you about four dollars a week.

Though they knew they were at the University only on suffrance and had to be careful not to shock tradition, the women graduates of 1895 still remember that they managed to crowd as much fun into their stay at University College as their modern counter parts.

Ghosts And Gargoyles Have Home

Residence At Last

Ever since it was uprooted in 1899 to make room for Faculty offices in the west wing of University College, the ghost of Ivan Reznikoff has been without a home.

Ivan was a Russian artisan employed to carve the gargoyles around U.C. He died soon after his work was completed and he was buried in the north-east corner of the college quadrangle. Perhaps his sleep was tormented by visions of the grotesque lions and frogs he had carved about the building because soon after his death, his ghost appeared to several people around the college. From the first, Ivan showed a marked preference for residence men.

On one occasion, he visited a U.C. undergraduate in his room and together they finished a bottle of Scotch whiskey.

The exact date of this visitation is unknown but residence students were accustomed to being singled out for distinction in those days, and the forty men fortunate enough to be accommodated in Residence were called "The Forty Immortals."

The West Wing of University College served as a residence from 1859 to 1899. The students were accommodated in a series of houses opening off from the Cloisters, after the fashion of the English residential colleges. The J.C.R. was the dining hall for all the students.

The Dean in residence made his home in the present English department and the Dean's house of today was occupied by the Steward.

The Steward was often an unscrupulous character, or regarded as such by resident students. His duties were to look after rthe rooms and the dining hall. In return for his services he could determine his own price and his one aim in life seemed to be to get as much out of the students as possible without doing too much in rturn.

In 1899, the residences were closed to make room for faculty offices and from this date until 1926, there was no UC men's residence.

In 1926, the home of Sir Daniel Wilson, a former president of University College, was made available to UC as a residence. This residence will go down in the annals of college history as the famous '73 St. George Street. '73 was a direct continuation of the old residence tradition and, in line with that tradition.

While a small part of the men wishing to share in residence life were being accommodated in '73, the women of the University College moved into a spacious new residence.

Whitney Hall, in its twenty years of existence has become a college tradition. Women were first admitted to the University in 1884 but it was not until 1931 that a permanent home was found for them.

The first woman's residence was Queen's Hall. Numbers 4 and 9 Queen's Park were later acquired along with Hutton House and Argyle House.

In 1931, Whitney Hall was completed with accommodations for 167 students, 3 dons and a household staff. Shortly after the Hall was opened, the Governor General of Canada and his wife, Lord and Lady Robert Willingdon, were luncheon guests. Lady Willingdon asked the number of students living in and when told the number remarked, "I would have thought many more than that from the number of heads hanging from the windows when we drove up."

The influx of veterans after the war pointed up the the inadequacies of '73 and in terms of space, and in 1946, Holwood was obtained as a residence mainly fo rveterans. It was used as a residence until it was turned over to the history department in 1951. That year, 5 Wilcocks Street was taken over, and this year the former school of nursing residence was acquired to house the men from '73.

On Friday afternoon, the Governor General of Canada will lay the cornerstone for the new UC men's residence and once again, the men of University College will have a home.

The new building will perpetuate the residential tradition first incorporated in the "cloisters." It will provide accommodations for 183 students in six separate houses. Each house will have a tutor, and a common dining hall with a capacity of 217 will serve all six houses.

Perhaps in one of the six houses, friend Ivan will find a companion to share his memories of the "Forty Immortals."

Benny Says—

While most attention is being focussed on the fact that One-eyed Benny, the campus bookie, called Toronto to beat Western last week (and was wrong) it is well to remember that Benny was correct in predicting Queen's to beat McGill (he missed the score by only a touchdown. This consistency, though hardly brilliance, has encouraged Benny and his crystal ball sees the following scores;

Toronto 18 McMaster 11
Western 25 McGill 6

$9,000 Objective For Red Feather

The objective for the Red Feather Campaign on the University of Toronto Campus this year will be $9,600. This figure was released yesterday by Student's Administrative Council Student Service Commissioner Bill Baldwin, yesterday.

Tag Day for the University will be held on Thursday, October 22.

"This is less than one dollar per student" said Baldwin, "and yet it takes care of 66 tag days to which each student would contribute at least 10 cents.

Baldwin pointed out that each dollar donated by a student gives 1,776 cents to each of the Red Feather services.

It was pointed out at the SAC meetings last evening that the University of Toronto's contribution to the Red Feather last year was over $11,000.

Students looking after the Red Feather are: John Shaw, Arch; Rodger Talbot, Knox; Lang, Emmanuel; Marg Norman, Medicine; Anne Lawson, St Hilda's; Donna Parr, Nursing; Joan Carruthers, Vic.

BOOK EXCHANGE STILL OPEN

The Exchange has still 'oodles' of books remaining for any dis-stepping smartly into November for their first lectures remarked Book Exchange manager Deller. Now is a good time to get those reference texts from which the lecturer takes his notes, at bargain prices.

Sales will continue Friday 9 - 1 p.m. and Monday 9 - 5 p.m.

Bloop Sale At Friday Pep Rally

The Blue and White Society has ordered 500 extra bloops to be sold at the Pep Rally tonight and at the game tomorrow. Most of the 1000 bloops originally purchased have already been sold. The price is still 35 cents. "The bloops are going faster than we anticipated and all students are urged to purchase their bloops as soon as possible," stated Ralph Walsh, Blue and White regalia chairman.

The Morning After

Conversazione Catastrophe

Varsity Misses Hot Fire Story

In 1890 The Varsity missed the biggest story in the history of the University of Toronto. This was the University College fire. The Varsity was suspended at that time. On the evening of February 14, 1890, the University Literary and Scientific Society was all set to have its annual conversazione.

The conversazione was never held. Two college servants were carrying trays of lamps for the affair up the south-east stairs, in the part of the building that now belongs to the Art and Archaeology department. One of them tripped and stubbed his toe, dropped the lamps, and started the fire that destroyed the entire east wing of the building.

The university library, situated where the reading room is now, was completely burned, and its 38,000 books destroyed. The panelling in the west hall was burned, and the big tower bell fell down and shattered. Part of the bell is now incorporated in the sun-dial in the Hart House quadrangle, and the translation of its Latin motto is "Once I sounded the hour loudly, now mutely."

Three days after the fire classes were underway again. In an editorial in The Varsity the following year, the editor complains that since University College had been using a reading room lent by the YMCA, the accustomed high standard of behaviour and consideration for others had greatly deteriorated. Some U.C. students may think that it hasn't recovered since.

The building was restored two years after the fire. There are pictures just inside the door of the UC reading room that show the old East and West Halls as they were before the fire. The West Hall was a museum, and the East Hall the main library, had carved alcoves on each side lined with books. The large windows and the roof have been restored as accurately as possible.

JCR Living "Ne Plus"

The Junior Common Room has a long and furious history in its evolution from a dining hall to its present day function of a coeducational lounge. Its past has been enlivened by squabbles regarding cleanliness; about who should and who should not be admitted, and by constant degradation by Engineers, Vic men and everyone not in UC. In fact, off-the-record comments, slightly unfavourable, have even been heard coming from loyal UC students.

The JCR started out as the dining hall for the men's residence in the Cloisters way back at the inauguration of University College. However, overcrowding of the residence forced this to be removed and the faculty took over the JCR as its dining hall. The quaint structure behind the JCR, now a classroom, was the kitchen. In those days students of nature studying in the woods surrounding the University were called to meals by the pealing of the bell atop the building. This bell is now used to announce Parliamentary debates. When Hart House was constructed the JCR was turned into a classroom. The next change occurred when the University officials moved to Simcoe Hall, about 25 years ago, and the JCR became the Junior Common Room (for men only). Afterwards, co-education took over and it now entertains both sexes.

The Room is son what like a chapel in interior design, dignified and noble, with a massive stone fireplace, flanked by an out-of-place modern radio, and a battered speaker's chair. Dozens of chairs and tables crowd the room normally and the sunlight entering the windows emphasizes the smoke trails usually winding about the room. Choruses of laughter and chatter burst about the room to the beat of the piano playing anything from "Dixie" to Chopin.

And so the JCR, affectionately called a proving ground for street cleaners and the "ne plus" in swinish living, continues to be a landmark in University College's history.

"Lit" Society

Mr. R. A. Bell, first historian of the Society, sums up the Lit. in these words:

"The University College Literary and Athletic Society, by direct descent from the Literary and Scientific Society, is the oldest society of undergraduates in the University of Toronto. Throughout a long and varied history its influence has indubitably been greater than that of any similar organization in the nation. As a school of debating, it has been unsurpassed. As a common meeting ground for undergraduates, it has performed one of the primary functions of a university."

The scene the Literary and Scientific Society entered upon in February 22, 1854, was hardly a promising one. Without buildings, subject always to the stress of political agitation in Parliament, castigated by many as "the godless university," with but a hundred students, the University of Toronto was far from being an ivory tower. The Journal of Sir Daniel Wilson then Professor Wilson, who played in the early life of the Lit. as in the College a most important part, is the only record remaining of the foundation.

The U.C. Parliament now handles debating in the College. The Government has not been defeated on Budget Night in forty years. But change has not meant decay. The J.C.R. still is recognisable to some, particularly at noon as "the Old Beanery", the residence dining-hall. The bishop who, it seems, lost his chair to the Lit's Honorary President and sundry "Governors General", has never reclaimed it. The forum which produced Arthur Meighan and W. M. King has also brought forth Joe Pats, Joe McCulley and the heads of Anglican, Presbyterian and United Churches in Canada.

Ever since the Second War the greatest railroad building in the University still has been seen at Open Meetings, last year's Executive suspension and 1950's attack on the S.A.C. Representative being good cases in point. The Lit appears to have mellowed and relaxed, but the new residence may be the sign of new outbursts of enthusiasm. All it takes is an issue and there will be plenty of them in the Literary and Athletic Society's second hundred years.

Coed Biography

The Women's Undergraduate Association of University College is proud of the fact that she celebrates her fortieth birthday in this very special year. In 1912, the women of UC were confronted with a major problem. There was in existence at the time, an organization known as the Women's Literary Society and it was a Literary Society in the strictest sense of the term. It was an old, well-established society but with the enrollment of women increasing so rapidly, the need for an organization of broader scope, became obvious. Sports and social activities, among other things, could not be ignored any longer.

Several years ago there was one word that caused more contention than another between the men and women of UC and that word was "amalgamation." The issue boiled down to simply this. The WUA felt that since the two executives spent more time fighting each other than they did fighting for the College, the best solution was amalgamation. They made this offer knowing that they always had a surplus in their treasury while the "Lit" invariably had a deficit.

So-called stubborn male pride took hold and what followed was one of the most childish displays of immaturity ever seen in University College. Fiery meetings and threats of resignation absorbed the greater part of men's time for the next few months. Tempers soon faded as the year progressed but the issue was not forgotten. It came up year after year but it never came about. If it accomplished nothing else, however, it did bring the "Lit" and the WUA into closer co-operation than they had ever been before. Respect (a quality which had hitherto been lacking) was shown increasingly on both sides, and the result today is an efficient, harmonious working of the University College "Lit" and "WUA" which contribute more to the life at UC than they ever receive credit for.

Installation Today Chancellor Beatty

Dr. Samuel Beatty will be formally installed as Chancellor of this university by President Sidney Smith this afternoon at three o'clock in Convocation Hall. Eight famous graduates of University College will receive honorary degrees at the special centennial convocation.

Dr. Beatty, Dean Emeritus, will succeed The Right Honourable Vincent Massey, Governor General of Canada, who has become a Governor of the University.

Among those receiving Honorary degrees at the convocation will be three men at the top of three Canadian religious groups: Most Reverend Dr. W. F. Barfoot, Archbishop of Rupert's Land and Primate of all Canada; Rev. W. A. Cameron, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada; Rt. Rev. Dr. A. A. Scott, Moderator of the United Church in Canada. All three men are University College Graduates.

Sir Ernest MacMillan, who has composed special music for the occasion, will be awarded a degree. Others receiving degrees will be: Dr. Gordon Heyd of New York City, former President of the American Medical Association; Judge Helen Kinnear; Louis Rasminsky, executive assistant to the Governors of the Bank of Canada and a director in the International Bank for Reconstruction and development; and B. K. Sandwell, who will address the Convocation on behalf of the Honorary graduates.

Guests at the Convocation will include representatives from other Universities from all over the United States and Canada. Many of these are graduates from the University of Toronto, who are representing Toronto at other Universities. Over fifty guests are expected. A few passes for the student body are still available at the SAC office.

UC Guild Disregards Constitution

The Players' Guild was founded oh, many years ago in the splendid spirit of non-conformity; at that time there were other college dramatic clubs putting on nice plays for friends and relatives but the intellectuals at U.C. rebelled. There were those, of course, who wished to continue in the staid tradition, but they lost to the avant-garde in the first fray.

The reactionaries bleated again in the organizational meeting for a constitution, parliamentary procedure, and other mundane business-like methods. Nevertheless, the guild came into being under the battlecry, "No constitution, no minutes, let your hair grow long."

Tradition has survived: there is still no constitution; the plays are held on Wednesdays and the intellectuals of Honour English still rear their sacred heads in poetic bursts. On the other hand, transition has taken its toll; plays are held in the evenings now, two or three at each monthly meeting; when the Caput required a constitution from every campus club, one was hurriedly composed, but included the line, "In every case, accepted practice shall take precedence over written rule." The ill-fated constitution was filed in Simcoe Hall and forgotten.

Of the people who made up the Guild: Mr. Finch, the first president, is now a professor of French at U.C. and Professor Dale of the Classics department was Honorary President for the first years. Many have gone on to be the backbone of the Alumnae Dramatic Society. More recent graduates are Bea Goldberg, Frances Halfpenny (who has just appeared in Venus Observed at Hart House), Eric House and the Davis', Murray and Don.

Whatever happens to its parent college in the next one hundred years, someone will be writing for The Varsity in 2053, "A Hundred Years of Non-Conformity, the Players' Guild."

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

A Portrait, 1853-1953

EDITED BY CLAUDE T. BISSELL. The story of a college that has been at the centre of humanistic studies in Canada for a century. This is much more than a nostalgic record of college life; it reveals the essential characteristics of the college as they have been expressed in the robust individualism of its teachers and students. The six illustrious graduates and one undergraduate who tell the story include: Claude T. Bissell, David P. Gauthier, F. C. A. Jeannaret, B. K. Sandwell, G. Stephen Vickers, Malcolm Wallace, W. Stewart Wallace, and A. S. P. Woodhouse. With 8 full-page illustrations of the college by Selwyn Dewdney, U.C. '31.

DRAMA

Jupiter Theatre will open its season with Ring Around The Moon at the Royal Alexandra next week, starting Monday the 19th. Written by Jean Anouilh and adapted by Christopher Fry, the play tells the story of two brothers of identical appearance, but opposite characters. Douglas Rain will play the double role of Hugo-Frederick.

The New Play Society will begin its two-week run of Venus Observed at the Museum Theatre on Monday. It was intended by Fry as an "autumn" play in a cycle of plays, and was orignially commissioned by Sir Laurence Olivier. This will be the first production in Canada by The New Play Society's British director.

An unusual feature of the weekend will be the University College Centenary Masque by Robert Finch. There will be two performances in Hart House Theatre on Saturday night, one at 8.15, and one at 10.00.

Robert Gills' first production this year is to be Antigone, Jean Anouilh's adaptation of the Sophoclean tragedy. Antigone will be played by Lyla Gutzin, Creon by Ivan Thornley-Hall, Ismene, Mary Morgan, Chorus, John Douglas, the Nurse, Beverley Milne, and Haemon Ted Walker.

MUSIC

The Hart House Sunday Evening series begins on Oct. 25 with a performance of Menotti's opera The Old Maid and the Thief by the Royal Conservatory Opera under the direction of Nicholas Goldschmidt. As usual, the concert begins at 9.00 p.m. in the Great Hall.

On Oct. 20 and 21 the Toronto Symphony Orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's 4th piano concerto in G and Brahms' 1st symphony in C minor. The piano soloist will be Mieczislaw Horszowski and this it the first in the annual double subscription series on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano will be the first artist to appear in the Eaton Auditorium series on Thursday, Oct. 22. She will sing songs and aries by Mozart, Brahms, Massenet, Faure and Ravel.

ART

A show of paintings by Tom Hodgson went on display at the Hart House Art Gallery on Wednesday, and will continue for the next two weeks. Mr. Hodgson describes his paintings as "abstract and non-representational."

At the Toronto Art Gallery an exhibition of A. Y. Jackson's paintings opens next Friday, and with it an exhibit of Canadian Crafts. The Jackson show contains over 100 paintings and is entitled A. Y. Jackson, Paintings 1902-1953. The Toulouse-Lautrec which is there now exhibit closes on the 18th.

Broadcast Canadian Concert

Portions of a concert of Canadian Music to be given in New York's Carnegie hall with Leopold Stokowski conducting will be heard over the CBC on October the 16th at 2:00 p.m. The broadcast will be delayed, since the actual concert takes place two days earlier.

Soloists chosen by Mr. Stokowski for the occasion include Lois Marshall, the well-known Canadian Soprano, and violinist Noel Brunet of Montreal. The Westminster Choir of Princeton, New Jersey, will take part in a performance of Dr. Healey Willan's Coronation Suite. tt varsit

DRAMA REVIEWS

Venus Observed

Venus Observed as presented in Hart House Theatre this week by the University Alumni was enjoyable although it failed to capture all the fantasy of which the play is capable, mainly, I think because the fact that the actors were frequently both inaudible and partially invisible, blurred the brilliant edges of Fry's poetry. Apart from the lighting, which tended to be shadowy, the staging was a real achievement, for the set was practical, simple and imaginative, the costumes jewellike in their brightness and perfectly suited to the souls encased within.

Most enchanting performance of the evening was Rex Sevenoaks' Reedbeck, the eminently civilized and lovable pilferer. This is a rich and delightful character and Mr. Sevenoaks did it full justice, amiably exploring every shade of wistful artlessness. As his son Dominic Peter Benjamin seemed uncomfortable in his first scene but once he was in his stride offered a delicately balanced characterization of that painfully virtuous young man.

Dashingly lacking in virtue was John Lindsey, Duke of Altair, whose strong stage presence dominated the play as effortlessly as the man himself overshadowed his son's life. I found his ironic moments more convincing than his poetic ones, largely because his rolling delivery tended to obscure lines which were already sufficiently involved. However, he was a more appealing figure than his son despite the latter's advantage of lively youth, which the Duke turned into a disadvantage of inexperience. Although Edgar was handsome and healthy only rarely when his enthusiasm got the better of him did he break down and let emotion appear behind his perfect control.

Pamela Terry, a Perpetua, the bright butterfly of Reedbeck's life, was gracefully winsome, achieving tenderness in her quiet moments and lightness in her gay ones. Of the three rivals for Paris' apple, Frances Halpenny's Jessie was warmly delightful and Marian Jones' Hilda sympathetic and human. Ruth James presented a characterization of Rosabel that was both interesting and appealing although she failed to exhaust the possibilities of drama and colour.

An air of reality hovered over the performance, a shade too heavy for its unworldly set, a little incompatible with the timelessness of the play. Perhaps the reality was inevitably bound up in the convincing representation of an eclipse and a fire, neither particularly dreamlike events. On the other hand, reality has its compensations—the fluttering leaves of the closing scene are falling now from real trees as if to remind us that the Duke's philosophy is not merely a stage convention.

Pygmalion

Pygmalion was presented last night in Massey Hall by the Dublin Players under the tremendous handicap of acting in front of a lot of potted palms, a circumstance which calls for extraordinary ingenuity in creating illusions—something which the Dublin Players failed to do. However, they got most of the laughs that they were supposed to get and they knew their lines.

James Neylin as a suddenly substituted Higgins seemed ill at ease in the part and considerably embarrassed by the tails of his morning coat; his rapid speech made it more difficult for him to appear devilishly ingratiating, as we have Mrs. Pierce's word that he is. When he was able to fling himself into a chair and mutter at somebody he was more convincing and much more relaxed.

Ann Elsden's Eliza was too free and easy as a first act flower girl; as a prudish young woman bent on attaining gentility Eliza would scarcely hope to impress the upper class by roguishly eating their chocolates and casually curling up in the middle of their floor. In the tea party scene, however, Eliza came into her own and held the scene as Eliza should. All of the actors were somewhat over burdened in this scene by the superfluity of laughs with which Shaw has filled it, so that succeeding lines tend to be lost in the laughter arising from the one immediately preceding.

Eliza in the last act, freed from the bonds of an assumed Cockney accent, was womanly and dignified in most of her scenes, although her sudden changes from shy to friendly, from tearful to smiling made a firm characterization difficult and took away much of her force.

Maureen Halligan as Mrs. Pierce was strong-willed and dissaproving; Freddy Eynsford-Hill as played by Brian Vincent was a fine characterization full of humour.

Unfortunately the real point of the play seemed to escape the company—they presented it as a hilarious farce and played it consistently as a drawing room comedy, igsoring the serious undertones completely. Doolittle is not merely a funny old man with an unusual set of values—Doolittle is a comment on society. The whole play is a social document presented in a candy coating of humor—skillful playing is required to make the most out of the humor without losing sight of the real object of the play. The Dublin Players' production ignored any serious implication but they made the most of their laughs and all the Shaw fans in the audience found themselves well able to laugh.

ART REVIEW

Tom Hodgson

Any nyook, or at least any forty-a-week c mercial artist, can paint a picture that resembles something. Painting a picture that resembles nothing is a more formidable problem. Tom Hodgson, a yong Canadian now showing his work in Hart House, has chosen the braver course.

The paintings fall into two classes; abstracts, which are inspired by something, and non-objectives, which are not inspired by anything. Mr. Hodgson, a very sincere man, paints them because he likes them, and admits "I could sell more if I didn't paint this way." He asks that the observer try to understand them before condemning. There is an excellent chance that this reviewer has failed.

"If I want a bowl of flowers a woman, or a landscape" reasons the non-representationalist, "there are plenty available." All artists modify their subject matter, molding its lines, forms, textures, colours and relationships nearer to the heart's desire. Some modern artists, reacting to such slavish dependence on things, have carried this to the point of getting along without the subject altogether We miss it.

A well-made abstract or non-objective is good to look at It is not a haphazard splatter masquerading as an accomplishment. It has planning, composition, rhythm, and a beauty and/or impact which a modern interior, and rounds out a colour-scheme better than new drapes and slip-covers.

The maker requires a rare feeling for, and practise in, design; more perhaps than the wall paper artist, and almost as much as the auto-body man. What others do with flowers, driftwood and sandwiches, he does with paint. His task is harder, as paint is, in itself, less interesting.

Mr. Hodgson usually begins an abstract by taking a colour transparency of an object which intrigues him, a boat, a fence, a rusty go-cart. Then, using the photo as a theme, he syncopates it into an abstract. The shots compare favourably with the paintings. They show the perceptive imagination which makes a photographer, and an artist.

Tom Hodgson has what it takes, and he is young. His chosen vehicle, like the derelict machines he elaborates so fancifully on canvas, is going nowhere. We hope to see him go further than it has been able to take him.

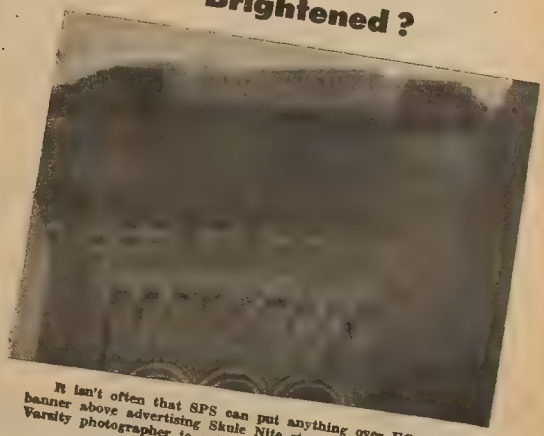
Kick 'Em High



A last glimpse of the kickline from the UC Follies. This year the University College Show of Shows is presenting a musical comedy adapted from a play written by two Wayne University students. The show — Where on Earth?, will be on in Hart House Theatre, Nov. 12, 13 and 14th.

Scoop!

A few years ago when the UC show was called the Follies a local restaurant featured a UC Follies Sundae. Originated by a former bartender who couldn't get the idea out of his mind and in 1933 started serving Louis Specials because according to him "When you like one thing, you always come back."

It isn't often that SPS can put anything over UC but the banner above advertising Skule Nite stayed long enough for a Varsity photographer to get this picture.

Tonight the back campus of UC will look very much like this picture. A pep rally was held for a number of years before the homecoming weekend football game except last year when it was replaced by a stadium show.

UC Debaters Conclude No Faith In American World Leadership

In one of the weekly series of UC debates, sponsored by the Political Economy Club, the students yesterday refused 17 to 13 to affirm their faith in American leadership in world affairs.

Ed Lowery, of UC, speaking for the motion, praised the US for its determined action in developing atomic weapons. He credited this action with saving the world from Communist domination.

Ted Rogers, II Trinity, contended "There is no alternative to support of the US". He said, "Criticism of Chiang Kei-shek overlooked the fact that Russia had supported the Chinese Communists since 1935."

Tom Hammond, II UC, accused the Americans of expecting the West, "To follow meekly in the wake of John Foster Dulles' bathtub" when he referred to a story in Time which told of Mr. Dulles handling diplomatic affairs from his bathtub. He deplored the new "Holy War" crusade of the US against Communism, and urged that every attempt be made to seek peaceful co-existence with Russia.

Al Bovoroy, I Law, said the Americans had abandoned the democratic principles on which their nation was founded. "America has sought the friendship of anyone who is anti-communist, no matter how corrupt and reactionary the ally." He compared Uncle Sam to Li'l Abner, "A big powerful, stupid oaf who regards physical strength as the primary pre-requisite to success." "Rather than speak softly and carry a bit stick," Bovoroy said, "America today is speaking loudly and swinging the sick aimlessly, thus only succeeding in creating a big noise and a gust of wind."

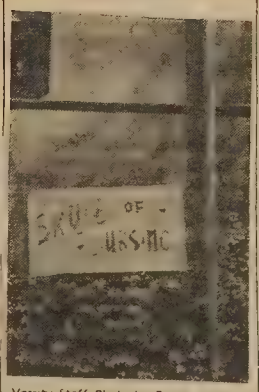
Floating Weekend For Homecomers

"Saturday morning will see the biggest parade since Santa Claus came to town," promised Float Parade director Ted Desjardins.

Twenty-five floats are expected in the parade, including floats from most of the colleges, faculties and schools on the campus. The Campus Co-op Residence, Whitney Hall, and OCE are expected to submit entries, OCE for the first time. Only organizations affiliated with the University are allowed to enter.

As usual the floats may be of a serious or comical nature, as long as they follow the theme "Pioneer Spirit." The emphasis this year is m on sense th nonsense. A hearty contribution is expected from the engineers.

The float parade offers a unique chance for all to see the cheerleaders from every faculty. Even the women-hating engineers in previous years have managed to throw together a cheerleading section.



The parade, which starts at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, will move from Devonshire Place along College St. to the Mining Building, and from there into the university. After the parade circles the front campus three times, the Alumnae Shield will be presented to the winning float, which will appear at half-time in the afternoon McMaster-Varsity game.

"Women Nervous Arguers" Plan Something Different

"Women have always been nervous about debating in front of men, so now we plan something different," Anne Somerville, Women's Rep on the U of T Debating Union said yesterday. This year, while the men debate in New England colleges, the women hope to debate in women's colleges in New York state. Letters are now being sent out to see what American colleges would be interested in the tour.

Earl Berger, Chairman of the UTDU said that, "The Union is investigating the possibility of a Women's Debating Tournament similar to the Brading Trophy competition. Invitations are being sent to McGill, Queen's and Western."

"Tryouts will be held before Christmas for these new events," Miss Somerville said. "Women of course will enter the interfaculty debates, as always," she added.

Blue and White Pep

Three Blue and White cheerleaders and a five-piece band paraded through Hart House yesterday to publicize tonight's Blue and White street dance and pep rally.

The rally starts at 8.30 sharp. "If you want to meet the cheerleaders and the Varsity team, make sure you arrive on time," said Bill Harris, III Forestry, in charge of the rally. Garth McDowell, assistant to the warden at Hart House, will be the MC for the first part of the evening. The street dance, which will include square dancing, begins at 9.15.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

It's getting so that if you are on the roster of an ORFU club and try transferring to an Intercollegiate team, you have to work like mad to make a spot. As a matter of fact, to have played on an ORFU club does not guarantee that you are going to make the Varsity of your choice.

Probably the best example of this angle can be found on the starting lineups for Saturday's game with McMaster Marauders. The Blues at present have six good ends. Not just ends but six good ends. Actually Frank Palermo, who is doing a good job as linebacker, can also be considered an end. Frankie performed as one of the best defensive ends in the Intercollegiate last year, so the Blues really have seven ends in camp.

Two of these ends are Fred Smale and Gene Chorestecki who came up to the Blues this year from Balmy Beach of the ORFU. At the beginning of the season everyone had these two stalwarts tabbed as the all-star end team of the Blues but this conclusion was reached without reckoning with such as Ted Kennedy who is a rookie from Etobicoke, Don Smith, Bruce Johnson and Bill Horton. All of these looked good enough for the starting lineup thus creating the problem of picking four to dress.

Coach Bob Masterson's problem was temporarily solved when Smale and Chorestecki went on the sick list. The other four had to be dressed, if that is so bad. As it turned out it only complicated things all the more because all four, Smith, Horton, Kennedy, and Johnson have been looking better every game.

Now Fred Smale has recovered sufficiently to be considered as game material. Which one of the other four would you bench in favour of Smale? Don Smith and Bill Horton have looked sensational on defense and Bruce Johnson, Ted Kennedy and Bill Horton, again, when he is on offense, look very good when Varsity is running the ball.

The puzzle is solved for the present by returning Bill Horton to the wingback spot, a position that he played well last year. That probably means that rather than bench another end for the game Saturday to run Smale, Masterson will do without the services of Bob Leeming and Murray Radlow.

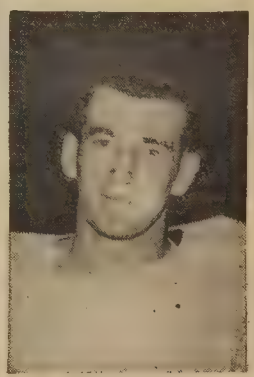
But what happens when Gene Chorestecki gets back in shape is anybody's guess. We think he is going to have one tough time getting back on the squad. As far as ends are concerned, Bob Masterson has never had it so good. So it's beginning to look like it is a promotion to move from the Beaches to the Blues, a state of affairs that everyone but the Beaches will approve.

End Notes: Al Haig and Steve Oneschuk will appear on Fred Sgambati's PIGSKIN PARADE over CKFH tomorrow night at 9:05 p.m. . . . Look for a wide open game with McMaster tomorrow afternoon. Ed Parente and Joe Kosakowski will be tossing them for McMaster while Bob Masterson will likely go along with Olie Mandryk backed up by Big Ed Scrzypek.

Horton Is Sent To Wingback Skrzypek Goes To Quarterback As Blues Set For McMaster

By JIM PROUDFOOT

When Western Mustangs, after a 4½-game drought, finally scored a touchdown on Varsity Blues' defensive team last week — two touchdowns in fact — U. of T. coach Bob Masterson figured something must have gone wrong, with that defensive squad. After all, Varsity has been considered the best defensive club in the intercollegiate league for the past two seasons.



The answer Masterson came up with was that the secondary wall needed bolstering. "Our linebacking was very weak last week," the Varsity mentor commented, observing that most of Westetrn's big gains last week had been made around the outside, plays that eluded the secondaries.

With that conclusion in mind, several changes are being made in the team which will take the field against the last-place McMaster Marauders tomorrow afternoon at Varsity Stadium.

Bill Horton moves to the wingback position where he'll back up Al Haig in place of Bob Leeming and Murray Hadlow. Horton played part of last season as a wingback and linebacker but became a regular end this year. The shift of Horton serves a double purpose, too, as it makes room for Fred Smale to return to action at end. Smale suffered a broken nose in the Balmy Beach exhibition game but is able to play with a protective mask.

John Chisholm is being promoted from the intermediates to play at centre and secondary, along with John Wismer. John Prendergast and Jack Meaker will join the Baby Blues for today's game with Ryerson.

Don Cheeseman's return to fullback will strengthen the secondary,

Bill Horton

too, for he goes both ways. Jack Strapp will start at tackle in place of Carl Kanteroff but otherwise the tackles and guards will be the same as the first three games.

As for the backfield, Ed Skrzypek gets a shot at the quarterback job with either Olie Mandryk or Doug Geekie filling the other QB spot. Bob Dale is a doubtful starter. He was kicked on the ankle in the Western game and is still on the limp. Steve Oneschuk, Bill McFarlaine and Bob Pinkney will be ready to go as the other halves.

Al Smith's Marauders from Hamilton have lost both games so far in their first season of college ball, losing to McGill by one point and then being swamped 40-1 by Western Mustangs. They boast two of the better passing quarterbacks in the league, Joe Kozakowski and Ed Parente, both of whom will be on the field at Varsity tomorrow. They have a pair of veteran backfielders from recent years, Max Woolley and Lorne Wrigglesworth, along with kicker Jim Dodds and captain Ken. Stanley, a tackle.

Last season, McMaster gave Varsity Blues a great battle before dropping a 16-12 decision in an exhibition game at Varsity Stadium.

Blues Notes—Gene Chorostecki, who played with Smale and Mandryk for Balmy Beach last season, would probably have been ready to return to the end position this week, if he hadn't aggravated his ankle injury . . . Pete Maik, who played at fullback last Saturday is a possibility for halfback if Bob Dale's sore ankle sidelines him . . . Coach Masterson expected the Blues' work at middle to improve this Saturday. Last week, Joe Harris, who had been out of action for some time, tired badly in the fourth period and when Roy McMurtry was injured, the Blues were left quite weak at the tackle spot.

Varsity Intermediates will be out to make it two in a row for this season when they invite the trusting Ryerson footballers into their parlour at Varsity Stadium this afternoon at 2.30.

A 19-16 comeback victory last week over the Western Colts was the season's first for the J-V's and with it the intermediates let it be known that any of their opposition with ideas about the Shaw Trophy for his year will have to discuss that point with the Varsity Ilnds.

Not that the J-V's are getting into a rut of winning the championship; hey just feel that the Shaw Trophy has grown to feel at home in Hart House and it would be shame to force the pleasant old mug to pack up and move into some dreary dump, such as house the other teams in the intermediate group.

Now that the attack is starting to roll the J-V's have troubles in the injury department. Three of their top men must miss to-day's encounter and maybe the next one too. Bill Miller, who was in on the fumble recovery that set up the winning touchdown against Western, picked up a bruised ligament, and linemate Bob McDonald suffered an identical injury in the game, while the intermediates ace kicker Ross Woods aggravated an old ankle injury and will be out for three weeks at least.

But all is not blue for the Seconds as manager Bob Brock reports that some help is down from the seniors to fill the gaps. Centres John Meaker and John Prendergast are around to reinforce the line which will also miss John Chisholm, now up with the Blues. Added strength comes to the line with the first appearance this season of Bruce Evans who went at end with last year's Cahmps. Evans reported too late to dress for the last game but he will show in this one and is expected to be a big factor in the Baby Blue attack.

With Ross Woods not playing the kicking assignment could go to either Garry Banks or Dick Risk. Risk showed some of his kicking power by booting a last quarter single against Westerns last week.

Guard Jim Keffer, last year's back turned this year's guard produced a good bit of fine line-play against the Colts and if he keeps it up, as all expect he will, he may put himself in line for promotion.

Western Colts based much of their hopes for beating the J-V's on a 27-2 decisioning of Ryerson. With the offensive power the Seconds unveiled last week against the Colts Varsity they would seem to be shoo-ins this afternoon—which is the perfect situation for an upset. McManus and company will be on their toes to prevent any such disastrous happening.

SPS, Irish Win

By FRED GRAY

With cheerleaders of Vic and St. Mike's to provide the colour interfaculty football at its best opened the season yesterday on the back campus.

In the Vic-S.P.S. contest the Skule team had little difficulty in beating the defending champs 8-1. Vic's famed blocking of previous years became very conspicuous by its absence. Vic was able to prevent the "Combines" from scoring a major only by a timely tackle by Trevor Eaton and Pete Luirs. Skule had to be content with a single by Bruce Day, but early in the second half Crandall charged across for an S.P.S. T.D. after a Hart to Lorris pass was ruled complete on the Vic 5. The "Combines" completed their scoring with two singles by Bruce Day as his attempted convert was blocked by Pete Luirs. Vic scored their only pint on a roube. They had previously missed their best scoring opportunity late in the first half as Johnny Bond was unable to snare a Potter pass when in the clear.

In the other game a badly disorganized Dents team was humbled 10-5 by a spirited St. Mike's squad. The major factor in keeping Dents in the game was the fine kicking by Reed Currie. Time and time again his lofty hoofs nullified St. Mike's hard earned gains. Reed also scored Dents only touchdown in the second half as he picked up a St. Mike's fumble at center field and raced for the goal line. The convert was blocked, as were the two St. Mike's attempts. It was in the second half when St. Mike's counted twice on touchdowns by Dave Winters and Jude Fuscoe, both of whom played stand-out games. Priester turned in fine efforts for the Double Blue while Jack Wall, with his fine running, and a badly rushed quarter by the name of Ken McCauley were the best for Dents.

Lacrosse Race Started Redmen, Pharmacy Win

University College Redmen opened defence of the intramural lacrosse championship—and the Daffoe Cup—yesterday in the Hart House gym by trouncing S.P.S. Firsts 12-3.

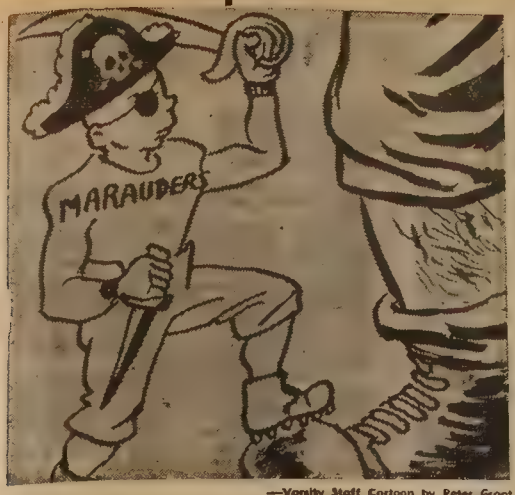
It was the first game in Division One of the boxla league and the U.C. squad didn't have too much trouble in overcoming the team they defeated in the finals last winter. They took a 3-1 lead by half time but turned it on in the latter stages to win going away. Veteran Nobber Watson fired six goals to pace the winners while Rogers, Al Eagleson and Red Stephen netted two each.

For the Skulemen, who have been considerably weakened by the loss of several seasoned players like Johnny Dewar of the St. Catharines Athletics of the OLA, R. Cruise fired a pair of goals with T. Byrnes adding the third.

Pharmacy opened Division II lacrosse play by downing Forestry 9-4 as they took a 6-4 edge at the half and blanked the Woodmen in the second half. Don Watson, Reide Keene and Ron Anco paced the druggists with two goals each while Roy Cunningham snared three for the losers.

In interfaculty soccer, PreMeds white-washed Trinity B 4-0 and Meds edged Junior S.P.S. 2-1, Henry Best and E. Werry scored two goals each in the PreMeds win.

A noon-hour volleyball match saw S.P.S. III win over Junior Vic in two straight games. Both scores were 15-10.



Fencers Back Practices Begin Monday P.M.

All fencing prospects on the campus are urged to make an appearance at the fencing room in Hart House in the near future as coaching and practice is about to get under way. Beginners should report tomorrow or Monday at 5.30 to register for instruction. Physical education credits may be earned at these classes.

Intermediate and senior fencers are also requested to turn out to

Blue Netters Win

The University of Toronto won its first intercollegiate championship yesterday at the Toronto Lawn Tennis club by sweeping the college tennis tournament to win the Canadian Lawn Tennis Association trophy.

Last season, the Blues tied McGill for the title but there was no doubt about it this time as Varsity's five-man team won 20 of 21 matches in the round-robin tournament. The only time this feat has been duplicated was six years ago when McGill won the crown.

Toronto's Harry Hall, High Peacock, Robin Arnold and Ken Lawson, last year's intercollegiate singles champion, were undefeated in singles play and the Gert Lukk-Lawson and Arnold-Hall combinations were unbeaten in doubles competition.

The Blues' only defeat was suffered by Gert Lukk, the intramural singles champion, who was upset by McGill's Raymond Page, a former Canadian champion. Page started with a 6-2 victory but Lukk bounced back 6-4 to deadlock the issue. In the deciding set, Lukk jumped to a 3-0 lead but Page came back to tie it at 5-5 and go on to win 7-5 to win one of the better-played matches of the tourney.

Final team standings showed Toronto leading with 20 points for their 20 wins. The University of Montreal was second with 14, followed by McGill with 7 and Ottawa 1.

POT Over St. Hilda's In Girl S-Ball

Trinity Field has been the scene of the most colourful games in this year's women's interfaculty softball loop. But yesterday was the crowning glory as three games and one good-sized practice were all going on at once.

The game between Vic I and St. Hilda's proved to be the best match of the noon-hour. Jean Walroth, Scotty Mathews, and Heather McPherson each brought home a point for St. Hilda's to make the score 4-3 for Vic I.

St. Hilda's fought hard, and their fielding was good, but they just couldn't get that ball far enough past Marg Ann Gemmell. At the end of three innings, the tally was 13 for the undefeated Vic I's, 3 for St. Hilda's.

The second game of the ball-packed noon-hour was a match between P.H.E. II and St. Mike's. St. Mike's took their three runs of the game in that inning. In the second the teams were tied at 3-all. In the third, Joy Taylor produced the winning run ending the game at 4-3 in favour of the still victorious P.H.E. II's.

P.O.T.'s played St. Hilda's III in the final noon-hour fling. The final score — 15-7 for the P.O.T.'s.

Look At The Record

One hundred years ago, the first Canadian college entirely free from church control came into existence.

This was University College — the Norman style building that peers across the lower campus at Convocation Hall.

This college has an appropriate name indeed, for of all the colleges it alone seems to capture the spirit of non-sectarianism. It is truly a University college.

University College has sent forth leaders into government, science, industry, commerce, medicine, law, and education. University College has had pass through its halls men of Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish religions.

And to top this, fifty per cent of the Rhodes Scholarships awarded since their inception have been won by "UC" students.

Today, no graduate can forget the memories that UC holds for him. The Varsity has attempted to recall some of them here.

While most of the building is more than 100 years old its architecture, its carvings, its famous "dragon", and its respected staff, combine to give UC a distinctive quality that sets it off from the rest of the campus.

The grad who is returning today to celebrate UC's official 100th birthday may well be proud of his alma mater — may well be proud of the record of University College.

We Suggest

In addition to witnessing the annual float parade, this year's pep rally, and the observing of the University College centenary celebrations, Toronto students will this weekend have the opportunity of seeing an installation of a Chancellor of a University. The Varsity suggests that students would be well rewarded if they took time to watch the impressive ceremony in Convocation Hall this afternoon.

University College

Embodiment Of An Idea

An excerpt from Univresity College—A Portrait, a book published to commemorate the UC centenary. The selection below was written by F. C. A. Jeanneret, Principal of the College.

University College is the embodiment of an idea. It is a community of teachers and students dedicated to ideals of higher learning. As we celebrate its one hundredth birthday, it would seem fitting to ask whether it has kept faith with its founders, whether its aspirations are still the same, even if its achievements may sometimes have fallen short. If the examined life is the only life worth living, a little self-examination is purely a seemly anniversary exercise for a community.

OUR NAME WAS A BIRTHRIGHT. But to some the first component was a prior significance, to others the second. Our Magna Charta of 1906 established for all time that the two are of equal importance. And only if we recognize our joint obligation do we deserve the right to continued possession of our century-old title. Could any other be as meaningful or inspiring to an institution seeking breadth of vision and freedom of spirit?

As a college we stand for all that we stand for as a University. Untrammelled by prepossession or tradition, to no code or creed confined, we belong to a community of scholars whose primary aim must always be the courageous and independent pursuit of truth.

FREEDOM FROM DENOMINATIONAL CONTROL marked the birth of University College. But political independence came much more slowly. Before Confederation, government control was exercised in every conceivable fashion, and even long after education became the responsibility of the Province, the Minister continued to make all appointments to the College teaching staff. This vicious practice was abruptly terminated by the University Act of 1906. Since that date all appointments and promotions have been made by the Board of Governors on the recommendations of the President of the University.

At no time during this period has there been a single instance of political interference or influence in the administration of the College, either in the matter of appointment or in the matter of educational policy. The teacher has enjoyed complete freedom of expression in the classroom and in scholarly publication. His political and religious views are his own affair; and these same rights are, of course, fully enjoyed by the student. A real spirit of democratic freedom pervades every phase of College activity.

WHEN LIBERALISM IS THE CONCOMITANT OF LEARNING, the very breath of life is infused, keeps and opens doors for new truth and new intellectual adventure. We are the trustees of a great inheritance in literature and philosophy, the champions of the classic spirit, but we have learned from our study of history that tradition is not immutable, that truth and beauty have new facets, and that all that is good has not yet been discovered.

A liberal education, makes us love knowledge, and cherish what is enduring; it makes us forward-looking too, eager to exercise what wisdom we may have learned in grappling with problems that present themselves and zealous to achieve reforms that will make for the peace and greater happiness of mankind.

THE CATHOLICITY OF OUTLOOK and of aim inherent in a true university must characterize its college. This has been encouraged from the outset by the frequent appointment of teachers trained in Britain, Europe, and the United States, and more recently by bringing outstanding scholars from abroad as visiting professors in all departments of the College. While the aim is to develop a truly Canadian institution, the student must learn early that there are no national boundaries to scholarships and that freedom of intellectual interchange is essential to the development of healthy Canadian consciousness. Moreover, breadth of view is easily promoted among young men and women who choose to come to a college where they can continue their higher studies under the same non denominational auspices they have enjoyed in the public and secondary schools of the Province or elsewhere. The first secular institution of higher learning in community by introducing no distinction in race, creed or color in teaching staff or student body.

Our College stands on the threshold of its second century with cheerful confidence, still cherishing the ideals of its forebears, still hopefully and prayerfully seeking truth, wherever it may be found and wherever it may lead; hence in good spirits and dauntlessly intent upon finding a better way of life for a world that seems at the moment to be bent on self-destruction.

Law Monoply

Editor,
The Varsity:

Your paper yesterday carried a letter by D. G. Haig, 4th Osgoode, which tried to enlighten you on the current disputes between the Benchers of the Law Society and the Toronto School of law. It is unfortunate but obvious that Mr. Haig has succumbed to the organized Bencher propaganda.

When he says that the issue is simply a matter of office training he is wrong. Never have the representatives of the U. of T. Law School suggested that graduates be admitted to the bar without any office training, nor do they do so now. The crux of the dispute is the ruling of the Law Society which requires graduates from the Law School to repeat courses already covered in the L.L.B. course. This duplication of courses extends the training period for graduates of the Law School one full year beyond that required of the students attending Osgoode.

The period of office training for the Osgoode Student is approximately 18 months, being made up of one full year apprenticeship and a second year made up half of apprentiship and half academic study at Osgoode. The University is desirous that its graduates spend an equivalent amount of time in apprentiecship, but are anxious to spare them the nonsense of repeating courses.

Sir, he refers you to minutes of joint meetings held between representatives of the U. of T. Law School and Osgood Law School and some correspondence and suggests that you may there find the reasons given by the benchers for not granting equality between the two schools. I defy him to produce such documents. To the best of my knowledge no minutes were kept of the informal meetings between these groups and the existing correspondence in unenlightening on the question.

No reasons have been put forth for the repetition of subjects except that it is a final test of qualification for the practice of law. Are not a B.A. and LL.B. and 1 month's apprenticeship enough?

And as a parting shot, Mr. Haig, I suggest that Dr. Wright has shown remarkable restraint in not voicing his opinions. No Mr. Haig, Dr. Wright does not raise a hue and cry. The cries you hear come from us, the students at the Toronto School of Law who are as aware as you are of the injustice of the situation. One would expect Justice to pour forth from the "Seat of Justice in Ontario"!

Protest

Editor,
The Varsity:

As a graduate of this university I feel compelled to protest the level to which The Varsity has been allowed to sink. One does not expect all of a university paper to exhibit all the signs of maturity all of the time—but one does expect that the editorial pages should be reserved for sensible and logical discussions. The article entitled "The Myth of Socialism" displays neither of these much desired qualities.

Perhaps the writer is not aware that the C.C.F. is a POLITICAL party and not an economic organization. A glance at any dictionary will provide Mr. Lowry with the difference.

It will not waste time by pointing out the utter ridiculousness of his suggestions for fund-raising. I would however, refer him to any of the numerous Health Commission Reports or these are too learned, to the Frost Government's party platform for 1951. Examination of either will bring an appreciation of the difficulties involved in just hiring doctors, renting and building hospitals.

They are, my dear sir, not mere trifles but obstacles which can only be overcome by the resources of government. As for the remainder, there are sufficient successful government health schemes (e.g. Britain's) to provide reliable information for any interested party.

I would continue, but enough space has already been wasted on Mr. Lowry's petulant article.

K. Kendall,
O.C.E.

Bookstore

The Varsity.

If certain proposals were instituted in the University Bookstore, they could remedy many difficulties:

1. The low price of books in the Bookstore leaves the student with a surplus of money. This he spends foolishly on unnecessary things such as food, clothing, etc. Therefore the obvious solution is to raise the price of these books. Since fewer people have enrolled this year to compensate for this loss of revenue there is added reason for raising the price of the books.

2. To improve the appearance of the empty store windows advertising space can be sold to anyone.

3. People rarely appreciate something unless they pay more and get less, therefore, the price of soft drinks should be raised and the quantity should be decreased to satisfy them.

4. To remove the fire hazard in the bookstore a cover charge should be instituted. This will prevent people from looking and not buying.

Since fewer students will enroll next year because of these proposals, there is added justification for their adoption — to make the financial ends of the Book-store meet. Imagine the final result — a university with a successfully functioning bookstore and no students!

To Publicize National Body

For the first time in the 17-year history of the National Federation of Canadian University Students a full-time salaried president has been elected.

Tony Enriquez, 22, a Mexican studying commerce and business administration at the University of Ottawa was chosen last week to head the 38,000-member Federation. He was greeted with a standing ovation when he accepted the post.

The new position requires that Enriquez, last year's Ontario vice president, give up his studies for one year in order that he may travel across Canada and back, visiting the various universities and publicizing NFCUS locally.

Toronto did not accept any executive position this year. Others on the new executive are:

Quebec vice-president — Jacques Gaboury, University of Montreal; Ontario vice-president — Howard Ellsworth, McMaster; Maritimes vice-president — Bill Troupe, Acadia; International Activities Commissioner — Marcel Leblond, Saskatchewan; Debating Commissioner — Duncan Fraser, Dalhousie.

The Western vice-president will be decided upon at a later date.

Make No IUS Ties Student Federation Says

Canadian students will continue to maintain their hands off attitude towards the International Union of Students (IUS) for another year at least. Not essentially changing their seven-year-old policy with the communist-dominated union, a full assembly of the National Federation of university students last week favored a slightly amended version of a motion Laval had put forward earlier in Commission.

Amended by McGill, the motion was passed 16-3 with little of the heated debate which surrounded the Russian student exchange issue last year. Laval, UBC and Acadia opposed it and St. Dunstan's abstained.

The accepted resolution, which only altered the wording of Laval's original, declared that "no commitments be made to associate membership (with IUS) at this time" but empowered the NFCUS executive "to investigate the possibilities of a qualified relationship" and report these findings to the different student councils.

A Toronto proposal, which delegate Scott Symons felt would "add more teeth to the motion and make positive and clear the NFCUS policy towards IUS," was defeated.

It stated that "the NFCUS executive (should) be empowered and instructed to study the conditions under which such (associate) membership with IUS would be set up and report their findings to the various Student Councils before the 1954 conference.

Only Mount Allison, McGill and Bishop's voted with Toronto on this amendment.

In the plenary (assembly) session Laval substituted what they called a revised motion for the one passed, 15-1, in Commission. The preamble was modified, Laval said, in order to reach "a more neutral position." But Toronto still claimed the "tone" had not been altered.

Montreal spoke out strongly in favor of Laval and felt that nothing more than mild investigation could be accepted. The U. of M. delegate said he had seven years experience in negotiating with communists and believed that nothing could really be achieved toward closer co-operation.

McGill, however, urged that serious consideration be given any attempt at bridging the gap between the students of east and west. "NFCUS must make a stand, and the challenge of the IUS question is much greater than the Russian exchange," delegate Jim Robb said.

Adding to this, Symons declared that because the motion was such a serious one, the tone of its wording was very important. He asked for "a more diplomatic and less negative statement of NFCUS in-

Conference Sidelights

The Finance Commission stayed up until 6.30 a.m. Thursday to complete the budget. As a result the whole time-table of the NFCUS conference ran hours behind schedule. The final plenary session ran to midnight Thursday and to 6.00 p.m. Friday when the meet was ended.

The federation received two invitations — from Alberta and Toronto — to have the next conferences at those universities. Alberta, however, must examine the financial implications in such an invitation so the final choice for the 1954 meeting will be left up to the Executive to be decided at a later date. Toronto's invitation has already been approved by the SAC.

The University of Montreal re-entered the federation on Friday. They were accepted with a lengthy ovation by the 20 member universities present. Montreal quit last year when their demand for a one dollar NFCUS fee was rejected.

BC Queries Any Worth In Fee Hike

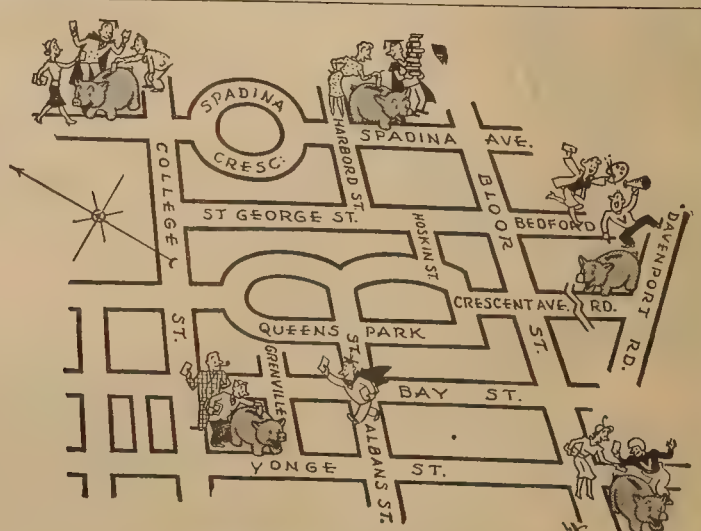
Toronto students will have to pay thirty more cents to remain active members of their national organization.

By a vote of 9-3 with five abstentions the federation of university students last Friday decided to up the per capita fees to 50 cents — but only for certain universities. A motion by Manitoba set up two categories of universities: those that could only pay 20 cents and those that could pay 50 cents.

A consensus of opinion taken in the Finance Commission showed that eleven universities would be willing to pay up to 50 cents while nine definitely refused the increase.

Some of the nine universities argued that they would be unable to pay the increase this year. A motion by Toronto provided that "those, who in the coming year show their interest and faith in NFCUS, and are willing to pay the increased fee for that year" would be given full voting rights. All others, except those permanently in the 20-cent category, would lose these rights.

McGill and UBS opposed any increase. Both argued that NFCUS could never accomplish any more even with the enlarged revenue than it had already. Because of its organization, the Federation "will always have a watered-down policy," McGill claimed.



The delegation form UBC indicated that their university might not be taking an active part at next year's NFCUS conferen They said they would return and recommend that no hike in fees be approved.

"Fees have increased from six to twelve to twenty cents," UBC said. "But there has been no similar increase in the NFCUS program."

The Federation's budget for the coming year was set up on the basis of the Commission poll and was approved and accepted by a 14-2 vote.

The Governor General, Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, lays the cornerstone of the new U.C. men's residence at the ceremony commemorating the U.C. Centenary Friday afternoon. The newly installed Chancellor, Dr. Samuel Beatty looks on. The $2,300,000 structure will be built west of the college, facing St. George.

Develop Stronger Grad School Chancellor Beatty Emphasizes

At his installation as Chancellor of the University on Friday in Convocation Hall, Dr. Samuel Beatty stressed the need for the University of Toronto to develop its own graduate school and, "keepin this country the brightest minds who too often are lured to the South." Dr. Beatty spoke to a Convocation audience after he had been installed by President Smith as Chancellor of the University.

Speaking later to the same convoational audience on Friday afternoon, Dr. B. K. Sandwell stressed the need for Universities to perform the function of unification rather than that of reducing development to a single mental plane. "It is a matter of believing in liberty rather than authority, and getting to understand each other," he said.

"This function is going on all over," he said, "but most of all, in the Universities, and University College in particular for having started it in 1853."

Dr. Sandwell was addressing the Convocation after Honorary degrees had been conferred on eight graduates of University College. In addition to Dr. Sandwell, degrees were conferred on Sir Earnest MacMillan, The Most Reverend Walter Barfoot, The Right Reverend William Ann Cameron, Charlies Gordon Heyd, Her Honour Judge Alice Kinnear, Louis Rasminsky, and the Right Reverend Alexander Armstrong Scott.

Principal F. C. A. Jeanneret of University College introduced each of the Candidates for honorary degrees. The degrees were conferred by Chancellor Beatty.

Governor General Hits Materialism

Governor General Vincent Massey complained last Friday that "we have too long been speaking of the Humanities as some used to speak of poverty, about which, it is agreed, something should be done." The former Chancellor of the University urged a return to the balance between the liberal arts subjects and the sciences in his address at the University College Centennial Dinner in Hart House.

The UC grad ('10) said that too much emphasis is placed on materialism in the modern world. He felt that the neglect of the himanities was part of this present climate of opinion, and that it is the University's duty to remedy this by using its traditional freedom, and by resuming its universal function.

The function of a university he described as the teaching of the "why" — leaving life to teach the "how." Modern universities have become much concerned with the "how." However he felt that University College and her three sister colleges "remind us of this universal function because they loyally perform it."

Mr. Massey honoured UC because its purpose had remained precisely the same as the one its founders had in mind in 1853. "It was founded, exists and must always exist tor the one fundamental purpose — the development of the educated man or woman."

Everytning else in life hangs on a knowledge of the nature and meaning of life. This is truly useful knowledge the Governor General said, "we are prepared to dis-statistical determination and scientific experiments. An analysis card the vision of the poet, the insight of the philosopher, the im agination of the historian and the reasoned faith of the theologian in favour of psychological analysis, the symptoms of life does not necessarily give a meaning to life itself."

Mr. E. A. Macdonald, Secretary Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council said that the dinner at which Mr. Massey spoke was the greatest that had been held in Hart House in many years. 500 UC grads and distinguished men from 26 institutions of higher learning were present.

Seal Papers In Stone In New UC Residence

"I declare this stone well and truly laid." So said Canada's first Canadian Governor-General, His Excellency The Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, C.H., Friday afternoon at the laying of the foundation stone of the new University College men's residence. This commemorated the College's one hundredth anniversary. Before giving a short address the Governor General had spread the mortar and trued the stone with mason's tools.

"I have come here for a duty and not to make a speech," the Governor General said. He added that he received a grat deal of pleasure from this uty. "It is the fulfillment of many hopes and showed the beliefs and affection for the College by its graduates. I hope that University College's services will be greater in its second century than in its first," he concluded.

The Principal of U.C., Dr. F. C. A. Jeanneret presented His Excellency with a silver trowel to spread the mortar. In his remarks Dr. Jeanneret thanked all the donors for their money so as to make this a "truly red and white" letter day in the life of U.C.

Dr. Sidney Smith opened the ceremonies with a short speech after the march of the procession from U.C. to the platform. He told the audi ace of faculty and students that a men's residence for U.C. had been a dream since 1899. "Today our dram is realized," he aded. This residence will not be a boarding house but an educational institution as well.

The stone itself weighs better than twleve hundred pounds according to Mr. Mathers, the architect. In the center of the stone there is a hermetically sealed box that contains a number of important documents such as last Friday's anniversary edition of The Varsity, the pages from the Toronto daily papers that gave space to U.C.'s Centennial, the Centenary program, an Arts Calendar, and a short history of U.C. by Dr. Jeanneret.

HHwarden Re-elected Chief

Joseph McCulley, Warden of Hart House, was re-elected president of the Canadian Penal Association Saturday. Last year, Mr. McCulley, a former deputy minister of penitentiaries, assumed the presidency half way through the term when Professor S. K. Jaffray retired because of illness.

Pep At Last

Skulemen In Panting Pursuit

By MANI THALER

"Tell him to be a fool every so often and to have no shame over having been a fool."

The night was clear and cool; coeds in residences across the campus were preparing for bed. The Blue and White Pep Rally at Convocation Hall was progressing in foxtrot rhythm to a peaceful conclusion, "like a nightclub in New York" as Garth McDowell, M.C. for the show, put it with unwitting aptness. A few tame cheers, and a hopeful little blast from the Skule cannon punctured every so often the syncopation of the band. Two pyres, fed by shreds of old engineering yearbooks, sputtered and smoked like boy scout's fires in distress. Spot-lit U.C., one hundred years old, looked out upon the scene swathed in reminiscence. The campus spirit of the past seemed dead.

Then someone shouted the magic word "Skule!". In less time than it takes to swallow a bottle of beer, a happy throng of 200 "engineers" was setting out for adventure, loud with the courage that comes from numbers.

WHITNEY HALL

The lights go out in the windows of Whitney Hall. Girls, heads pop out of the upper floor, and doors are hurriedly slammed in the faces of onrushing engineers. A window is slid open into the cafeteria, and forks, plates, glasses, and a toaster come flying out into the cheering crowd. But that is not what they are after. In answer to a coed, a shout arises: "We want pants!".

Down Hoskin Avenue, ten rows deep go the engineers into the headlights of the Friday night traffic. "We are, we are, we are the engineers! . . . An infuriated cacophony of horns can't overcome them. At Queen's Park crescent cars take the wrong turn seeing no way out.

ANNESLEY HALL

The vine-covered. Vic. Girls! Down goes an iron fence post under the weight of twenty engineers. They climb the fire escape, they try the windows, the doors. Nothing doing. Finally a cellar window goes up. Exultant figures reappear, waving above their heads the badges of success—the first panties, nighties, brassieres.

At Annesley Hall the Charles St. entrances still stands open. The engineers swarm in, up one flight, like symbols of freedom from the up another. The girls stand aside watching the invaders rifle their rooms for underwear. The hose is everywhere. The guest book is inscribed "SKULE 1953" and lipstick applied to a water pitcher. In a watery farewell, the stolid vines are sprayed from a fire extinguisher as a bewildered Dean locks the door.

ST. HILDA'S

On top of the Queen's Park Crescent stands a "One Way" sign. Somebody climbs it, and three forlorn brasseries flap in the evening breeze. The engineers leave, for all ways lead to St. Hilda's. Waving women's lingerie rule of rules, the mob pushed a small car onto the sidewalk, ("for we don't give a damn . . ."),

The boys had trouble. In every window appeared the shotgun countenance of the caretaker. One climbed the wall to the third floor up the jutting brick, but came down asking for another beer. Finally two engineers sneaked in through the cellar, and opened the door.

On the steps stood three grim, grey haired ladies in an over-my-dead body posture. The mob faltered, halted, and turned. The caretaker appeared from behind the door which clung precariously by one hinge, and warned: "Every one of you guys will be reported!" The rest was drowned in the derisive laughter of 200 people.

In the course of the nigth, the engineers entered Whitney Hall again (this time blessed with pantied success) and a sorority on St. George.

A police cruiser, coming up St. George St. to discover the cause of a series of traffic jams, collided with the hose strung across the street to protect the poker table set up in the middle of the road and covered with a St. Hilda's table cloth. Someone yelled "Cops" and the mob began to scatter, leaving a trail of ripped underclothes behind. In a minute all was silent, except for the footsteps of policemen patrolling the street.

Across campus an empty coke bottle exploded in the last embers left by the fires of the Pep Rally. A drunk leaned against the wall of Convocation Hall, and repeated over and over: "Yea Skule!"

Psychology Discussion By Bovard

The Psychology Club will hold its opening meeting tonight at 8:00 p.m. The program will feature a panel discussion on Psychology led by Dr. E. W. Bovard.

Discussion of the proposed year's program will be held. The executive is arranging discussions on "Kinsey", "Self Definition in the Primitive Society", "Clinical Psychology", and "Psychological Warfare." A weekend at Caledon is slated for December.

Float Parade

Dentistry Does It Again

They did it again! In the six-year history of the Homecoming Float Parade, dentistry is the only faculty to win the Alumni Shield twice. Better than that, they won the Shield twice in a row.

Led by Shirley Eckel, the Blue and White Band and COTC-protected cheerleaders from Varsity and McMaster, 24 colourful floats went Saturday morning from Devonshire Place along Bloor, down Yonge, along College, and ended by moving in front of the judges' stand on the steps of U.C. While the parade was travelling along College, the Skule Cannon was successfully defended from an attack by 100 lab-coated Medsmen who rushed from the Banting Institute.

The winning Dentistry entry followed the pioneer theme by portraying the dental operations of Painless "I can pull anything" Barker, the barber surgeon. Barker not only pulled teeth but also sold a 15-cent cure-all, cut hair and supplied funeral necessities with the motto "No more pain, rest in pieces."

Judges Dr. Sidney Smith, Principal Jeanneret of U.C. and John Stalker, President of the SAC picked the Art and Archaeology entry as second. This "Pioneer Spirit of Toulouse-Lautrec" float peatured can-canners, onlookers and a singer of The Moulin Rouge as well as Toulouse-Lautrec himself. Commerce and Finance placed third with a horse-drawn junkwagon labelled "Before Commerce", an old car carrying "Joe College" and a chauffeur-driven convertible carrying a top-hatted grad and Miss Red Feather of 1953.

The well-guarded Skule Cannon (chained and locked to six helmeted Engineers) led a series of Engineering course floats, everything from a portable still (300 proof) to 3-D T.V. Emmanuel. College had a convincing old pioneer church, complete with pump organ and preacher on horseback. Meds had an excellent float in which Harvey (the rabbit) pointed out circulation through giant lungs, heart and a cell labelled "The end".

The School of Law, continuing their fight for "Progressive legal education" pictured Osgoode as a Medieval castle "Bound in tradition" and themselves as a rocket ship ready for the future. OCE contributed a pioneer schoolhouse, the School of Architecture contributed "5001—Canada's First Subway" and Forestry contributed a woods which had progressed from the crosscut to the gas powered saw.

The lead float, and the one which accompanied the Dentistry float at half-time in Varsity Stadium, was the Blue and White Society's Community Chest float. It carried brightly costumed pirates (male and female) romping around a treasure chest on a South Sea isle.

Today

1:00 p.m.—Varsity Christian Fellowship: Bible study—Room 111, University College.

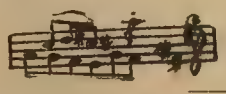
MASQUE REVIEW



Well Rooted

Who could suspect a masque in eulogy of a college of being anything but a long-winded senatorial hothouse of words, uplifting, pompous, abstract, and in nowise near the truth of the matter? But to my surprise the masque performed to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of University College called A Century Has Roots was a fine dramatic production which did not preach, prate, or preamble. Written by Robert Finch, it took the form of a number of dramatic scenes tied to each other by a chorus of two recitants who linked the scenes and filled in the historical background. They spoke their lines in poetry, poetry which was dramatic and grave, poetry which made the passing of a century and the history of a college a dramatic event. John Baxter and Christine Bissell, dressed in evening clothes and looking the very incarnation of high seriousness were perfect as the two recitants. They spoke their lines deliberately, clearly, emphasizing the rhythm of the poetry but not, as might have happened in lesser hands, losing the dramatic intent of the words.

Rather than deliver the individual aye and nay to the rest of the cast of about twenty I commend them all for the clarity of their speech and the way in which they ensured the smooth flow of the masque from beginning to end. They each knew their task and executed it well. Main praise must go to Robert Finch who wrote and directed this masque. He has seriously tried to answer the historical and philosophical why of University College. Using for the most part the conversational debate he establishes with remarkable speed his characters and their environment and within this framework of the casual debate he threads philosophy, history, and humour

Using a simple linear representation of the front door of University College as a set, background chorus singing, imaginative lighting, and flowing continuous blocking, Robert Finch has created a complete and rounded work of art without pause or shock between its many scenes. He and his cast and many helpers are to be congratulated for this fine commemoration of their college.

Glee Club Record

On two sides of a ten inch long play, the Hart House Glee Club has recorded ten songs connected with or typical of different faculties of the U. of T. Considered either as Glee Club singing or as singing in The Varsity spirit, generally it succeeds.

The first number of The Varsity Album, Alma Mater, which is the club's "pet baby", having been written for them and introduced by them, is not as effective as it might be because of the over-balance of the inner parts. Both in this piece, and in the following one, the traditional Bule and White tune is obscured by the rich harmonies which are imposed upon it. Somehow the Blue and White, being familiar in another arrangement does not sound so at home in harmonic progression.

For some reason the pieces with faster pace seem to come alive as the others do not. The notorious Godiva, O-di-do or Meds Men, and Vic's Old Ontario really do evoke pictures of life on the campus. It's enough to give any grad a serious case of nostalgitis. Old Ontario, arranged for solo and chorus has very nice use of contrast and excellent belnding of voices. Perhaps one factor in the success of these quicker songs is the easily constant pitch. The singers are enjoying themselves. In the more sentimental ones such as The Wiffenpoof Song and We'll Remember Old U.C., and even Follow the Blues, the pitch becomes as uncomfortable as a horse hair blanket. The Wiffenpoof Song particularly tries a bit too hard to be effective. Maybe the treatment of Mel Agona Stephanos which is different form the traditional way of singing it at Trinity was intentional. Even so, I think the Glee Club would have done well in this case to submit to tradition. The usual double time of the second verse makes the song sound a little less like a hymn tune.

However, these criticisms are all quite slight. The general standard of singing on this record is very fine. Something worthy of adoption (or purchase) by students past and present.

ternational policy." Symons voted for the McGill change even though he thought "it did not go far enough."

An attempt by an observer of the Student Christian Movement to speak out aginst the spirit of the Laval motion was quashed. Led by Saskatchewan and UBC the conference rejected a suggestion by chairman Bob Sutherland to have "the other side" heard. Before a vote could be taken the SCMer withdrew her appeal for permission to speak.

The Russian student issue which had highlighted the NFCUS conferences for the past two years slipped by last week almost unnoticed. Although Queen's, Toronto and McGill urged that more serious thought be given to it, the Federation's assembly turned thumbs down on the Russian invitation for the third straight time.

ART, MUSIC OR DRAMA?

At The Casino

The Casino Theatre, Toronto's last outpost of vaudeville (excluding CBLT), either found itself without a so-called "star" this week or wanted to try an experiment. Whatever the circumstances, the management has booked in seven acts instead of the usual top attraction plus three or four others. The result is something approaching a return to the vaudeville of yesteryear.

The old Queen St. establishment made a similar move last year in playing eight acts and that particular show was distinguished by the absence of clinkers—the program was uniformly good. The current bill of fare can make no such claim. As a matter of fact, only one act is worthy of more than passing interest.

Fortunately, however, the act in question, the Clark Brothers, is in the closing spot so that the overall effectiveness of the whole show is increased considerably. These agile and smooth-stepping fellows are no strangers to Toronto audiences, having stopped many a show at the Casino, but their recent European tour, which included a stay at London's Palladium, seems to have transformed them from a better-than-average supporting act to a front-line attraction.

The boys begin with a sequence of tap-dancing in faultless unison. From this they move on to a series of challenges, in which, working alone and in turn, they try to outdo each other in complicated and acrobatic steps. In this instance, it is especially amazing to see a man do several flips while his feet maintain the rhythm perfectly. But they share the honours equally in this solo bit because, if there was ever a dancing team that was really a team, this is it. They finish with a soft-shoe routine that is as delicate as their previous work was pyrotechnical.

Bruce Stevens, who serves as an ingratiating master of ceremonies, acquits himself nobly when he gets the stage to himself. He turns out to be an extremely versatile musicain who imitats various well-known styles on the trumpet, trombone and saxophone. Best part of his act, though, is when he steps to the piano, announces he's going to play Warsaw Concerto and then gives the well-known concert selection a tasteful and swinging jazz treatment.

But aside from those two acts, this isn't one of the Casino's good weeks. There's a chap introduced as Billy Kelly, the "song and dance" man, who offers instead a patter of jokes about Irishmen and a rather rudimentary "buck and wing" before finally singing a selection about show business which coesn't seem to get across the footlights very well. Jo Ann Tolley, formerly the vocalist for Les Brown's orchestra, seems to be hampered by a poor choice of numbers. Her act lasts only about five minutes and it takes at least that long to get the full effect of the gown she almost has on.

Nita and Pepi are a reasonably adept couple of acrobats but this type of act has become so customary that it takes something really out of the ordinary to excite any interest. The same could be said for Stanley Burns, a skilful enough ventriloquist, who is no better and no worse than a dozen other voice-throwers. Then the Four Royal Rockets (there are only three of them, by the way) contribute a bit of roller-skating on a raised platform, which consists mostly of hurling the female Rocket here and there. It looks difficult but by the time they're done, the centrifugal force has you reeling.

Vaudeville fans found lots of encouragement outside the theatre where posters reveal that Vic Damone opens this week, Les Baxter's orchestra and chorus the following week and in the dim future, Pee-Wee Hunt, one of the more popular exponents of Dixieland jazz

Shivarim

Ritual Dancer

To be inside the concert hall of the Royal Conservatory on Wednesday afternoon was to be in a temple in India during one of the long and strenuous epic dramatizations so characteristic of India's culture. One is at once impressed by the absence of all those things so well known to us in our western civilization. And it is here that I found Shivaram, a young man of slight build dressed in a white and gold garb. Around each ankle hung an ornament much like our bells and around his wrist gold bands. He wore a ring on each index finger.

During the twelve years of his formal training, he learned seven hundred movements and one hundred and ten all-night dramas (beginning at seven p.m. with drim music and lasting until daybreak). Most symbolical of the movements would appear to be those which are controlled rhythmically by the music and as such are art forms in themselves complying with the story they tell. Inasmuch as the story has remained unchanged for over three thousand years, th dance describing it is a set form—ritual if you like.

Ambidextrous would be a mild term to use to describe the Indian dancer who could perform several motions simultaneously. Indeed, no part of the body was excluded in expressing these ancient religious stories; the eyes, eyelids and lashes being of prime importance along with the hands and head, the body serving to accentuate the other actions. It was interesting to note that, although the subjects he described were basically elemental, they were expressed on a highly intellectual plane. Shivaram was a fluid expression of muscular coordination and control and at all times displayed a sensitive and artistic personality.

either. Bands and cheerleaders were on hand to meet the visitors and the university put out a welcome mat that was worn out by fun-loving people — most uncasual, mind you, but most memorable.

A university full of deadheads is like a beer without a head. If we can't enjoy devilment now we never will. And if casual is the way you want to be, the weekend, particularly homecoming weekend is not the tiem. "Let's make them want to come back." Comprenez?

CRITIC IN THE DARK

The Final Test

Anyone approaching a quite amusing film called The Final Test (Odeon-Hyland) in anticipation of another blithly superficial English comedy in the Laughter in Paradise vein will be greatly surprised. This reviewer, whose knowledge of even the relatively straightforward game of baseball is so cague as to be embarrassing, had, by the time the film was well underway,

a) abandoned all hope of ever understanding many of the plot points, which presuppose a profound comprehension of cricket in the viewer,

b) became roundly disgusted at the slipshod screen-play of Terence Rattigan, who ought to know better,

c) arrived at an intense admiration of the acting of both Robert Morley and Jack Warner, neither of whom has ever been displayed to better advantage on the screen.

As for Mr. Battigan's screenplay, it concerns the last Test Match of an aging cricketer, played by Jack Warner, whose son, a budding poet, would rather take advantage of a chance to meet his hero, poet Alexander Whitehead, than watch his father's last turn to bat. That the poet, played by Robert Morley, will turn out to be a frustrated cricket fan who couldn't get a ticket to the match ("Christopher Fry got one" he complains, "why couldn't I?"), and that the aging cricketer will be saluted by a roar of applause at the match, is to be expected.

This playwright, however, is far too talented not to make the most of his opportunities: the plot, even at its most obvious, never fails to take the honest road. The old cricketer is out on the fourth bowl, the poet is not the inspired genius one might think, but simply a fat, rather witty man with an outlandish manner and no illusions at all.

Despite this, the screenplay is consistently and annoyingly untidy; relevant plot points are legion. From a writer of Mr. Rattigan's reputation, this is careless in the extreme. Partially overcoming this is the undoubted report which exists between the author and director Anthony Asquith, who have worked together so often before, and developed such a characteristic film style, that one can quite imagine the property-man at Pinewood studios saying "Haul out the flowered chintz sofa, Bob, they're at it again!"

Taken as a comedy-drama, finely acted by the two leading players, but not as finely written, The Final Test is quite enjoyable. However, its bellylaugh rating is practically nil, which I, for one, am heartily glad of.

BLUES BLANK MACMEN

Flying High

Varsity's Bob Pinkney was well-nigh unstoppable in Saturday's game against McMaster Marauders which the Blues won 24-0. One Mac tackler is trying to stop Bob here and doesn't seem to be having much success. Seeing this, another Marauder, Wimp Crawford (78), is rushing up in the background to give a hand.

Oneschuk Scores 11 Points As Mac Has Only Passes

All last season, Toronto football fans were clamouring for a passing attack in intercollegiate ball. At Varsity Stadium on Saturday, 13,400 of them saw a team — the McMaster Marauders — with about as good a passing attack as the college league has to offer. The result was a wide-open game which had very little punch. And all the throwing didn't do the Marauders much good as a rather lack-lustre Varsity Blues team capitalized on the Hamiltonians' mistakes to swamp them 24-0.

The loss was the Macmen's third in succession and plunged them deeper into the league basement while the victory for Toronto moved them into second place behind the undefeated Western Mustangs.

The Blues didn't look especially impressive in defeating the lowly Macmen. All three of their touchdowns resulted from McMaster mistakes. One came after a bad snap gave them the ball deep in Marauder territory and the other two were on brief marches after McMaster fumbles.

Steve Oneschuk came up with one of the best games since joining the Blues three years ago. He accounted for 11 of Varsity's points, was a piledriving runner all day and his tackling on defence was nothing short of spectacular. He gave the Blues a 7-0 lead before the crowd had time to get settled. His opening kickoff sailed over Max Wooley's head into the end zone and went for a single. McMaster made nothing from their 25 in two plays and Lorne Wrigglesworth couldn't get the kick away because of a bad snap and Blues took over on the 16. After Eddie Skrzypek hit Don Smith with a pass at the 2, Oneschuk bulldozed across and converted the touchdown to take care of the first-half. He added another convert and kicked an 18-yard goal in the third quarter.

Running neck and neck with Oneschuk for top honours in the game was Bill McFarlane, who is playing his last season with the Blues. Besides counting a major in the third quarter on an eight-yard sweep after Mac fumbled deep in their own zone, he played a sound defensive game. Immediately after this touchdown, McMaster dropped the kickoff, and Fred Smale recoverel at the 15. Doug Geekie, who worked with Skrzypek as Varsity's quarterbacking staff, passed to Oneschuk at the 1. The third quarter ended then and after they changed ends, Bob Pinkney maintained his touchdown-a-game average by romping over on the second try.

Al Haig booted a single from the 42 early in the second half when Jack Rome conceded the point and the other two points came on a puzzling play when Mac quarter back Joe Kosakowski, scrimmaging inside his own 10, wheeled and threw the ball over his own deadline for a safety touch. They got the ball at the 25 then but didn't get far.

Kossakowski's passing was about all McMaster had to offer. He passed on just about every play, 32 times in all, and completed 17. Their running attack fizzled, as they netted 29 yards along the ground, against Varsity's 227. They put together several fine drives up the field but faltered every time they sighted touchdown territory.

Lorne Wrigglesworth, who just before gametime learned that he had become a father, worked well at the halfback and quarterback spots, spelling Kosakowski a few times and doing a lot of receiving. Burt Kellock, Ernie Darragh and Ken Stanley were frequent targets for Koz's deadly hs .sap tossre for Koz's deadly short passes. Guard Tony Yakutchik and halfback Wimp Crawford, along with Stanley, were the pick of McMaster defensive team that didn't stand up too well against Toronto's attack.

Besides Oneschuk and McFarlance, Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz ran well for the Blues. The ends, Fred Smale, Bruce Johnson, Don Smith and Ted Kennedy kept up their glittering record as all were standouts. Smale recovered two fumbles and the four of them kept the Mac backfield off balance.

There were a couple of long runs in the game, neither of them leading to any scoring. In the second quarter, the Blues had worked their way into the Mac end when Murray Howlett intercepted one of Skrzypek's passes, lateralled to Jim Forrester who galloped 68 yards to the Blues 14 before Steve Oneschuk overhauled him. Near the end of the game, Skrzypek picked up a Mac bobble and ran 55 yards before fumbling into touch at the enemy one-yard line.

Blue Notes — Bob Dale's injured ankle kept him out of the game and Al Riva was the fourth halfback. He didn't see much action . . . Varsity quarterbacks Geekie and Skrzypek essayed 16 passes, completing 9 . . . The School of Law burned Osgoode Hall in the end zone at half time, one the most colorful halftimes ever. The Blue and White band had a new show, and McMaster's band made their contribution . . . They were falling off the south goal-posts like flies . . .

Majors Plentiful As JV's Score

Ryerson Rams came to Varsity Stadium last Friday as sheep to the slaughter and U. of T. Intermediates butchered them 57-0.

The game was scheduled as an exhibition and it was just that, as the Baby Blues put on a show of powerful and spectacular football to thrill the large crowd of about 3,000 and send the Rams bleating back to Ryerson.

Working with a steady brilliance that completely dazzled the visitors, the J-V's moved to ten major scores, one every six minutes, and converted 7. At no time were the Varsitys in trouble. Their attack carried them smoothly into pay dirt when they had the ball and any Ryerson attempts at evening things were easily spiked by a line that couldn't go wrong.

Passer Harry Wilson started things off when the Varsitys first got possession. From the Ram 45 Wilson heaved to John Sopinka at the 3, then handed off to Jack Sopinka at the 3, then handed off to Jack Rogers who slipped over for 5 points. Wally Bulchak added the convert.

Then Sopinka snared a Ram fumble and scooted to the Ryerson 25. A pass to Sopinka from Wilson brought play to the one-yard line and a handoff to Sopinka followed by Bulchak's convert made it 12-0 for Varsity.

Bill Stevenson took over the Varsity squad in the second quarter and, starting from the Ram 34, took 3 ground plays and a short pass to Ed Chorostecki to complete the first half scoring at 17-0.

The Blues drove through to nail the Ryerson kicker on his own 32 and after a 15-yard run by Bob Smart, Jack Rogers carried over his second major of the day.

On the kick-off Gerry Lansky snatched a Ryerson fumble at the Rams 9. Don Brown eased past several tacklers to score a major which Stevnson converted.

Next, Bob Smart went from the Ram 45 to the 18 in two plays. Vic Kurdyak moved the ball to the 8 and Lansky carried over from ther.

Shortly after the start of the final period the Baby Blues moved to the 15 in one drive. From there, a short pass to Kurdyak added yet another 5 points to the total.

A Stevenson to Sopinka pass brought the Varsitys to the Ryerson 21 and Don Brown went the rest of the way for a major.

Varsity went on the move with two successive passes from Stevenson to Kurdyak for a gain of 52 yards. From the 14 another Stevenson pass to Kurdyak tallied still one more score.

Al Wong picked a Ryerson pass out of the air over the Ram 35 then to set the ball on the Ryerson 8-yard line. Harry Hall drove over from there for the last (at last!) Varsity major.

Redmen, Trinity Win

The second day of intramatural football play saw two teams, running true to form, best their weaker but game opponents. U.C. after a season out of the limelight, put their best foot torward in their first match of the year and booted a frail crew of Medsmen nearly senseless by a 23-1 score.

Power just oozed from the U.C. machine as the Artsmen charged and never looked back. Four majors and three converts were the count for the U.C.'s while the best the medical specimens could manage was a lone single.

Touchdown scorers for the winning cause of U.C. were Siney Shoom, Russel and Moffat.

Forestry hit a brick wall in Trinity as the men from across the speedway edged the tree-men 5-2 in an intramural league football fixture last Friday.

A sideline pass from Whyte plop into the outstretched pinkies of Gordon accounted for the Trinity major and gave the Trinity men their margin over the hardchopping Woodsmen who were in there to the last.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

As could be expected, the officiating was down to its usual standards, Saturday afternoon. The standards being about as low as they could possibly be. Combined with Mac team that is not as yet up to Intercollegiate calibre and with only a mediocre effort on the part of the Blues, the fans didn't have a very interesting afternoon. As one wag put it, if things continue as they are going let's have the bands put on a show for two halves and let the teams take over at intermission.

The referees of the Intercollegiate have been receiving poor critic ratings for most of the season. That they have been criticized is as it should be. Saturday afternoon five major infractions went unpenalized. Probably there were other fouls that should have been called. It's very hard to understand that officials would be allowed to continue blowing games after inept demonstrations such as on Saturday. On one occasion, a quick whistle on a Varsity pass prevented Mac from taking over the ball on the fumble that followed the whistle. On another occasion, on a similar play, the whiste was withheld and Varsity recovered the Mac fumble on a pass. Admittedly both these plays would involve the judgment of the official concerned but surely the same official could use some discretion in reaching his decision.

Boobs in their calls were not restricted to judgment plays. On one occasion, Phil Muntz smashed through the line for a 15-yard gain to be stopped by two eager McMaster men. Just as Muntz came to an upright stop, an over-exuberant Marauder came in to give Phil one of the nicest elbow smashes seen in these parts for some time. As you could probably expect, two officials had an unobstructed view of the play but nary a twerp from the whistles. Rough play can not be condoned under any circumstances; for one reason, it leads to injuries. It is the job of the blind men in green and white to penalize as much rough play as possible.

On the game, Steve Oneschuk was the big scorer of the afternoon, with eleven points garnered from a touchdown, a convert, a rouge and two converts. An all-round fine performance. But while Steve was catching up on Gino Fracas in the point race, the rest of the Blues did not play up to their ability. Sure and those fine fellows like Bill McFarlane, Bob Pinkney and Phil Muntz performed worthily and the line completely outclassed the hapless Macmen but on the play of the afternoon, the Blues' efforts were probably hampered by the inferior team from Hamilton

The Marauders are not an Intercollegiate team as yet. They will be, maybe next year or the year after, but not this year. They had one of the best short pass games the fans have seen in the Stadium in some time but other than that they had nothing. Joe Kosakowski

Benny Right Again – Western Beats McGill

Montreal, Oct. 18 (Special)—Western Mustangs continue to roll along in the intercollegiate football league. They won their third in a row at Molson's Stadium here Saturday by whipping the hometown McGill Redmen 25-8.

All the scoring was done in the second and third quarters as Western exploded for three converted touchdowns, and a single for 19 points in the second period and coasted home.

Jacques Belec sparked the Western running attack although he didn't make the score sheet. The league's leading scorer, Gino Fracas, was held to three points as he booted the three converts.

The march that set up Western's first touchdown began in the first quarter. After Belec made one long dash, Murray Henderon romped 24 yards to the McGill one-yard line and carried over on the next play. Jocko Thompson then kicked a single.

McGill got into the game very briefly when George Klein took a pitchout to go over standing up, Fred Wilmot converting, but Western soon pulled away again as Garnet Mason galloped 42 yards for a T.D. and Jack Wyatt blasted through to block a kick at the McGill six and carry it over. Fracas converted all three Mustang majors in the second.

In the third quarter, Jocko Thompson kicked another single and, after Belec sparked another Western march, Don Getty completed a pass to Orest Tokarsky in the end zone. The extra point missed.

The Redmen got their other two points later in the same period when Emery broke through to down Thompson behind the goal line for a safety touch and two points.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

"Welcome Home" was the theme of the weekend on the Toronto campus, so they say. You could fool us! It wasn't that things weren't planned for a warm welcome — they just were not attended — that goes for the Saturday afternoon bout too.

Well it's typical of these parts where spirit is condemned. You're Joe College if you wear a bloop and the casual thing to do (the most socially accepted, that is) is to sit in the Bloor Street dugout and view via T.V. Let's face it—you've got to be casual in Toronto.

They used to have pep rallies here that gave John Law a pretty big headache. Immoral?—well at least they were memorable. We aren't encouraging jail sentences but when a school cant' get behind its own team it's a pretty sad state of affairs.

There was a "pep rally" Friday night and to put it mildly it was a flop attended by several casualties who suddenly acquired acute laryngitis. The Engineers saved the day later on but the organized part of the show fell on its face.

As advertised, the Blues were there at 8:30. The fans were there to see them depart for home. Bob Masterson hadn't even hard about the appearance until a Varsity reporter mentioned it Thursday evening, during practise. That's really tickled the old boys. There what we call publicity!

The float parade next on the agenda went on OK. In fact, it looked much better than last season's event. But the worst display occurred in the afternoon game when empty stands loomed across the field as bare and bleak as Everest itself. What a homecoming it was! We recall a homecoming two years back when seats were bought up days before the game by fans, young and old. We played Queen's that day—an old, old rival, not a newcomer to the intercol league. Last year's stands were packed too and in spite of trouble with pigs and bottles it was a game where colour and real college fun livened the local presses and parishes.

What has happened to our school spirit? Some say it was a poor choice for homecoming what with a new chancellor and U.C.'s centennial. The game was a predicted one-sided affair but wouldn't it have been a surprise if the visitors had won? Well, fortunately they didn't win and unfortunately it didn't make much impression on the U. of T. population.

Toronto has become too casual. Other universities can stage homecomings that mean something. We used to do it here too. Last week Western threw a pep rally that weren't any empty stands there did not measure up to expectations as a quarterback. The line had holes big enough to drive a tank through and Coach Al Sith's boys just didn't have it when it came to scoring. If you can imagine it, the Marauders completed 17 of 32 passes mostly of the short variety. On the long passes Kosakowski's receivers just didn't seem to be trying to get out far enough to take the passes. Kosakowski tried to steal a page from the book of Auburn Labeth by conceding a safety touch in the dying minutes of the game by throwing the ball over the endline. It was a poor piece of strategy on the part of the diminutive Hamilton field general as it added nothing to the Marauders' hopes at the time. It merely increased the Toronto lead.

End Notes: Doug Johnson and Bruce Johnson are identical twins but play for different teams. Bruce is one of the good Toronto ends and Doug Johnson is a tackle for the Marauders. Lorne Wrigglesworth had some good news on Saturday when his wife gave birth to a baby boy. Lorne got the news just as he was boarding the bus for Toronto's game. Gino Fracas of Western scored only three points in the McGill game, all convert, to raise his total to 30. Our One-eyed Benny went mad on the weekend by predicting a perfect weekend. His counterpart on the McGill Daily hasn't been having such a hot time. He has predicted three Redman victories including a slaughter of the McMaster Marauders and a win over Western. Well McGill beat McMaster by 1 point, 13-12 about three weeks ago but the Redman haven't made the Montreal cousin of Benny look good since they lost to both Queen's and Western. Warden Joe McCulley was guest on TV at half time.

OAC Suffers Big Setback As Queen's Wins Archery

The women's intercol events got into swing this weekend with the annual intercol archery bout at OAC. It was the first intercol match of any sort this season and was won by Queen's for the first time in years. OAC suffered a startling setback after winning the event last season. Toronto placed a sad fifth.

The Toronto squad was pretty new to the game, having lost old time stalwarts through graduations. Kay Sladen, Trinity and Betty Taylor, Nan Maybee, June Clarke all of PHE made up the team. The girls were told of the meet only several days before it took place and thus a lack of consent-place practice pulled them down to fifth position.

For several years OAC held a monopoly but it looks as if things are going to be different from now on. Standings were: 1, Queen's; 2, OAC; 3, McGill; 4, McMaster; 5, Toronto; 6, Western.

This year a new interfaculty event will take place in the form of archery bouts between the colleges and faculties. It is the first time such a thing has taken place and will be held two weeks from now.

The interfac groups will be made up of one or two teams from each college and faculty, a team consisting of two girls. Equipment will be supplied for practises which will be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday at the stadium from one till two o'clock.

To encourage the gals in the competition, a trophy is to be donated for the winning group.

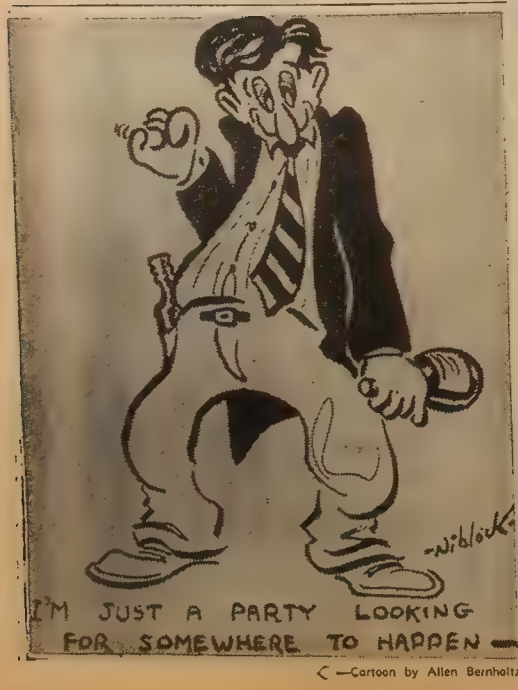
But We're Nice

It has been said that a society of ambiverts would be the Perfect Society. From our experience at the University of Toronto it would be a little difficult to even comment on such a statement.



Similarly, a society of extroverts would be equally difficult to imagine from our Ivory Tower at Varsity. There just aren't enough of them around for one to get an idea. We hear that too many extroverts make it difficult to live.

But Varsitads need not worry their pretty little heads about that. We have practically all introverts and we're proud of it. We don't want people tramping on other people's toes. We don't want people taking issue with something, when it would be a whole lot simpler to forget difference and have a party.

We look to the Students' Administrative Council for all Varsity leadership. But is there a council member who would take issue with the simple statement of facts presented there to be voted on? Have there been any indications that a similar situation is not the case among the councils of the Faculties and College?

Certainly, we have no All-Varsity Revue this year. We have no Stadium show. Some might go to a Pep Rally, but wouldn't dare take part in it. We do have students who do like a good quiet dance. Varsity students are not ambitious, but they sure are nice.

Everyone looks to the good old days. Already, last year is in that category. We hear student leaders condemned today for not taking as active a part in activities as they did last year. They admit they don't have the same calibre. They cannot be blamed for doing away with things they know they can't do. Leaders are born, not made, especially at the University of Toronto.

D P Invasion

A New Order

The Polish Students' Club present an article in an effort to bridge the gap between Canadians of the Old Order of 20 years standing and our New Canadians who have come since the second war.

There are today in Canada hundreds of so called D.P. students, Polish, Hungarian, Yugoslavian, etc. Since the end of the war hundreds of them have passed through Canadian, British and American Universities. It is not seldom that questions are asked. Who are they? Where do they come from? Why have they come? What do they want to do?

In this short article I would like to explain this D.P. invasion of Canadian and Western European Universities and Colleges, because as you see, we are eager to study and really work hard—also I would like to provide you with a new perspective in which to see us.

YOU MAY, IF YOU INSIST, and usually do, place us in the category of disgruntled Eastern Europeans, which by your standards we may seem to be. But do your standards apply? Can they apply to us, who are students not because of, but in spite of, the general run of events? As Polish students of this great University, we think the ideas expressed in this article apply to all new Canadian students on the campus.

You must realize that there is nothing that hurts the Kremlin's marionettes in Poland and Eastern European countries more than the small fact that we are what we are, where we are, free men and women students, beyond the reach of their "intellectual discipline." Also the additional factor that we are the young generation, and therefore too young to be explained away in terms of historical anachronisms and that we are not socially homogeneous, makes our position stronger and for them more dangerous. We can not be branded as the "Golden Youth", spoiled and rotten to the core. Too many of us are of peasant and working class origin. Too many of us have reached Freedom via the concentration camps of Nazi Germany, forced labor camps in Siberia, where we lost our fathers and relatives.

IT IS A SIGNIFICANT fact, and one that cannot be denied, that present Eastern European Immigration, dispersed all over the world and numbering millions, shows no more than 6% of what would be classified in e.g., pre-war Poland as the "intelligentsia". We are called by the communist marionettes "enemies of People", "lackeys of imperialism."

You must realize that we went into exile not because we owned so much property, but because we owe common allegiance to certain principles equally dear to all.

We are not disgruntled because of what has happened to us, we have made our choice ourselves, often against "official" pressure. Nor are we disgruntled for any other reason. But we believe that wrong has been done to our country, to millions of our compatriots. We are dissatisfied with what is happening to our brothers and sisters in behind the so-called Iron Curtain at present.

Since there is great interest among our University students and will in getting to know Communism and its teaching, I would like to give a few examples from Poland and the present Communist educative system.

What they teach:

George Orwell's prophetic vision, the omnipresent "Big Brother" seems to have been outdone by his pedestrian prototype, the omnipresent Great Stalin.

G. SCIZEW, A PARTY LINE WRITER of children's school books, gives this account of Stalin's godliness in his new book "Tales for the Young":

"Fyedor's eyes caught sight of the medallion with Stalin's picture in it. The nurse wore it on a thin gold chain around her neck. When she leaned over the boy's bed, Stalin's eyes seemed to look into Fyedor's. In that moment Fyedor was healed."

Much is said over the Iron Curtain about war propaganda in the West, but war propaganda there is a part of the official educational system. I quote from the Russian language, a text book for a nine-year-old:

"OUR PILOTS"

We fly high, we fly low,
We fly far, we fly near,
But wehn we bomb the enemy,
He will not get away alive.

—I hope the leaders of our University and the newly created Peace Council read this.

THE POLISH MINISTRY of Education, a staunch apostle of the Soviet dogma, having modelled the present Polish school system on the Soviet, has now issued a set of teaching aids for school teachers. They are all alike, and this is what the one dealing with the English language instructs the teacher to do:

"In the course of teaching the English language it is the teacher's duty to foster love of revolutionary traditions, love and respect for the Soviet Union—the best friend of People's Poland and the land of victorious socialism, a living example to the whole world."

To get admitted to the university and later to get his or her degree, the student has to pass a political test, which counts far more than the usual test of knowledge. What about the professors and the examiners? Luckily, most of them are still pre-war men, who are badly in need of communist indoctrination themselves. Recent party directive has ordered them "systematically to deepen their ideological knowledge."

Finally, what about the response of the "finished product", of state indoctrination. An anecdote at present current in Warsaw, will perhaps give the best answer.

A STUDENT IS BEING VIVAED for his diploma. (In European system students must pass oral examinations too.) The political examiner asks him: 'Who is your father, comrade?" "Why my father is the greatest man that has ever lived, the great architect of peace and progress—who else than Great Stalin!" "Excellent! And who is your mother?" "My mother? She is the heaven of all brave men, the benefactress of the world, who else than the Great Soviet Union!" "Here is your diploma, comrade, but do tell me, what is your immediate ambition?" Without the slightest hesitation the man replied: "To be an orphan!"

DESPITE THE CONTINUOUS flow of communist propaganda from behind the Iron Curtain, truth is at last beginning to win the day. The free peoples of the West have become more discriminating in their acceptance of facts. It is now widely understood that a Communist State is not synonymous with a Communist Nation, and that there are none of the latter in Eastern Europe today. Only in 1946, when I was in the Middle East, during the discussion with British soldiers I was often laughed at, and told to shut up, not to tell anything bad about our great friends. I was just telling them how I lived like an animal, working hard as a 14-year-old boy in Siberia, they did not believe me.

Now, coming back to our previous topic, you must realize that we, as new Canadians, are aware of the responsibility of our new country and are ready to serve it and defend it, especially its freedom. It may be, because we know more than anybody else, what real freedom means. At the same time we are proud of our origin, our cultural background and great past. I think, if we could only understand ourselves better, there would be less discrimination.

There is one thing certain, that all of the new Canadians are strongly anti-communist, not because of personal feelings, but because we saw it, we experienced the living under the communist regime and just because we have seen it in practice, we love freedom. One more point, many believe that we want war, which is absolutely not true. But, can there be a real peace on earth when millions are enslaved? Can we, in Canada, feel secure that our freedom will last forever?

JUST THINK IT OVER. To those students who dream about a communist paradise on earth, I suggest they spend just two weeks in Russia—wait—why not spend a summer vacation in Siberia? . . . eh? This will work as the best medicine, I am sure.

Interfaculty Debates

Reprinted from the Manitoban

This year University of Manitoba debaters will be trying to win the McGoun Cup for an unprecedented fourth time. For some reason or other, the debaters of this university have been more successful than most of an athletic teams. Manitoba has become famous for its debates rather than its athletic accomplishments, which is a distinction for any university.

It is not suggested that our debaters are all excellent speakers, but it can be inferred from past records that they are better in comparison than their opponents, which is, after all, the true measure of success.

If UMSU debaters hope to continue to win laurels, however, a much stronger emphasis must be put on the importance of inter-faculty debates. Unfortunately, these debates are given little publicity and are not at all well attended. The result is that there never is a great deal of impetus for the debaters.

Nonetheless, it is largely up to the individual faculties to stimulate interest in inter-faculty debating. Too often the debating representatives on faculty councils use their positions as vehicles to sit at the council meetings with their friends.

If debating in this university is to continue to thrive, these debating representatives must spend more than considerable time on their jobs.

International Debates

Another stimulant to debating on this campus would be to hold debates with some universities from the United States.

Debates could easily be arranged with the University of Minnesota, which would probably draw just as well as the traditional McGoun Cup debate and would likely cost less.

Every effort should be made to arrange debates with American universities, even if it does cost UMSU a little money.

We must remember that money spent on debating is in reality an invertment. An investment in the development of people who can bring honor to this university and an investment in the continuation of what is becoming a debating tradition on this campus.

No Party Merited Vote Topic of H H Debate

Hart House will decide today whether any party deserved the approval of the electorate in the election of August 10th this year. The debate will be held in the Debates Room of Hart House at 8.00 p.m.

This is the first Hart House Debate of the year and Warden Joe McCulley has extended an invitation to all freshmen to "come and be initiated in one of the most famous traditions of this University." There will be a short introductory lecture on the procedure to be used in the House at 7:30.

Mr. G. P. Ferguson, Editor of the Montreal Star, will be the guest debator tonight. The former Rhodes scholar has worked for the Winnipeg Free Press and analysed the news for the CBC on its program "Weekend Review."

Lou Tepper II Law, speaking against the motion "In the opinion of this house no party deserved the approval of the electorate on August 10th" said yesterday that "the motion as formulated is not only a slight on the electorate of Canada but also shows a basic lack of insight into the dynamics of the Canadian Federal system."

Alex Langford, IV Vic, Clyde Batten, II PreMeds, and Roger Bull, IV UC, the other speakers were not available for comment last night.

Hart House Debates have drawn a lot of publicity and big names in the past. When the former Prime Minister of Canada Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett attended a debate The Varsity commented next morning that "Last night's tongue-fest in Hart House again proved the absurdity of debates and another revelation of the political vacillation of the loquacious patrons of these vocal circuses."

NATO Said Major Target For Russian Propaganda

The Russians are at present spending 1 billion, 400,000 dollars a year for propaganda whereas we lean too heavily on the concept that the truth is its own weapon without being sold, stated T. F. M. Newton, head of the Information Division of the Department of External Affairs, at a meeting of the International Relations Club yesterday. "Much of this propaganda is aimed at splitting the NATO alliance," he added.

During the postwar period world organization was hoped for which would be able to provide for international security," he said. As time passed, however, the great hopes dimmed and any united work was impeded by an insidious conspiracy for world power, he continued. Decisions were taken repeatedly not to take decisions. The statesmen of the West, Newton said, caught with their arms down, tried to devise a formula to give themselves protection. This became the "security curtain" in the West as opposed to the "Iron Curtain" in the East, he stated.

Thus the twelve nations bordering the North Atlantic in western Europe, and the U.S. and Canada, entered into defense arrangements for the first time in the time of peace, he explained. Aggression against one member of the organization is to be construed as aggression against all.

The actual operation of the NATO Organization involves many difficulties because of the fourteen different governments involved, he said complicated by the fact that the parliamentary principle implies national sovereignity. Then a subject arises in which the civil side predominates over the military and the eventual authority lies in the legislature of each government.

Because of the two great power blocs, East and West, Newton continued, and the great suffering endured during the war, the western Europeans displayed a considerable amount of neutralism at first. The buttressing of strength of will and of arms is a very important factor in the growth of NATO and the remarkable progress made resulted from strengthening the backbone of the people, said Newton.

Without the creation of NATO we might very well be in the midst of war. In the first year, the Russians felt NATO was very insignificant but they ralized its importance and began to refer to it as the "aggressive Atlantic Bloc" which proves, Newton said, that they are worrying about it.

Although defence must come first, Article Two states that there should be provision made for attempts to solve economic conflict between members, he added. The gifts of armaments from the U.S. and Canada, he pointed out, indirectly provides for economic aid for in this way money is freed and can be used for economic purposes.

The European Defence Community does not conflict with NATO, he concluded, but is instead a step towards bringing Germany (who is looked upon fearfully by public opinion) into NATO.

T. F. M. Newton spent three years as first Director of Information for NATO. As such he was responsible for the implementation of the Atlantic Community psychological policies. He is a Harvard grad and has taught at McGill and reported for the Montreal Star and Standard.

He is chairman of the U.N. information office and was a Canadian delegate to the San Francisco and other conferences.

Weekender Applications Here Soon

In about a week's time application forms will be available for the annual Carabin Weekends. Since 1948 the University of Toronto has been host to forty French-Canadian students from the University of Montreal for one weekend. The forty host Toronto students return to Montreal later in the year. The exhhange is sponsored and organized by the External Affairs Commission, Weekend Committee.

The purpose of the weekends is to develop friendhsip with the Carabins and to stimulate student interest in contemporary Canadian ethnic controversies. As one of last year's Toronto Carabins said, "No one who has spent three or four days with the French Canadian students can feel an insurmountable barrier between himself and them."

The Weekend will be held in Toronto, December 3, 4, 5 and 6, and in Montreal early in February. Because of their great popularity, the Weekends will be restricted to students in their graduation or junior year.

OCE Elects Student Reps

Elections were held last Thursday at the Ontario College of Education. James MacLachlan was chosen as the representative for the Student's Administrative Council and James Carrol was elected the representative for Hart House.

Speaker's Chair Master Mystery

The Varsity was notified last night that the speaker's Chair in Victoria's Alumni Hall is missing. Rumor has it that John Wooton, "and a bunch of sore-heads in Middle House" stole it in connection with the controversial debate on American Foreign policy.

This chair, in which Mike Pearson sits as Chancellor of the Victoria College, was described last night by usually reliable sources as "an uncomfortable piece of furniture, a triumph of Victorian woodcarving." It tood at the North end of the hall.

The loss was first noticed over the weekend.

Who has it? Where is it?

Freshmen Are Better In English

The freshmen in Arts of 1953 surpass those of previous years in at least one department. According to figures released by the Department of English yesterday, 299 out of 352 frosh passed this year's version of the Remedial English examinations for an average failure rate of about 35 percent, compared to the 43 percent who flunked last year.

However the now familiar sign has once again been posted, stating that " . . . the Department of English will provide a course of instruction, popularly called Remedial English, to prepare unsuccessful students for a second exam in February".

The examination has in past years taken the form of a test in three parts—a short spelling section, a vocabulary test requiring definitions of selected words—last year a long discussion resulted from the choice of the word "kaleidoscope" as one to be defined—and either a precis or free composition.

Opinion on the tests and their value was in some cases strongly expressed. Said one M and P freshie, "I'm surprised that 65 per cent of us didn't fail; it was that hard." Added Max Mandel of the same course, "They gave us too much choice of topic for the composition. It would be difficult to mark the papers and anyone with political leanings was finished."

Arlene Kay, I House Ec., who got a B rating in the exam said, "I don't think it is really necessary for students not in an English course; lots of them just read for enjoyment."

Thumbs Up!

To Ride In Style

By HAROLD STROM

Want to save money? Want to go home in half the time with twice the comfort? Want to meet new people, see new faces? No, I'm not a publicity man for the T.T.C., advocating that you go home at three o'clock; I suggest that you stand on St. George St. or Avenue Rd. with your thumb out. Just think of the pleasure of riding home in a new Buick, chatting familiarly with a beautiful girl and saving yourself a car ticket or two. Of course, that doesn't happen every day. It may not even occur once a week. As a matter of fact it hasn't happened to me yet, but I don't give up trying.

Fortunately for student hitchhikers, many of the motorists that drive up St. George or Avenue Rd. were at one time students or hitchhikers, or both. One downtown businessman said, "I remember when I was a student here. The money I saved by not taking streetcars paid my way into a couple of movies a week, and in those days, a soda afterwards." Movies cost 75 cents nowadays, but you can probably still buy the soda.

Many students not only get lifts home, but are fortunate enough to acquire jobs and friends in this manner. Recently a third year Architectural student was offered the job of designing a new house for the motorist who picked him up and a second year Engineer took a very lucrative part-time job from a passing contractor. A young Arts student met her future husband by thumbing a lift with him. (Heavens! not even this means of transportation is safe anymore.)

Some students hitch-hike home not simply to save money (have you looked at your fees-form lately?) but for other reasons. One Dental student has this to say for hiking: "It's faster, cheaper, and more comfortable. You meet friendly people and don't get the feeling that you are a candidate for a stockyard. And besides you can inhale and exhale when you want; not only when the street car doors are open. You can, smoke, too!"

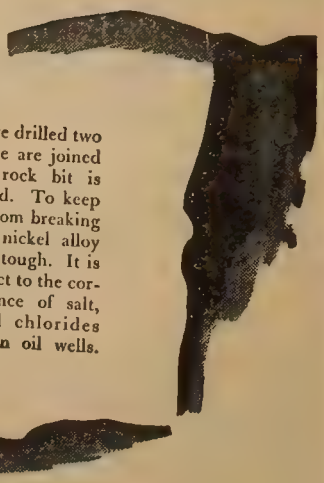
If nothing else, getting home is more interesting. Of course, you don't see the number of pretty women that take the street car, or the drivers that ask you to explore new territories by moving to the rear of the bus, but you'll probably hear a great many life stories and dirty jokes. You'll probably see more of Toronto, too, ("So what if I get let off at Danforth and Broadview, it's only six miles from home, and look how broadening travel is,") and the chances of meeting someone who is interesting to talk to are pretty good.

"Taxi, anyone?"

Dr. Owen Discusses Philosophy

Dr. D.R.C. Owen, Associate Professor of Ethics at Trinity, will be guest speaker at the first meeting of the University of Toronto Philosophical Society, to be held at 8 p.m. Wednesday in the Music Room of Wymilwood. His topic will be "The Problem of Mind-Body Dualism in Philosophy."

The Philosophical Society is open to all undergraduates of the University. The usual program includes the presentation of a paper on a philosophical and/or topical problem, followed by a question period and open discussion.



How do they drill an oil well, Dad?

You've seen me drill a hole in a piece of iron. Drilling down through rock is somewhat the same but the drill points have to be extremely hard and tough. The cutting parts of the drill are made of nickel alloy steel because it lasts longer and cuts quicker than most other materials.

"Do they drill very deep?"
Yes, sometimes oil wells are drilled two miles deep. Pieces of pipe are joined to each other and the rock bit is screwed on the bottom end. To keep this great length of pipe from breaking it is sometimes made of nickel alloy steel which is strong and tough. It is also less subject to the corroding influence of salt, sulphur and chlorides often found in oil wells.

"The Romance of Nickel" a 72 page book, fully illustrated, will be sent free on request to anyone interested.

No, despite the obvious appearances it's not the ultimate in television sets or even some super-oscilloscope dreamed up in a physicist's nightmare. It's the new electronic computer, the latest pet of the University Department of Physics, with this particular segment of the control board being operated by Professor Gotlieb, who controls it. A most disconcerting toy—it's smarter than its owner!

Cyberneticist

And Mechanical Bride

The University of Toronto has always possessed objects of extreme mystery which forever raise questions and baffle onlookers. This particular "chose de mystere" is located, not behind closed doors, locked and guarded, but occupies the second floor of the physics building.

If you want a game of checkers it'll beat you. Do you want some election results tabulated? Or a complicated chess problem figured out? It will do it for you.

The questionable article was exhibited by Professor Gotlieb who explained the secrets — of the mechanical brain. The first startling fact revealed that this was not a mechanical brain at all but an electrical digital computer. The operation of the computer is simple. Put some numbers on a tape, run it through the machine and the answer is typed out. But it's not that completely simple. It's, as Professor Gotlieb put it, "sophisticated."

Two such computers exist. There is the one at the U. of T. and the other is located in Manchester, England. Altogether, there are thirty such computers which operate on the same principle. The majority of which are in the United States.

The "Thing" stood, in a room full of dials, complicated controls, lights switches, and figures. This was the mechanical brain?

Befitting such an apparatus, the two gentlemen who are in charge of it are know respectively as the Chief Computer (Prof. Gotlieb) and the Director of Computions (Professor Robson) respectively. The former of these dignitaries, explained that the computer has the amazing capability of working out such things as engineering problems, calculations and statistical reports which would normally take individuals, singly or in groups, years to do.

In the last American election, a machine of similar abilities stumped the experts to such a degree when it predicted the landslide victory for the Republicans that it was fed false figures. But the outcome was the same — the brain was right.

At the present time, it's duties are concerned with working out problems dealing with the St. Lawrence Seaway project.

Uncanny, but so are many things at the University of Toronto and the electrical digital computer is only one.

A Bucket of Wisdom

"All thing without, which round about we see,
We seek to know, and how therewith to do;
But that whereby we reason, live, and be,
Within ourselves, we strangers are thereto . . . . "

Sir John Davies—1599

We are all conscious of our daily tasks, and they usually are many and frequently quite annoying. We have, however, a much larger task in life toward which we strive. Sometimes it is referred to as a goal, but more often than not we do not visualize clearly the principle object of our task. We see it only in a large and somewhat hazy picture, as we would see a forest of tress from a distance.

Sometimes we are frightened by the immensity of the task we have undertaken for ourselves. However, that fear can be overcome by doing, just as a woman motorist I knew overcame her fear for driving her car on those narrow metal runways in service station used to hoist the car for a grease job. She always feared to drive her car on these runways and managed to get someone to do the job for her. One day, however, she mustered up nerve and went ahead to drive her car herself and was amazed to discover how simple it could be.

The person who tries to accomplish something fast usually wastes his time by getting all excited and accomplishing nothing. It is like the fellow who was out hunting with a companion. Suddenly he raised his gun to take aim. "Hey, don't shoot!" cried his companion. "Your gun's not loaded!"

"Can't be helped," said the hunter. "No time to load it now — that rabbit won't wait."

Many persons will claim that they don't have a task. Yes, they do have a task to do but they don't realize it or recognize it. They are the people who many years later will say. "Gee I wish I had my life to live over. I'd do things differently." We all have a task to perform, and the sooner we set about it the better.

Reconciliation Possible In Faith And Science For Bishop Wilkinson

The formal celebration of U.C.'s centennial ended with a Church service in which Rt. Rev. F. H. Wilkinson gave a sermon. He said there is no quarrel between the findings of Science and the acceptance of God. Religion by itself can withstand and reconcile the wonders of science the attendants on Sunday at the U.C. centenary service of rededication were told in the sermon.

A graduate of U.C. and at present Co-adjutor Bishop of Toronto, Rt. Rev. Wilkinson was proud to honor, with the other graduates, the hundredth anniversary of U.C. The teaching of truth he said was the greatest attribute of the College and it should continue to raise the levels of mankind in future as it has done in the past.

The centennial service was held in Convocation Hall on Sunday. Religious leaders from Canada also participated in the service. Most Rev. W. A. Barfoot, the Primate of the Church of England in Canada; the Moderator of the United Church, Rt. Rev. A. A. Scott and Rt. Rev. W. A. Cameron, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church along with Rabbi Reuben Slonim were present.

U.C. was founded at the time when scientific discoveries were causing a conflict with the teachings of the Bible. These findings resulted in a wave of disbelief. According to Bishop Wilkinson the deeply learned leaders found nothing to go against the Bible. The new wonders of science only lead to new discoveries to go along side religion. The truth of deep learning and understanding conquers all unbelief.

Following the last formal ceremony of the centennial dedication a buffet uinch was held informally in the East and West Halls of the old college building. Sir Ernest MacMillan played organ music for the 750 graduates and representatives who attended.

Abstraction Is Simple Says Co-op

In last Saturday's Alumni Float Parade an interruption of the float titled "Pioneers in Group Living" entered by the Campus co-ops seemed to be above the reasoning powers of the average onlooker. In fact a common answer to the float was "the giant holding them green things." The Co-ops, however, feel that their float was only a simple abstraction symbolizing the pioneer spirit of the co-ops.

The float's main feature was the hand-made giant, "The Co-opus Colossus" which symbolized in itself the united pioneer spirit of the co-ops. In this Colossus' hands were three dimensional twin pines, encircled with metal bands, the symbol of Co-ops.

Apparently if one goes back to the old Egyptian, Persian and Indian mythology he will find that the pine tree is found to have been life and the perpetuation of life. Therefore in the float the hardy pin symbolizes the enduring quality of the Co-operation. The use of just one tree is insufficient to represent the mutual co-operation of the Co-ops and, therefore stands the reason for two. The two metal bands form the circling roots of the pine trees and display the ancient symbol of eternal life, the circle. The metal bands have a double meaning in the Co-op float, the all-embracing cosmos from which the word derives itself the shape of a circle, of which Co-operation is a part.

The color of the two pine trees and the circle is dark green. This is the color of chlorophyll which is the life principle in nature. The student may have come into contact with chlorophyl at one time or another. The background within the circle is golden yellow, typifying the sun, the giver of light and life.

The Co-ops are very disappointed that the onlooker could not have figured the abstraction out for himself. The University curriculum does not deal with abstracts to the extent it should.

High Ideals

Often Some Confusion But Aim Understanding Is Psychologist's View

That Students in Psychology are generally confused but expect to gain some understanding of people as individuals rather than objects was the theme of a panel discussion held by the Psychology Club last night.

Professor Bovard, Lynn Wittick, II Trinity, Neta Sideris, Grad Studies and Bud Hoddinott, IV St. Mike's, told the opening meeting of the club why they took Psychology and what they expected to derive from it. Professor Steer was the moderator for the panel.

There are two approaches to the study of individuals in Psychology — the old method where the object was examined on the end of a pin is being replaced by applied psychology where he is studied as an individual, Hoddinott said.

Miss Sideris said that mass production has influenced modern society to such a degree that we are now mass produced types. Professor Bovard explained the opposing theories of empathy — mutual respect between individuals which omits need for set of rules and Durkheim's theory of moral authority residing in society.

"Students are encouraged to be critical throughout the term, but you can't dissent on a final exam, Hoddinott said. Professor Steer said that a vast range of individual differences in the field of beliefs forced the individual to develop an awareness to the degree that he needed beliefs. Professor Bovard, said that "we must be responsible for the fact that there is a gap between what we do and what we should do.

In reply to a question whether students should take the time in lectures to ask questions, Prof. Steer said that too many professors use a curriculum as protective device against enquiring students.

Book Market Now Closed

When the S.A.C. Book Exchange closed Monday at 6 p.m., manager Clarke Deller (II U.C.) and his staff looked backward on five weeks of hard work and a volume of $7,000.00 in sales.

On Monday $2,400.00 was given out to the students for the books that had been sold by the Exchange. Any monies not collected may be picked up at the next pay day in the Fall of 1954.

Red Feather & Varsity

University of Toronto students will be called upon again this week to support Red Feather. In its own effort to help, The Varsity presents an introduction to its 66 services.

By PAT McCOLL

Thursday, October 22, is Red Feather Tag Day.

In the past, Toronto students have contributed generously to this fund but an even more generous donation is requested this year. Last year, student contributions averaged about 25 cents a student. This contribution, spread out over 66 charities, averages one-half a cent for each cause. A dollar from each student would give a cent and a half to each charity.

Many students seem to feel that since their parents contribute to the Community Chest at home they are not obliged to contribute here in Toronto.

Mr. L. S. Richardson, Deputy Director of the Children's Aid Society, said that he felt the out-of-town student should support this campaign as well as the city students because Toronto is their home from three to seven years.

"Even if a student never has to make use of the Red Feather services, they are always there, if the necessity should arise," remarked Mr. Richardson

MOST IMPORTANT

Perhaps the two services which concern the student most directly are the "Y" organizations located throughout the city, and the Traveller's Aid Association.

The "Y" has been an important part in the lives of most young Canadians. Most of us learned to swim in the local "Y" pool and many of the competitive sports like basketball and badminton were first learned in a "Y" gym.

The Travellers' Aid Association is a service for the travelling public. This association offers travel service, care between trains, information service and temporary accommodation in inspected homes.

Varsity Students are also familiar with "The Christopher House", an undenominational Community Centre for physical and educational recreation. The University Settlement is also benefitted by Red Feather Funds. The Settlement encourages an interest in social service work among University students.

Each year, approximately $300,000 is contributed by the Community Chest to the Children's Aid Society.

The Children's Aid Society of Toronto is located in a modern, new building at 33 Charles Street East. The building, completed earlier this year, offers the utmost in the facilities and the privacy which this work necessitates.

One-way windows allow prospective foster parents to see the children at play under normal conditions. The old method of bringing the child out for inspection by the adults was embarrassing both for the child and the foster parents. Last year, 1,247 adoptions were handled and 1,227 children were placed in foster homes. In Toronto proper, 6,477 children were helped in their own homes.

During an average day, 300 people make use of the various kinds of services offered in the Children's Aid building ranging from a new outfit for a three-year-old, through medical care and counselling.

The Psychology Department of the Children's Ais would appear to be a small child's paradise. There are toys, blackboards, blocks, furniture to scale and a wide choice of brightly coloured story books. By observing the child at play, the doctors are able to determine a child's secret fears, his intelligence and his interests. Students from all over the country observe these doctors at work.

Mr. Richardson pointed out that in former years, appeals for help were centred in the slum area but now the request for help from the Chilydren's Aid extends all over the city.

ONLY ONE

Another Red Feather Service is the Occupational Therapy Centre of Toronto. Apart from private organizations like Sunnybrook Hospital and the Workmen's Compensation Board, the centre is the only one of its kind in Toronto.

The Centre is supported almost completely by the Community Chest. Last year, their services had to be cut for three months so that they could meet their budget.

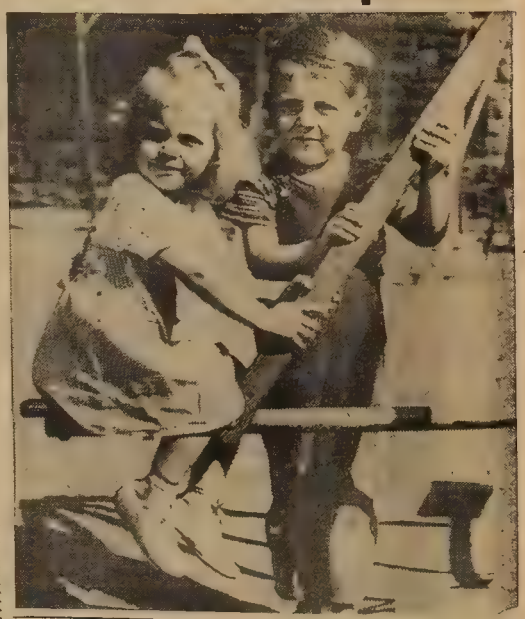
Miss L. E. Bartley in describing the two aspects in the centre's work said that when a cut was made it usually had to be in the out-patients' department.

At the clinic both physio and occupational therapy services are offered to the patients. The ages of the patients range from five months to seventy years, the majority of patients being in the 16 to 40 group.

"I would describe our work as an assessment type of program," said Miss Bartley. "We test the patients to see how long they can work without fatigue and help them to re-adjust to normal working conditons if possible."

The out-patients department helps people who are unable to come down to the centre. A great deal of their work is with polio patients.

NO PAY AT ALL



"About fifty percent of our patients do not pay at all, and the fees for other patients are based on their ability to pay," said Miss Bartley. "It is easy to see, then, why we depend on our Red Feather Allotment to carry out our work."

What requirements are necessary for a society to become a Red Feather Organization? It must, first perform an essential health, welfare or character building service; be governed by a responsible Board of Directors, who servd without remuneration; be willing to submit detailed reports of the financial conditions and services rendered to the Budget Committee and to agree to refrain from soliciting funds for current operations during any year it receives Chest support.

A full description of the scope of work carried out by the Community Chest might be named "from the Cradle to the Grave." Children are cared for by the Children's Aid Society and by other denominational organizations, teen-agers share in the "Y"; adults can benefit from services like the Society For Crippled Civilians and the Visiting Homemakers Association, and older people can find a home in one of the supported denominational Old People's Homes..

To most students, however, a dollar is still a lot of money, and it must represent some sort of investment. What better investment than the welfare of a neighbour?

CRITIC IN THE DARK

Rome 11 O'clock

On January 16th 1951, a staircase in a Roman office-building collapsed, carrying with it nearly a hundred unemployed women, all of whom were waiting to apply for a single typist's job. From this situation Producer Paul Graetz and Director Giuseppe de Santis (Bitter Rice) have made a lively tragicomedy of interest but no great distinction. Perhaps the realist trend which did so well by Vittorio de Sica and Roberto Rossellini has finally run its course. On the other hand, the fault may lie with de Santis himself. Bitter Rice, a harshly sensational film of a few years back made this director into a centre of interest. Relying on a sexy star and a brutal story he created a film which was aesthetically rather cheap, however much it impressed dramatically.

The same, in a way, might be said of Rome, 11 o'clock, at the International Cinema. The sex is somewhat diluted this time, the story more shallowly sympathetic, and the images reminiscent of The Bicycle Thieves. The film, none the less, is still oddly impressive, for de Santis is a filmmaker of no mean talent, when he gets going. Some of the scenes of Rome, 11 o'clock fail to impress because of a consistent lack of real introspection in the treatment of content, but others, notably a scene towards the end of the film in which the heroine, played, I believe, by Lea Padovani, realises the enormity of the tragedy as she looks at the shattered stair-case, are tremendous in their effect.

This particular one reminds the viewer of the work of Alfred Hitchcock, with its fusion of sound and image in the style of that master.

The camera work throughout is lacking in distinction, the setups either reminiscent of the over-worked realism of the post-war period, or else not taking advantage of the brilliant opportunities often offered by the situation. The sound work is, by contrast, the best I have ever heard in an Italian film. Though the background music is not always judiciously used, the sounds of the city, the falling staircase and its aftermath, and the hopital wards to which the camera follows the girls in the accident are excellently reproduced and managed.

The most obvious method of outlining plot, by tracing the careers of certain girls on the staircase, is for this film the most satisfactory. Though the selection of types is hardly intrepid, de Santis has done well by those he chose, even to using some of the girls who were involved in the actual accident in various parts.

Antigone Robert Gill Production

Jean Anouilh's version of Antigone was written during the occupation of France, and had to pass Nazi censorship. It was written in such a way that the censor did not see what the French read in to it. To them, Antigone herself represented France. However, Lewis Galantierre, the translator, felt that the real meaning would not be apparent to other audiences, and so he adapted the play slightly to make it clearer.

This is a modern dress version of the Sophoclean tragedy. It is done very simply, with no setting.

An unusual thing about Antigone is that it is all one act.

In the Hart House Theatre production by Robert Gill, Antigone is played by Lyla Gutzin; Creon the King, by Ivan Thornley-Hall; Chorus, John Douglas; Ismene, Mary Morgan; Haemon, Theodore Walker; the Nurse, Beverley Milne.

Begin Canvass For Red Feather

Canvassing for the Red Feather Campaign begins on the campus today. Canvassers will contact all students in Meds, Architecture, Vic Knox, Pharmacy, POT, Nursing, Wycliffe, St. Hilda's, Forestry, and Law before the end of the week.

The Red Feather tag day will be held this Thursday for those who are unable to contribute through their own faculties. Approximately 30 taggers will cover the campus and give little Red Feathers to those donating.

Movies will be shown in Hart House East Common Room today and tomorrow at 1.15 p.m. They are sound pictures in color showing the work of the Red Feather services.

No women will be allowed into these shows but arrangements are being made to show the movies in some of the colleges and faculties later in the week.

Further projects for fund raising have been curtailed this year as "the amount received did not merit the effort spent in past years" Student Service Chairman Bill Baldwin said yesterday. (The Student's Administrative Council Student Service Commission is looking after the Campaign.) "We are trying to concentrate our efforts on canvassing. and informing the student about the Red Feather's 66 services," he said.

Canvassers have been supplied with information about these services for the first time this year. We feel that if the student is being asked to contribute $1.00 we should tell him where it is going" he said.

Wheat Crisis LPP Lecture By L. Morris

Leslie Morris, member of the national executive of the Labour Progressive Party will speak on the topic "Canada's Future as seen by the LPP." His lecture will be the first in a series of public meetings in which will be discusses; the wheat crises in the west, Bill 93, Big Five negotiations to lessen international tension, and the LPP perspective for Canadain national development. The series will begin on Thursday, October 22 at 1 p.m., University College, Room 8.

To Exhibit Paintings Of Jackson

More than 100 paintings by A. Y. Jackson, the artist who once shocked the critics, but who is now recognized and admired all over the world for his portrayal of the Canadian northland, will be exhibited at the Toronto Art Gallery. The show is called A. Y. Jackson, Paintings 1902-1953.

The Governor-General will open the exhibition on Thursday evening, October 22. An Exhibition of Canadian Crafts will be opened at the same time and both these shows will be on view until November 22.

The A. Y. Jackson show is the fourth in a series put on by the Art Gallery of Toronto, in co-operation with the National Gallery. The others in this series have been Emily Carr, Lawren Harris, and Arthur Lismer.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

For many, many years — perhaps since a faculty of applied science was established at the University of Toronto — a war has been going on between the Skulemen and the artsmen. It's been a cold war most of the time and now and then a hot war, but make no mistake about it: the conflict does exist.

One reason for the hostilities is that we artsmen (yeah, that's we) have a vague idea that all Skulemen can do is rowdy things like yelling "We are, we are . . . etc.," drink 40 beers at a sitting, steal coeds' unmentionables and various uncultural activities which (some say) do nothing to promote the university as such.

Well, research can often prove enlightening and, after delving through the files of the Athletic Association yesterday, we discovered something else Skulemen can do. They can play football.

Of the 24 players dressed by the Senior Blues for last Saturday's game with McMaster Marauders, nine are engineers. The Blue and Gold men on the squad that day were fullbacks Phil Muntz and Don Cheeseman, halfbacks Bill McFarlane and Bob Pinkney, quarter Ed Skrzypek, Bill Horton at flying wing, end Fred Smale, Bob Waugh, a tackle, and guard Frank Palermo. In addition, Jack Meaker, now with the intermediates, and two other players who have seen action this season, Bob Leeming and Pete Maik, are Skulemen as are Gene Chorostecki, who has been out of action by an injury, and Bob Kimoff and Alex Macklin, both sidelined for the season.

That's quite an impressive record and even more so when you recall that no other one faculty or college even approaches this predominance. Physical Education has five men on the team while Vic and OCE have three each. There are two dentists, and two St. Mike's types. U.C., Emmanuel and Trinity have one man each.

Almost as interesting is the fact that of those 15 Skulemen, seven are in second year. According to the Athletic Association's efficient, though tiny, publicity department, they are Waugh, Smale, Skrzypek, Muntz, Cheeseman, Chorostecki, and Maik.

As for intramural football, it's been quite a spell since Skule won the Mulock Cup. Last time was 1945 with '43 the last time before that. In 1940, a united Junior-Senior team took the honours and that may be something of an omen because SPS has only one squad again this fall. The combines started the season last week by dumping the perennial champ, Victoria College, 8-7, and thereby became the team to beat for the Mulock Cup. That's our opinion, not One-Eyed Benny's or a concensus of sportswriters or anything at all reliable.

But why should S.P.S. produce so much football personnel? The obvious explanation, if you're in a hurry, is that, of Skule's enrollment of 1952, 1,585 are probably men. This explains exactly nothing, though, because there is a grand total of 3,556 students in the arts colleges and, assuming these to be roughly fifty percent women (we were going to say half women but that sounded misleading), Artsmen ought to outnumber Skulemen. It follows then, that Skule produces more football players, in proportion as well as in aggregate.

One supposes the reason is that in arts you get a large number, perhaps even a majority, of chaps who find history, philosophy, international affairs and such pursuits more interesting than sports. Skulemen are more lusty, outdoorsy fellows and, in general, are both sportsmen and sports fans. It must be admitted that the odd engineer gets involved in an international affair or two but that's neither here nor there.

The whole question is neither here nor there, for that matter. As long as we remember that S.P.S. contributes more than noise at the rugby games.

Win And Tie On Weekend Soccerites Face Macmen

By Dave Wood

The homecoming of the Senior Soccerites may have been late as far as Homecoming Weekend was concerned but every overdue minute was worth it as the Blues swamped RMC 8-0, Friday and the next day held a fresh McGill team to a 1-all tie.

In their Friday encounter at RMC, Jose Atucha sparked the Toronto team with a dazzling performance which included four goals.

The deceptive ball-carrying of Rod Green paid off as he blasted one home from right wing. Finch added another from left. Goalie Ed. Duru and Tamberg got the others.

In the Saturday game the Blues showed up well as they faced an expert McGill team entirely from the Carribean area. Tamberg opened the scoring from a scramble, but the McGill team pressed desperately for the rest of the game and their centre forward headed a perfectly-aimed corner shot into the Blues' net.

At 2 o'clock to-day the J.V.s entertain the McMaster Intermediates and at 3 the Seniors meet their Hamilton counterparts.

Lineup las weekend: Duru, g; Eze, rb; Hubicki, lb; Williams, ch; Leach, rh; Johnson, lh; Tamberg Green, rf; Ashbourne, ir; Atucha, il; Finch, if.

Blues Are Montreal-Bound In Quest Of Track Crown

The University of Toronto was undisputed ruler of the intercollegiate track and field kingdom for five consecutive seasons beginning in 1946. Then, in a minor revolution in 1951, McGill took over and Western followed up by winning the senior championship last year. Now, the Varsity squad, described by head coach Hal Brown as "the best team we've had in the five years I've been here," is prepared to attempt to retrieve the lost laurels in the college meet tomorrow at McGill.

"We've got one top man in every event," Brown said yesterday in summing up his team's chances. "Now that we've let the other colleges have the championship for one year each, it's time we were winning it back."

Biggest source of hope for the U. of T.'s title quest is a pair of runners who will be competing in their first intercollegiate competition. They are Dick Harding, who is entered in the 220 and 440-yard dashes, and Norm Williams, who will run in the 120 and 220-yard hurdles and is second choice in the broad jump, as well as an alternate in the shot put.

Williams is Ontario champion in both hurdles events, as well as the shot put, and Canadian junior titlist for the hurdles. He has also broken or equalled Canadian records at both distances. Harding was favoured to win the 220 and 440 at last year's intercollegiate meet but was unable to compete. Both Williams and Harding are prize products of the now-defunct Toronto Track and Field club and coach Lloyd Percival.

Victoria College's Pete Watson is running in two events, the mile and half-mile, and is being counted upon heavily as he won both events in the interfaculty meet last week. He sprained his ankle at the finish of the mile but has been running for three days and appears to be back to normal.

Juri Vrzesnevski and Bob Hamilton are three-event men. Vrzesnevski, the PHE strong man, is in shot put, javelin and discus events while Hamilton will back up Williams in the hurdles and broad jump.

George Stulac is Varsity's man in the pole vault while Bernie Deuchers will take care of the shot put and Dave Preston the three miles. Larry Yeigh will represent Toronto in the 100-yard dash.

The 22-man team leaves this afternoon for Montreal. The intermediate tracksters get their chance Friday at the western conference intermediate meet in Guelph. Toronto has held the intermediate championship for several seasons.

Basketball Already

By MOISHE REITER

Trophies aren't everything in college sports. Often the best teams miss out on the cups and plaques as Varsity's basketball Blues proved last year. Our hoopsters broke an old jinx that still troubles their football brethren, as they defeated the Westerns on their Mustang home floor in the season's final game, and missed the title by a whisker.

Encouraged by last year's good showing the Toronto basketballers will be going all out to make their status as champions official this season. A large turn-out at yesterday's practice ensured temporary coach Dalt White, who is handling the team while Bob McMaster is busy at football, of a good selection to pick this session's challengers from. Graduation and academic difficulties have cut the number of returning Blues to five. However, a flock of enthusiastic grads from the '53 Intermediates and some freshmen should plug the gaps.

Back to fight for the Blue and White are Lou Lukenda, George Stulac, Marv Tile, Bill Corcoran and Jim Russell. Lukenda is preparing for his last year in Blue togs and his selection as the only Blue to make All Star in '53 makes him a likely stalwart for this season's squad. Stulac is a good bet for centre on the Blues and Marv Tile should prove a good performer in spelling George. Russell could be one of the loop's outstanding guards and Corcoran's dead eye will be a strong part of the Blue offence.

Outside teams have taken several of '53's top men. Pete Potter, who, as a freshman, looked like a future great is working out with Tri-Bells, but may be expected to re-enter the Blue fold in '54. Leo Madden, after two seasons as a Varsity set shot ace has also moved into the Tri-Bell camp.

Hesh Rotman is the most promising of the Intermediates that are moving up. Dalt White sees Rotman as a good prospect to add strength down the centre for the Blues. Medsman Mike Baida will be going all out to make the jump to Senior ball this year and the wily two-year veteran of the Intermediates could prove valuable to the Blues.

From high school circles come Hank Galka and Bill Karpinski both stars for last year's TSSAA senior champs, Bloor Collegiate. North Toronto, Bloor's opponents in the finals of 53, send Vic Kurdyak, Bill Beamish and Larry Scott up to the Intermediates with a view to a Blue future.

Footballers who rate highly are Blue quarterback twins Olie Mandryk and Ed Skrzypek, both of whom will not be able to consider the basket court till the grid wars end. Olie went well with the Intermediates two years back and Skrzypek was the class of the intramural league last year. Not to be forgotten is Frank Palermo whose record as an Intermediate basketballer promised a bright career as a Blue. This year there are hopes that Frank will be able to work Basketball into his very heavy timetable (so typical of Skulemen) this year.

Track Blues Pick Captains

Sprinter Larry Yeigh and distance runner Dave Preston were elected co-captains of the University of Toronto track and field team at a player meeting last night.

The Blues are travelling to Montreal to take part in the intercollegiate meet tomorrow.

Competitors for Varsity at the meet tomorrow will be: 100 yards — L. Yeigh, G. Kelly; 220-yards — D. Harding, L. Yeigh; 440-yards — D. Harding, D. McEnteer; 880-yards —P. Watson, R. Hulse; Mile — B. Eckersley, P. Watson; Three Miles — D. Preston, H. Tilsom; 120-yard Hurdles — N. Williams, R. Hamilton; 220-yard Hurdles — N. Williams, R. Hamilton;

Pill-Pushers, Greenshirts Victorious

Pharmacy's new entry in the faculty soccer league started auspiciously yesterday by battling Wycliffe College to a 1-1 stalemate. The druggists had to come from behind to do it as the theologs opened the scoring in the first period and Pharmacy bounced back in the second half with the tying goal.

The other contest saw Forestry blank Architecture 1-0 on Jack Halkoski's goal.

In interfaculty lacrosse, Victoria College Seconds turned on a fourth-period drive that turned a 2-2 tie into a 5-2 victory over S.P.S. Fourths. J. Millyard fired two goals for the Scarlet and Gold while W. Mayer, E. Woodland and Conroy tallied once each. Lucas and Pollock scored for Skule.

St. Michael's B downed Trinity B's by an identical 5-2 score. Wheeler and Tom Sergeant were two-goal men for the Irish with Mike Wadsworth getting the other. Lundy and Webber accounted for the Crumpeters'.

Both volleyball games were won in two straight matches. The B. team from first-year PreMeds beat S.P.S. Sixths 15-8 and 15-4 and Vic Fourths stopped St. Mike's D 15-7 and 15-8.

Pep Rally Post Mortem

The Editor,
The Varsity;

Yesterday in a column, "On The Sideline", Jo Ratcliffe made some rather foolish statements. Miss Ratcliffe states that the Pep Rally was ". . . to put it mildly, a flop." Who is Miss Ratcliffe to say the evening was a failure! We of the Blue and White Society consider it a definite success! No one would dare call it a failure if they had been there with the other 1,000 or so people, who had heard the cheers and music at Hoskin Ave., or who had to clean up the area afterward—with its smouldering fires, its strewn decorations and its multitude of bottles and song sheets.

The evening was advertised as a Pep Rally and Street Dance and it was just that. To say that "the organized part of the show fell on its face" is silly when hundreds of people were square dancing at midnight 3 ½ hours after the show had begun.

But Miss Ratcliffe makes more "mistakes". She rashly suggests that Bob Masterson hadn't even heard about the Blue' intended appearance until Thursday. This seems strange indeed when Bill Harris, the rally director, had an interview with him over a week before to settle most of the final arrangements.

Miss Ratcliffe mentions the Western Pep Rally as being "memorable". The only thing memorable about it was it complete failure. The rally consisted of about 100 people giving the Western yell twice. The few Toronto supporters drowned out the Westerners.

It seems reasonable to assume that Miss Ratcliffe attended neither Western's rally or the show here on Friday, or she would not have made such silly statements.

It would be better if Miss Ratcliffe stuck to writing about women's sports, about which she knows something.

SAC And "Rules"

The Editor,
The Varsity.

I would like to go on record as being in opposition to the proposed ratification of the SAC of the appointment of the Assistant Conductor to the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra, or, rather the manner of this appointment.

In the Mon., Sept. 28th issue of The Varsity an advertisement was placed inviting applications for the post of the Assistant Conductor. The ad went on to say that applications were to be accepted until Thurs, Oct. 1. As of Tuesday, Oct. 6, official word had it that no applications but one had been received. The late applications were submitted later than, or presumably on October 8th or 9th.

On the assumption that the SAC wishes to be fair and aboveboard, and "true to its word," to those to whom it has addressed itself, I submit that entries should have been closed after the Oct. 1st deadline. On the further assumption that whoever was most anxious and interested to do this type of work would have applied before that deadline, the ratification by the SAC would put it in a dubious position as to its own integrity.

It is now evident on the basis of this application and its acceptance, that an "illegal" entry (i.e. one turned in after the closing date for applications, therefore not valid according to the SAC notice) has been selected, with the further point that the position is now endowed with an honorarium!

On this evidence of such poor business dealings and practices, the SAC could only regain its integrity (in such matters) by refusing (or refuting) the ratification of the appointed candidate. I'm sure that this would not be an acceptable practice in any other sphere of activity. This is a gross injustice to applicants whose interest and conformity to the "rules" has been completely disregarded by the SAC, who first chose to (publicly) publish them, then violate them.

Barbarians

Open Letter to Engineers:

Ever since the world began, this campus has been subjected to all kinds of fairy-tales concerning the undying heroism and eternal vigilance of you Campus Barbarians. It seems, however, that your modern vigilantes have failed to notice the glaring absence of your hallowed plaque, which usually adorns the front of that den of debauchery, the Little Red Skulehouse.

If you had been able to open yout bloodshot eyes Monday morning, you would have seen the Whitney Hall plaque hanging on your beloved Skulehouse—a fitting advertisement for the "men" of the campus. Did you have difficulty subduing the fierce occupants of Whitney Hall, and are the stories true of the heavy casualties you suffered in that brawl?

If you have enought interest, and if you can summon enough courage, you are cordially invited to Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity House, and submit a humble petition for its return. We will consider it. If not, it will be melted down, remodelled and sold as chastity belts.

Haughtily,
The Society For Cruelty To Engineers.

Tally In Final Innings Gives Victoria Victory

When two top teams in any loop meet you can be sure that great thing will happen. That is what happened yesterday afternoon when Vic Firsts battled PHE's third-year team to a 10-9 win at Trinity field, in the most thrilling match of women's softball to date.

PHE was at bat to start with Vera Boyko slamming one that sent third base Gail Lowther home for the opening taly of the match. Pitcher Shirley Roberts was next to hit the home plate followed shortly by Vera to end the scoring for that part of the opener.

Vic's big gain was made in the second half of the segment when the top-ranking squad completed seven out of eleven tries. Pat Cowan sent three home and this was followed almost instantly by a homer off the bat of Vic. pitcher Mary Foster. Elisha File, Phil Andrews and Joan Haggart all found their way home so that at the end of the opener the Vic squad was ahead 7-3.

The second inning went scoreless for PHE but Vic managed to tally two more off the bats of Mary Foster and Elisha File. PHE really came back into the game in the third to the score 9-all. With time running lut Vic took to bat for the third session of the afternoon, and, as precious minutes flew by, Pauline Spragg reached home plate to brak the tie and end the game 10-9 for Vic.

Stay Around At Night

There is probably no University in North America with any more colorful surroundings than the University of New York. Situated in Greenwich Village on Manhattan Island, the University has almost no campus, but students have taken over local lounges as though they had been born in them.

Many students have complained that the University of Toronto has none of this colour, and there isn't even the community around us in which it could develop.

But the closer look reveals that the local campus is almost surrounded by institutions of one kind or another. True, many of these could be exploited to a greater extent than they are now, but there are enough here, and each has its individual color — an atmosphere to suit the taste of every student.

Two of the best known don't need mentioning. The beverage room up on Bloor Street for shadowy afternoon lecture skipping, and the cocktail-restaurant to the west for those drinking to the wee hours of the morning, already have their regulars.

As a general meeting place the coffee shops on Bloor, Harbord, and College Streets are all steeped in the tradition of the respective faculties they serve. They are not dingy dens if iniquity, as some would like them to be. They do on the other hand, reflect per faculty the atmosphere of the University of Toronto, with all its federated colleges.

The Varsity would not be surprised if we found those students who most loudly condemn the lack of off campus color here to be the ones who are most seldom off the campus at night. Non-resident students too often stay out of the university community at night to find amusement, thinking they must get away from it all. It might be much less frustrating to us all if more students patronized more of the local institutions, and made them a place where students could relax among themselves. There seems no doubt, but most of us would prefer getting away from the older crowd at night, even if they aren't more than a few years.

We are not suggesting pub crawling in the university area, for the sake of crawling. But we do earnestly believe a great many students here are missing that most important part of their education — intelligent association.

The IUS Question

Couched In Fear

This is the first in a series of articles analyzing developments and issues at the recent NFCUS Conference. Here, the writer, who acted as a Toronto observer, discusses the widespread effects of the controversial IUS decision.

By RICH ANCO

One general observation can be made about last week's conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students—it accomplished little. Sure, several university students from across Canada became acquainted with each other, but when these same delegates were asked to affirm a definite stand on some policy question they backed down.

THIS FACT WAS BROUGHT home with special emphasis in the discussion concerning NFCUS relations with the International Union of Students (IUS). One couldn't help getting the impression that the delegates were running away from any question that had to do with Communists or Communism—even if it proved to be at the expense of certain principles they thought honest and right.

Regardless of whether anyone thinks NFCUS is or is not worthwhile, he must face the fact that it speaks for the students of this nation. The point is should we have the Federation speak out boldly and sincerely, or should we be content to have it mumble and murmur (as it has in the past) and appear weak. Last week, those who favored the latter opinion won the day.

THE FULL ASSEMBLY OF NFCUS approved a motion on the IUS, over the protests of the Toronto delegation, which was weak, negative and undiplomatic. It reads:

WHEREAS the IUS has lately given indication of apparent will to negotiate with non-member national student unions by providing them with the possible status of associate membership, and WHEREAS the NFCUS is desirous of fostering greater international understanding, but WHEREAS the spirit and activities of the IUS have not fostered an international student community in the past because of its partisan and political approach both to student needs and the role of students in society:

BE IT RESOLVED that NFCUS make no commitments toward associate membership with IUS at the present time, but that the Executive of NFCUS will be empowered to investigate during this year the possibility of qualified relationship with IUS and report their findings to the various student councils before the next Conference.

WHATEVER ONE WISHES TO SAY about this motion, it must be admitted that its tone implies that it would be better to have nothing to do with IUS. This is no wild evaluation of the meaning and spirit behind it. The Montreal Star commented editorially:

". . . the Federation almost unanimously set aside the suggestion of membership in the IUS which means the danger is removed of Canadian students participating in an organization which has been captured by the Communists."

Can anyone get any other impression from such a motion? It is simply a statement of international NFCUS policy which says that we want nothing—if at all possible—to do with Communist-led organizations regardless of the fact that these organizations have made overtures for closer co-operation between east and west. The idea "to investigate" carries little or no weight when considered in the text of the entire motion.

THE MOTION AS PASSED WILL probably do great damage to the reputation of the Federation and of Canadian students throughout the world, and especially in those areas NFCUS should be most concerned with influencing—Asia, the Middle East and Africa. The wavering "no" that is veiled in the accepted motion will show to the students in those areas that NFCUS is not sincere about its talk of desiring international student co-operation and good will. It is very difficult, indeed, to believe that Canadian students as a whole are not sincere.

The policy needed, one which is appropriate for a nation that, in many parts of the world, has the greatest respect of all western countries, should stress a careful firmness, but a firmness that is willing and optimistic. Above all, it must not be couched in fear, for fear shows. We have nothing to be afraid of, and we should be quite happy to bridge any gap that is separating the youths of one part of this world from the other.

THE TORONTO DELEGATION TRIED its utmost to present and have passed a motion that would make clear and positive the NFCUS stand on international relations. They could not even get effective support for it. But hte voting in plenary showed an interesting twist—while Toronto was the lone opposer to the "negative" motion in Commission, it did manage to win over there were grounds for co-operation with the and this is only a supposition, had the delegates present been able to realize the serious implications of the NFCUS motion on the rest of the world they would have more effectively backed Toronto.

The content and the ideas incorporated in the Toronto proposal were no different from those in the McGill-amended Laval motion. But there was a world of difference in the tone. It was obvious that Toronto was willing to accept the observations of Chuck Taylor, NFCUS observer at the IUS Warsaw meeting, that IUS had had a change of face.

AND TAYLOR'S REPORT BRINGS up another disgusting aspect of the conference. The reputation and character of this Canadian Rhodes scholar was questioned because he recommended that NFCUS negotiate for associate membership in IUS. No one ranted about Taylor's good sense last year when he said NFCUS should not join IUS. But the minute he felt there were grounds for co-operation with the international union, then he was immediately dubbed a sympathizer, and called "a person who has been seduced by the Communists."

Taylor had held the name of Canadian students high and has won the the respect of hundreds of Asians, Europeans and Africans. The Saskatchewan delegation should be ashamed that it tried to blacken the name of this NFCUS "ambassador."

THE TORONTO POSITION AS to IUS relationship was a positive one. It welcomed the changes in IUS policy and attitude. It hoped that IUS words would be backed by actions. It pointed out that IUS had been unreasonable in the past. An dit expressed a desire to co-operate with IUS on projects, where and if there could be mutual agreement.

It is to Toronto's credit that they strongly defended this position. The ball has been passed from the IUS and it appears that NFCUS has fumbled. Is there some chance for recovery?

LIBERALS DESERVED WIN

Polished Up!

Federal Election Results Deserving Hart House Debaters Claim, 30-18

If the Liberals won a smashing victory in the last federal elections, it was because they deserved it. Hart House debaters last night voted, 30-18, against a motion which declared that "no party deserved the approval of the Canadian electorate."

Most of the time at the debate was spent questioning the principles of all the parties that faced the voting populace last August 10. According to L. T. Tepper, Law, no one principle was large enough to hold all Canadian support, but guest speaker, Mr. G. V. Ferguson, editor of the Montreal Star contended that the Liberals had been able to "bend and sway" enough to warrant national support.

"The day is bound to come," said Ferguson, "when the Liberals, worn with office, will start to make the blunders which in tradition it has been the privilege of the Conservatives to make." The Liberals were handed a dividend, he sad, in the Conservative handling of the Conscription issue, and the Louis Riel execution.

"Many governments before now have been returned on the basis of their record," said Ferguson, "but with the stewardship we have seen in the Liberal party in the past, we can expect it in the near future, and they deserved their return to power last August."

No party can achieve national proportions unless it bends and sways with the five great regions of the country, he said.

Leader of the government, Roger Bull, UC, stated that as Janus had two faces, so the Liberals and the Conservatives each have ten faces — one for each province. Also, in speaking to the motion, he said that the CCF party could only wave their tomahawks at the Robber Barons of Capital, "who already lie strangled in red tape."

John Medcof, Grad, said that certainly, at least one party was returned on the basis of a decent platform, and that party was the one offering Canadians, Canada first, low tariffs, and greater socialization.

"The Canadian electorate supported the Liberals in the last election," said Lawlor Lowden, Meds., speaking for the motion, "not because they approved, but because they were afraid of the alternatives," he said.

Skulehouse Still Bereft Of Plaque

Where is the Engineers' plaque? Both the Pi Lambda Phi, and the Engineers would like to know. It was last seen yesterday afternoon at 2:15 p.m. on St. George St. in the company of two Medsmen by a student who declined to give his name.

Members of the fraternity denied knowledge about the theft and whereabouts of the plaque which was stolen during the weekend from the front of the Skule House. "We hereby disclaim any responsibility for the foul misdeed perpetrated by the Society for Cruelty to Engineers," said Lewis Rosenberg, a member of the fraternity.

"If it is found on our permises," he said, "it will be returned to the engineers in a suitable manner."

Doug Christie, IV SPS, said, in a message to his "Dear, dear friends of Lambda Phi", "Non illegitimi carborundum."

The absence of the plaque was first noticed as the result of a letter in yesterday's Varsity ascribing the theft to the Pi Lambda Phi fraternity.

Vic Raids Trinity For Other Chair

The Trinity College residences were "raided" last night, by a large group of Vicmen. The motive for the raid, according to a spokesman from Middle House, is the disappearance of the Speaker's chair from the Alumni Hall in Victoria College.

In an attempt to steal a corresponding chair from Trinity as a bargaining agent, the Vicmen entered without fuss or difficulty. An architect model of the new buildings at Trinity was considered an excellent alternative hostage. Along with the chair, it is now in Vic custody.

The raid, one of the most uneventful this year, was also the argest yet conducted by the men of Victoria College. The actual abstractors of Vic's chair are still not definitely known.

"Middle House Soreheads" mentioned as suspect in yesterday's Varsity, catergorically denied having taked the chair from its dais. Middle House invited the public to a search of their premises, a spokesman said last night.

Plunging Neckline Attracts Attention

By PETER GRANT

Maybe you think The Varsity stinks. Maybe you have stopped reading The Varsity. Maybe you never read The Varsity to begin with. If you belong to categories one or two, this article is not for you. But if you feel bad about the fact that The Varsity is full of nothing but NFCUS, SAC, UN, UC, and other uninspiring things with initials, you can do something about it.

You can make some news. Raid something. Steal something. Burn UC. This will at once provide an excellent lead story, and remove one of our dullest and most persistent subjects. Just a word of caution. Before your pull an abduction, murder, coup d'etat or anything of like newsworth, flick on a flattering light and phone Frazer McIntosh (a photographer). Do not phone for a reporter. We don't have one.

If you lack flair for the spectacular, come down to the ivory basement in the observatory (no star gazers, we) and be a reporter. Paul Bacon, a suave Trinitarian, will welcome you with gladness and crumpets.

If facts bore you, write features (sprightly things, about non-essential subjects of outstanding banality). Or, if you are really ingenious, with firsts in calculus (no amateurs need apply) write heds. A hed is a permutation of big letters, filling the space over a story. The spaces have to count. The meanings don't. If a hed meaus something, nobody reads the story.

Then there is something called make-up, which means arranging things on the page in a pretty fashion. The make-up people, realizing that no one reads the stuff, will hope that the more aesthetic will take the page home and frame it. They may chop the one good sentence in your story, but gee, it looks good!

We have nothing to offer but the Churchillian secretions, and perhaps a drunken orgy. Come join us, you fools.

Mongolian Mansions
Buildings Galore

"You are lost in the wilds of Outer Mongolia. It is June and help probably won't arrive until next summer. You have to build a shelter in which to survive the year using only the materials at hand and the tools you have brought in."

Such an adventure doesn't happen to many people very often, but to 75 first year Architectural students it was a major problem. Each of them had to design and build a model of a dwelling that would protect them from the vicissitudes of climate and animal life in which they had to survive for twelve months.

Mongolia was not the only location for the erection of their domiciles. There were various choices of climatic conditions and locales, some of them being Arizona, Israel, the Amazon, the Greenland Ice Cap, Patagonia and the Mackenzie River District.

No restrictions were placed on the student imaginations except that the structure they designed and built had to be permanent and capable of keeping its owner alive and relatively dry for a year. The basic architectural devices of the inhabitants of the districts could be incorporated into the design but the house had to be built to comply with the standards of a man imbued with the comfort of modern North American life.

Such a problem would tax the ingenuity of any twentieth century Robinson Crusoe but the young Architects, armed only with the requirements of some encyclopedical material about their particular district, created many extremely imaginative and livable dwellings that supplied the complex conveniences of a Western man while conforming to the climatic conditions of the area.

Some of the models showed an intense amount of imagination and skill. There were South Sea houses fit for Polynesian aristocracy, a shiny aluminum dwelling to ward off the intense rays of the Negev sun, functional wooden huts for the Mackenzie River district, a woven mat hut for the Philippine Islands, as well as various species of teepee and adobe huts.

A fascinating example of student ingenuity was a model of a house built in an Indo Chinese bamboo grove. The framework was composed of a raised platform supported by stumps attached to bamboo stalks that were still growing in their original habitat. The stalks were bent inwards, tied together at the top and thatched with leaves to achieve a cupola effect.

According to Mr. Wm. Bagnall, who was in charge of the project, this problem was an essay in fundamental architectural design. It was planned to show the functional importance of basic building and design.

In addition to constructing the model houses, the Architectural students were required to place them in the flora of their district and to submit construction reports and plans. They had to write research brochures on climate, food, and fauna. Ray Vanstone doesn't have too much on these fellows.

Local Cops Slept Well Chief Says

The rumour that the University police force had only four hours sleep last weekend was labelled as false by Alex Russel of the Superintendent's office.

Russel stated that the police of what he called the "University Protection Service" were not unusually busy for a weekend. He said that the police are always present at any university function on the campus at which they may prove themselves useful.

He also pointed out that students should not consider that the police are out against them, when actually they are provided to protect the students' rights and privileges if the need arises.

DRAMA REVIEW

Jupiter's Moon

Here was a bad beginning. This was Jupiter's first play of the season, Ring Round the Moon, and their first visit to the Royal Alexandra, and they were boring.

The play has been done once before in Toronto by the Vic Drama Society and it succeeded where the Jupiter production has failed because it captured some of the fantasy and good humour of the play. This might have been a good radio play (the voices were fine) but as a play it failed to come together. It did not project.

This is a comedy but there was only one truly comic actor out there and that was Dave Gardner who played the part of Patrice Bombells. Joy Lafleur (Diane Messerschmann) and Jane Mallet (Isabelle's mother) had their moments but they were working in a vacuum. Bruce Belfrage playing a crumbling buttler simply wasn't comic. Nor were Douglas Rain as Hugo, Josephine Barrington as Capulet, nor Larry McCance as Messerschmann. I don't mean that they didn't get laughs — they did, but they never extended the comedy beyond the saying of funny words; they did not build the characters required to fill out the obvious wit of their lines.

The central character is that of Hugo. He is a rake, quite incapable of love, but he has a rich imagination. He plays with people and emotional situations because he is not involved and he plays well enjoying the comedy. Douglas Rains does not fit the part physically. He bustles back and forth talking rapidly, haranguing one and all, but he fails to create a rake, a debonair man-of-the-world with whom two women are in love. As Frederick, the shy twin brother, he does very well but unfortunately Frederick is hardly more than a shadow of Hugo and the play in losing a strong Hugo loses its strength.

Toby Robbins as Isabella is beautiful but she doesn't radiate as she must; she plays passively a part that appears passive but actually is most active. Isabella falls in love twice in one evening and is the cynosure of all eyes at the grand ball. Where Hugo is the actie center of the play, Isabella is the passive center. She says little but must convey a lot. It is an extremely difficult part requiring an actress with great stage presence and technique like Julie Harris. Miss Robbin's failure as with the failure of most of the cast can be blamed on the lack of inner guts within the play as a whole. It never became anything more than a few individuals talking an unlikely language. Who is to blame? Leonard Cranford is the director, recently from England, and if he cast the play then his is the onus of responsibility. Essentially it was a miscast play but there were also certain directorial lapses.

Sydney Newman's set was well done and such things as lighting music, costumes, etc., seemed satisfactory.

This was a disappointing effort on the whole. The play had all the accessories but lacked imagination without which there is nothing. An ordinary play may succeed with competent acting but a fantasy like Restoration drama needs something more if it is to fly.

Ricky Arnold.

VENUS OBSERVED

More Astronomy

Venus observed seems to me a play concerned with faintly impossible people in a faintly impossible situation; an air of whimsical and fairy-tale unreality pervades the whole. The play, therefore, can be real comedy; it can also turn into music hall entertainment. I have nothing against music hall entertainment, but it should be wholehearted, not mixed with poetic drama.

Unfortunately it was the effect of music hall entertainment which was created by the New Play Society last night. They were, of course, working under the unhappy conditions of the Museum Theatre's minute stage which scarcely left them room to be impressive. This, however, was really not sufficient reason for pretending that the play is not written as poetry and delivering every word of it in prose. Their appearance was no more poetic than their speech — in costume, in stance, in attitude they were harshly and dream-shatteringly twentieth century. Time and space closed in on them — Fry's jokes seemed a little cheap; the improbability of situation and reaction became a puzzle instead of delight because the characters were so very probable — there were as many of them in the audience as on the stage. The only explanation is that Mr. Verney took one despairing look at the Museum stage and decided it did not offer room for poerty. Therefore his actors translated the play into tangibility.

Eminently successful at this was Christine Thomas as Jessie. Miss Thomas, with perfect ease and apparent enjoyment, gave us a delightful picture of a simple and warm-hearted woman devoid of malice and illusions.

Edward Holmes as the Duke of Altair would have been more convincing if he had known his lines more perfectly. He is a wry and handsome philosopher but he loses so much strength in his interpretations that he fails to hold his rightful position.

Jean Keller as Rosabel Fleming is dark and dramatic; often she overdoes it and produces nothing but harshness. In her final scene, however, her heartbroken grief comes closer to the unreal reality which is demanded of the actors in this play.

For Fry has left no room for harshnses. The jarring notes of reality are slurred over and only the gentle and the delightful remain. No disaster makes anyone lastingly unhappy; no bitter experience leaves anyone heartsore. Everything unpleasant, as Reedbeck says, is going to be pleasant. This, of course, is rank sentimentality; it is not true to life — but then it is not intended to be.

Nancy S. Donnell.

DALHOUSIE GAZETTE

"I think it's positively ridiculous," said Edith, thumbing angrily through a fashion magazine.

"What is it?" said I, meekly preparing to endure another of her patriotic outbursts.

"These —French — fashions — why, the hemlines are going up again! Haven't you read about it yourself" She showed me the mogazine, and I saw the usual impeccably dressed, parsnip-faced models in the usual impossible clothes.

"Oh, are they?" I enquired, and earnestly, "Some people haven't yet realized that they've gone down."

She glanced at me with patience.

"It's not whether they go up or down that I mind," she explained. "But why, by do they say 'fifteen inches from the floor'?"

"I suppose it's as good a height as any," I commented, leaning back in my chair.

"But don't you see?" she went on—"if you wear a dress fifteen inches from the floor it reaches the middle of your calf—if I do, it comes up to my knees! And supposing either of us wants to exchange high heels for low ones? Must our dresses have an adjustable hemline? It's not fo[r]

I had to agree with [her]. But I'm willing to bet my [l]ast short skirt that she's measuring off fifteen inches of leg right now and cutting her dresses to m[a]tch!

Illustrious Graduate Welcomed

Mr. T. A. Stone, a Toronto boy who has risen to the post of Canadian Ambassador to the Netherlands, paid a visit to Hart House yesterday. A schoolmate of Warden Joe McCulley, Mr. Stone graduated in 1 ,942with one of two Massey Fellowships. McCulley won the other. An active member of Hart House, Mr. Stone was secretary of the music committee for two years.

While a Canadian minister in Stockholm, Mr. Stone helped arrange the unveiling of a plaque for Nicholas Ignatieff, the late Warden.

Now home on leave, he hopes to return to The University for the Sunday Evening Concert of December 6.

Bob Gill Said

Ado Confused

Owing to a dastardly conspiracy between the Central Ontario Drama League and Mr. Robert Gill, the Dramatic societies of Trinity and Victoria Colleges have banded together to produce a scintillating version of Shakespeare's famous "Much Ado About Nothing".

The two societies were faced with the problems of date, finances and lack of talent. "If we had all gone ahead separately," said Reg. Southgate (II Trinity) there would have been four full dramatic productions by U.C., Vic, Trinity and St. Mike's. "Last year Trinity was only about thirty dollars ahead." There has also been a rumour that Vic. emerged with a net loss of $1.50. Southgate added that the Central Ontario Drama League had obtained Hart House during the time when Trinity usually stages its performance, and had taken the best three weeks of the season. He also commented sourly that Bob Gill was cutting in on the talent.

A major reason for the switch in Trinity's policy was because Herbert Whittaker felt that he had worked too long with the one group (he has directed the Trinity plays for several years) but consented to direct the play if both Trinity and Vic took part.

This was the main reason that Vic amalgamated for this year, said Rick Arnold(IV Vic), past-vice-president of the club. "We wanted to get under Mr. Whittaker, and it would have been to expensive to have him for us alone." He remarked that a single club never has quite enough talent, and is usually forced to put on "a rather scratchy performance".

It only remains now to be seen if the new combination of Trinity, that stronghold of old England and the 'Old Ontario Strand" pioneer spirit of Vic will work such wonders with Shakespeare, as did Dr. Tyrone Guthrie and Canada's Stratford-on-Avon.

Canada Savings Bring Security

"Everyone has something to save for" is the keynote of the present offering of the Bank of Canada's Eighth Series of Canada Savings Bonds. Savings of past years invested in Victory Bonds and Canada Savings Bonds have been a boon to many thousands of Canadian citizens in terms of personal security.

Cherished plans for the future, such as a new home or special education for children are predicted on the accumulation of adequate savings. Also, the purchase of Canada Savings Bonds provides protection for the individual against emergencies.

An added inducement to invest in the Eighth Series of Canada Savings Bonds is that this series will bear interest at a full rate of three and three-quarters percent (3¾ percent).

Sidney Smith,
President.

Full facilities have been provided for all members of the Staff of the University to subscribe to Canada Savings Bonds, either for payment in full, or by the Payroll Savings Plan. I would emphasize that this series will bear interest at a full rate of three and three-quarters percent (3¾ percent).

C. E. Higginbottom,
Bursar.

Ask U. of T. To Cornell Weekend

Cornell University in Ithaca, New York, has again invited U. of T. to send representatives to their annual College Exchange Weekend, Nov. 12-15. Both staff and students are invited to this weekend of tours, parties, and discussions. Last year the visiting Toronto students attended a symposium on "Academic Freedom," chaired by the Dean of Arts of Cornell, Paul O'Leary.

Application forms for the weekend are now available in the S.A.C. office and must be completed by Oct. 27.

Staff Note

If you are vitally interested in the drinking habits of students, and intend to do something about it, light (and one or two other things) will be poured on the subject at the (pardon the expression) Varsity Party. This mild effort at madness will take place this Friday, Oct. 23. The scene of the crime will be announced later.

FROS Welcomes Overseas Students

A Committee for Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS) which has its headquarters on the Toronto campus presented a brief to the Conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students last week asking for co-operation in its attempts to set up committees in the other universities in this country. The NFCUS representatives voted their unanimous support of the plan.

The purpose of FROS is to welcome to Canada students from other countries, and to provide opportunities for mutual understanding and appreciation. The Organization attempts to make contacts with students before they leave their home countries, and to facilitate their entry into Canada, travel to their place of study, admission to their course of study and placement in living quarters.

Association between the foreign students and Canadians on the campi and in the home is promoted by FROS. An exchange of ideas and cultural traditions is the aim. In Toronto it has been helped by some very popular lunch hours held at the organization's headquarters on St. George Street.

A survey conducted in 1948 showed that 1500 overseas students study in Canada annually. It was found that in no centre was there any organized or planned attempt to introduce them to the community and Canadian institutions. Their needs were studied, and it was ascertained through correspondence with Church and government groups the types of services that the Organization should offer.

In May 1950 a constitution was drawn up, and a framework was formed to begin active work on behalf of the overseas students. Many groups signified their interest and readiness to co-operate, including the "Y", the IODE, The Canadian Council of Churches, WUS, SCM, NFCUS and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

The FROS plan is that a Community Committee, consisting of representatives from all the groups supporting the organization, undertakes the introduction of the students to their respective communities. The Organization is now working on an annual budget of $2,500.00, but the urgency of the work requires considerable expansion. The Department of External Affairs has agreed to distribute to all students receiving student visas to Canada, the orange folder of FROS.

Most Universities in Canada have been visited by representatives of the National Office, and in most, persons or committees are working with overseas students. NFCUS has pledged its support to the expansion of these committees and their activities.

Vic's Seat Is Sighted

Light has been shed on the mysterious disappearance of the speaker's chair from Victoria's Alumni Hall. "We have definite proof of the whereabouts of the chair and retaliation will be meted out," threatened Sam Murphy, president of the Victoria College Debating Society, today. "This unprovoked act of aggression will not go unpunished."

The speaker's chair was removed from the College over the week-end. "We have sat in this chair for 95 years" claims Sam, "and we are prepared to fight to restore it to its historic site."

UN – SECURITY...

We The People

Internat. Conscience

By MARGARET MUNNOCH

In any discussion of the merits and demerits of the U.N., the first question which comes to mind is: what is the U.N.? We often condemn the U.N. either for the things it has done, or the things, (in the opinion of the speaker) it should have done, without considering what the term U.N. means.

For the U.N. as a political entity with power to reach decisions and act upon them does not exist, but is dependent upon the goodwill and co-operation of its member nations. Each of the sixty member nations is sovereign, and does not delegate any of its authority to the U.N. as an international organization. This retention of sovereignty is based on the belief that each nation must be free to act in its own special interests.

While each nation retains this necessary safeguard, it can and does offer voluntary support of U.N. resolutions. For example: As of January 1952, 42 member countries and four non-member countries had offered assistance in the collective security action in Korea — the first of its kind in the history of international organizations.

The strength of the U.N. which appears to rest on the doubtful basis of voluntary co-operation lies in the knowledge that peace is possible only through collective security. No nation alone can guarantee the security of its people. Politically the whole world is one community.

The purely political aspect deals with maintaining peace rather than building peace. The former is dealt with in the Security Council and the General Assembly, the latter in the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, the specialized agencies and technical assistance. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Genocide Convention, the Tal Valley irrigation project, the development of Libya as an independant sovereign nation, the loans, providing essential capital to under-developed nations through the world all illustrate the practical and constructive work of the U.N.

Yet why should we take an active interest in the U.N.? Because in the final analysis it is public opinion which sanctions or censures U.N. policy. The Charter begins, "We the peoples of the United Nations:" the compelling factor is the moral force exerted by the opinions of citizens throughout the world.

Canadian College Students United Nations Club Guests At Caledon Hills Weekend

Delegates from 10 Canadian universities will be the guests of the Toronto UN Club at Caledon Hills Farm on the weekend of October 30. The weekend will take the form of speaker meetings followed by question and answer periods and discussion groups.

Highlighting the weekend will be two speakers from the United Nations in New York, Mr. A. Salsamendi, Department of Public Information and Mr. John Lassoe, Advisor to the Collegiate Council for the UN They will speak on Colonialism, Nationalism and the UN on the campus.

Other guest speakers from Toronto will be Marvin Gelber, Chairman UN association on Canada and Technical Assistance and Mr. Tony Frisch, Director Toronto Branch, UNA.

Representatives from UBC, McGill, McMaster, Queen's, Assumption, Sir George Williams, Ottawa University, Carleton College, Western and OAC will attend the Conference as well as members of the Toronto Club.

For their part in the work project to which each group that uses Caledon contributes, the UN club will lay weeping tile for drains and build a concrete fence. Delegates will be entertained by a square dance and marshmallow roast on Saturday night.

Canada and the UN

Martin Closes UN Week

Minister of Health and Welfare, Paul Martin will speak to the UN club on "Canada and the UN" at 4.15 p.m. on Friday in Cartwright Hall.

Mr. Martin was Canadian delegate to both sessions of the first general assembly of the United Nations and in 1952 was appointed permanent delegate for Canada to the general assembly.

HON. PAUL MARTIN

In an address to the Ottawa branch of the United Nations Association, last February, he said "The UN is a symbol of our conviction that men can meet together and reason together, and find common ground for co-operation. If the United Nations — or some such world agency — cannot succeed, then peace is impossible."

A graduate of the University of Toronto, he was for two years a lecturer at St. Michael's College and has been National Minister of Health and Welfare since 1946.

Annual Meet For UN Club Down South

About 30 students from Toronto will go on the annual U.N. club trip to the United Nations headquarters in New York on the weekend of Nov. 12 to 15.

As well as a general tour of the U.N. building the group will see sessions of the General Assembly and the Secretariat and any other committee which are in session.

The club has arranged interviews with a number of delegates which will include Canadian delegate L. B. Pearson and Krishna, head of the Indian delegation. They will also have the opportunity of meeting students from American universities who will be attending sessions of the United Nations the same weekend.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

A quick look at the Intercollegiate schedule will tell you that the Blues will be enjoying a busman's holiday this weekend. At least that's what any fool could plainly see. Most followers of the fold would probably jump up and down for great glee since it means a respite in the continuum of football handovers and because their football heroes will have a chance to properly rest their aches and pains.

On the surface, things would seem to be looking up for the stalwarts of the old Varsity but all may not be rosy as one might think it. You only have to go back in history as far as last November to find enough evidence to cure you of thinking that the Blues should have a day off.

As all but freshies will remember the charges of Coach Masterson were busting along in first place come the first of last November. They had tied one game and won three. Included in those three wins were two over the Gaels of Kingston. The second of the two Queen's wins was a particularly bruising effort which will probably be remembered by the people that pay the doctor's bills over at the Athletic Wing.

So everybody was happy over the possibility of the Blues having two weeks to rest their limbs in preparation for the final two games of the season, one with McGill in Montreal and one with the Mustangs here in Toronto. What happened in those two games is sad to relate. The Blues seemed to falter and fail under the deadly throwing arm of Geof Crain down in Montreal and they never recovered. When it was over Toronto had lost to McGill and Western by the scores of 17-14 and 8-1 respectively.

How anybody could rationalize those two losses was really a puzzle. Everything had been in the favor of the Blues. They were undefeated for the season, the schedule was in their favour since it was up to Western to beat Varsity for the Yates, and they had two weeks of rest under their belts to build up energy for the finale. So the only logical thing that could have upset their applecart was the layoff.

Usually a coach tries to build a team up, physically AND mentally to a peak to carry them over the rough spots. To do this, there should be no let-down in the efforts of the players. Then how in anybody's good name could a coach be expected to keep a football team at a psychological peak when he has to contend with a two-week lay off.

So it looks like we are now in roughly the same spot as last year. The Blues are in second spot and shaping up very nicely for the rest of the year. True they have to beat Western here on Nov. 7th to make a tie for first, assuming that both teams win all their remaining games. But once again they are confronted with the two-week layoff before moving into Montreal.

It's surprising that the powers that be didn't follow the old adage, "once bitten, twice shy" and plan an exhibition tilt for the 24th of October. An exhibition would probably have been just enough to keep the Blues up both physically and mentally. Certainly Coach Masterson would have been in favour of an exhibition. Last year Masterson and the players were in favour of an exhibition game with one of the Ivy College teams from the other side of Pat McCarran's barrier. Why nothing was done about arranging such a game is anybody's guess.

If there is a repeat of last year's stupidity let's hope that someone in the Athletic Office has an uneasy conscience.

END NOTES: In reply to someone in the Blue and White who thinks he is a publicity agent we would like to point out that it was our Jim Proudfoot and your Varsity Sports Editor that informed Coach Bob Masterson on the Thursday night that the weekend was in celebration of University College's centennial and also in a half hearted way a Homecoming weekend. Masterson was surprised that it was both a Centennial weekend and Homecoming weekend, and in view of the fact that the Toronto Varsity football team was invited to appear at the Pep Rally reflects the type of publicity the weekend got. Frankly it fell flat on its face just as the Pep Rally did. And there is no comparison between Western and Varsity Pep Rallies. The Western variety doesn't need dances to make them a success, which they invariably are. Besides Western has a Pep Rally for each home game. The best that the combined efforts of the SAC and Blue and White can produce is the poor excuse for a Pep Rally that was held last Friday night.

Varsity Runners 'Strongest Ever' At McGill To Bring Home Title

By JIM PROUDFOOT

If coach Hal Brown and the University of Toronto track and field team return from Montreal as jauntily as they left for the Quebec metropolis yesterday, they'll be bringing the intercollegaite championsaip home with them. Brown and his boys were quite confident of regaining the college title they held for five consecutive seasons before losing it to McGill in 1951 and Western last year. The meet takes place this afternoon at McGill.

"This is the best team we've had in the five years I've been coach," was Hal Brown's reply to inquiries as to Toronto's chances. Some of his less reserved charges retorted "We'll eat 'em" . . . "It's a cinch" and similar unassuming remarks.

The confidence may be well-founded. On paper, the Varsity team looks like the best aggregation of tracksters to represent the U. of T. in many seasons. In at least four events, Varsity has the top junior performers in Canada. That's in the 120 and 220-yard hurdles, where record-breaker Norm Williams runs, and the 220 and 440-yard dashes, the specialties of Skule sophomore Dick Harding. They're considered good bets to earn ten points each for Varsity.

Another chap who is being relied upon heavily is Bob Hamilton, last year's interfaculty champion, who backs Williams up in the two hurdles events. Williams, this year's intramural leader, is Hamilton's running mate in the broad jump.

Big Pete Watson, the Victoria College running machine has recovered from the sprained ankle he suffered in winning the interfaculty mile last week and will be in the mile and half-mile today at McGill.

Co-Captain Dave Preston runs the three-mile race along with a former champion Herb Tilson and the other captain, Larry Yeigh, is Varsity's entrant in the 100 yards. In the field events, Juri Vrzesnevsk will represent the U. of T. in the javelin, shot put and discus events. George Stulac was first choice in the pole vault as was Barry West in the high jump.

Despite this imposing list of names, it appears that the Blues will have plenty of opposition from the McGill team. At McGill's intramural meet last week, big Lionel Whitman tossed the discus 133 feet, 7½ inches for a new meet record and then propelled the shot 48 feet, 1¾ inches which was some four feet better than the existing intercollegiate mark. Whitman is college champ for both events. Football star George Klein will be a big threat in the 100 and 220-yard dashes. One event that looks to be all McGill's is the high jump where their R. Briere has cleared as high as six feet, two inches

The defending champion Western team has lost Bob Bazos, the field events man of Upper Can. College and Varsity fame. Their biggest claim to points is expected to be team captain Bruce Waller, one of the nation's leading milers.

Lineman No. 31 That's McMurtry

It seems a safe guess that of the large numbers of people who attend college football games, a big majority never notice the men who play on the wingline after they are introduced before the games. To them, the chaps who play as such mysterious positions as left middle, inside right and centre secondary are just a series of names, men who pile up into a mixed-up heap on every play and don't seem to accomplish very much.

On the other hand, there must be a fair number of fans who know the game of football well enough to watch the play along the line. These are the people who will know that Roy McMurtry,a double-edged personality, is one of the steadier, more valuable players on the Varsity football team, let alone the Varsity wingline where he plays at tackle.

'..All winter, big Roy—he's 6 ft 2 inches and weighs 205 pounds —is a soft-spoken, glasses-wearing Modern History student at Trinity College. But on Saturdays during the football season, he becomes a rugged and fiercely competitive athlete and at the same time a highly effective one. Last season, he failed to make the intercollegiate all-star team only because there are only two guards on the team. This year, he has moved to the tackle or middle position to offset the loss of Dunc Ellis. The change doesn't appear to have made much difference to him for he's blasting away at opposing linemen just as vigorously as ever.

ROY McMURTRY

McMurtry came to Varsity in 1950 from St. Andrew's College and spent the fall with the Intermediate Blues. The next year he moved up to the senior team for keeps. This is the last year in college ball for 21-year-old Roy, unless he decides on a post-graduate course here. He is serving along with kicker Al Haig as co-captain of this year's team.

That's number 31, for those people referred to in the first paragraph.

Trinity Gals Are Winners Shade Fizz-Edders 4-2

P.H.E. III's suffered defeat yesterday afternoon when they played St. Hilda's in a three-inning noon-hour match on Trinity Field. Ever since pitcher Beryl Lewis was laid off with a slipped dik, Phyedder have been unable to gather together their old strength. Shirley Roberts left first base to take over the pitcher's mound for Beryl in yesterday' match.

In the opener, Helen Bienozs singled and later scored on a fumbled infield fly. Janet Wright started the batting for the Saints with a homer. Then with two on, Scotty Matthews followed with another to up the tally 4-1 for St. Hilda's at the end of the first.

There was no scoring in the second. Heather McPherson of the Saint, and Vera Boyko for P.H.E. did real fielding work to put both sides away in short order.

The only run in the third was off Shirley Roberts' single which brought Helen Bienozs home to make the final tally 4-2 for the saintly ladies of St. Hilda's.

The only other game played yesterday in the Women's Interfaculty Softball loop was between Meds and St. Mike's. It was one of the most painful exhibitions we have ever had the opportunity of watching. Slow to get started, it dragged through three long one-sided innings to end with a score of 21-0 for St. Mike's.

Double For Soccer Blues Macmen Topped 8-0, 3-1

The Senior Soccer Blues played McMaster yesterday afternoon. The rest of the story can almost be told by listing the scores which were eight in number, all for the Blues.

Karl Tamberg, playing his usual "alert" game, slipped through to give the Blues two quick goals. Shortly after he left the game through injuries. In the second half he was joined in the injury department by Ron Finch the left winger.

In the last half of the game the Toronto team opened wide to outclass the disorganized Macmen. Atucha literally blasted a looper into the Hamilton net from thirty-five feet out. Then Rod Green sounded off from right wing with two goals to make the score 5-0.

Coach Auld tried an experiment, shifting the two full-backs to the forward line and Wally Eze came up with two goals. Number 8 was chalked up by the hard-working centre half Ron Williams.

The intermediates, after an uncertain season opener against O.A.C., have been showing a strong passing attack. Yesterday's tussle with McMaster produced a 3-1 win for the JayVees.

Veteran centre forward Sal Liz increased his season total to 7 when he sand a well-earned goal in the Mac net. Later in the first half he set the ball on the goal crease and Wood tapped it home.

McMaster hit a bit of good luck when a corner kick by Allison bounced off Blues' Jack Munday into his own net. Jack made up for this mistake by playing a fine aggressive game at centre half.

The Blues' third tally again saw Liz figuring when he made the payoff pass to Wood.

Despite passport trouble the Senior Blues head for the Buffalo State Teacher College this Saturday to play an exhibition soccer match against their annual rivals.

Intercollegiate Tennis Gals Tackle Gaels

The finals of the Women's Intramural Tennis Tournament were completed yesterday in fine sunny weather. The winners make up the Intercollegiate team. They are Mary Lynn Boyes, Anne Innis, Ann Kilgour, and Dianna Walker. This week-end, the team is off to Queen's to compete in the Intercol loop. Mary Lynn Boys and Ann Innis are playing singles, and Di Walker with Ann Kilgour make up the doubles.

DON ALLEN

Macdonald College, Que., Oct. 15 (CUP) — More chickens than students and more turkeys than professors arrive on the McGill scene each academic year.

But the turnover in poultry is even faster than in Joe College freshmen—or so statistics of McGill's Department of Poultry Husbandry here tend to indicate.

For new animal and plant varieties that will change the eating habits of years to come are being developed and improved through research in breeding and nutrition at the agricultural colleges and experimental stations of today. And so it is with poultry, a field in which a forty-five year tradition of research and development is being continued on McGill's Ste. Anne de Bellevue campus.

The Department of Poultry Husbandry offers academic courses in the first, third and fourth years of the Agricultural degree syllabus as well as certain practical courses. Graduate work in poultry nutrition and genetics can lead to McGill's degree of Master of Science.

By-products of such endeavours are the provision of poultry produce to meet virtually all needs of the College dining hall and to stock a small sales division where eggs and meat are offered to the community. Macdonald's traditional chicken barbecues also draw on the reserves of the College flock.

Four decades' theoretical and practical research have won McGill's Poultry Husbandry Department international repute. Present efforts are viewed by Professor W. A. Maw, Department Chairman, as being part of a three-fold program:

Experiments in genetics and breeding deal with the development and study of various types of poultry with regard to size, shape of body and rate of growth. Considerable cross-breeding is at present being done, with particular emphasis on the development of new varieties of turkeys for earlier marketing. Nutritional research deals with the relative feed value of various field crops and the use of radioactive elements to measure "the relative usage of similar inert minerals by poultry."

Investigation of practical applications of vitamins and antibiotics to poultry raising is going on "at all times" in the department.

"Pasture trials"—long-term project in poultry nutrition—involve the testing of various species of grasses and clovers, including alfalfa. Early genetic research at Macdonald first led to the observation that male influence is dominant in body type, a discovery that aided breeding work throughout the poultry industry.

The Macdonald poultry plant normally raises 5,000 chickens each season, according to Dr N. Nikolaiczuk, Associate Professor of Poultry Husbandry, maintaining a flock of 1,000 to 1,500 layers throughout the year. Five to six hundred turkeys are raised annually and a small breeding flock is retained.

University education aims at a healthy adjustment to environment, at the ability to find peace and contentment in the midst of turmoil. This man is educated. Those who, in desperation, pick up The Varsity in lectures, will envy him. Those who are able to sleep, despite the noises of the lecturer, will never see him.

Saskatoon, Oct. 9 CUP — University of Saskatchewan dances in Saskatoon are to be equipped with Commissioners who will "maintain order and enforce social regulations." The U of S Council Committee on Student Social Activities and the Social Directorate issued a statement on Oct. 8 regarding the "clean-up" of downtown university dances.

The statement defined the "objectionable behaviour" which has plagued dances as "causing damage to dance halls and ballrooms, breaking glasses, open drinking, rioting etc." Bob Plaxton, social director of the Council Committee and co-author of the statement told Saskatewan students that "Downtown proprietors have warned us that if behaviour of this sort occurs this year they will not permit varsity dances to be held on their premises.

The problem was discussed by the joint committees who decided that the only solution would be to have members of the Corps of Commissionaires to "attend all social functions where any misconduct is likely to occur."

The statement added that "these men (commissionaires) are not policemen. They will act only on orders from students and faculty."

Symposium Is Planned

Scientists from Canada and the United States will join in a symposium on protein metabolism at the University of Toronto late thes month, Dr. E. W. McHenry, professor of nutrition in the School of Hygiene, has announced.

The symposium will be held in the Wallberg Building on Oct. 30, and discussion will cover recent developments in the treatment of pernicious anemia, infectious diseases and other problems related to metabolism in health and disease. The School of Graduate Studies and the Department of Public Health Nutrition of the university are joint sponsors.

Hope or Hindrance

By MURRAY RUBIN

Is the United Nations, as some have termed it, "the strongest hope of peace for man," or is it a "debating society" that talks and talks, accomplishing nothing?

There are those who claim that nations can live in isolation in a world of complex relationships and that security can be achieved within the borders of one nation.

There are those that retort that this is one world, inter dependent and designed to work together or be destroyed. And they believe that the United Nations is the organization in which this harmony can and must be accomplished.

But with this notion remains the uneasy knowledge that the same belief came to nothing once before in the experiment called the League of Nations.

Nations, like men, act from self-interest. It is a fair question for us to ask, "What is the United States getting out of the UN?"

"The UN got the United States involved in a Korean war and then left the U.S. holding the bag," some Americans state.

Believers in the United Nations state that President Truman took the decision to throw American military weight against the aggressor in Korea hours before the Security Council met that Sunday in June. They say the UN transformed the Korean situation from a war involving the United States and the Communists to a war involving the United Nations and the Communists.

There are two definite sides to the argument. Who, then, is wrong — isolationist or advocator of the United Nations?

The painstaking, undramatic, labourious UN process: talk, open debate, concillation, mediation, conferences, more talk, more meeting, resolutions, scolding, pleading — all eight years of it may make it difficult for the student to get a clear picture of what the UN has accomplished.

He may not be sure just what side of the argument he is on, or why or how he has received the opinions that he now has.

But this is a situation that calls for more than half-way knowledge.

Oct. 18-24 is United Nations Week. A campus and town committee is working to inform you about the United Nations. Get the facts, study the and make your decision.

(Reprinted from The Daily Athenaeum, West Virginia University).

Doctor Kinsey Rides Again Will He End Social Work ?

(Reprinted in part from the University of Saskatchewan "Sheaf".)

Who cares these days about the Korean peace conference of Princess Margaret's activities after dark. A composite Freud and Darwin named Kinsey has given sex its greatest publicity since father Dionne proved that he needed advice rather than encouragement.

Evidently sex is now everybody's business. Most people have some, at any rate.

Six thousand American women from all walks of life and places of business, recently took down their inhibitions, left their television sets, and unblushingly related nasty little stories of infidelity, and libertine pursuits to Dr. Kinsey or a fellow-inquisitor.

Kinsey and company fired personal question after personal question at these tattle-tale ladies, with as much delicacy as a heavily buttocked and bosomed nurse asking a craven first-day patient if his bowels had moved.

The surprising thing is that this PPCR (Post-Puberty Cumulative Record) was compiled with answers both honest and interesting. Now why would these demure creatures turn stool pigeon on the rest of their kind? Why would questions dealing with today's great field of the taboo be answered?

Marital life and pre-marital activity are seldom, I'm sure, discussed over bon-bons and tea. Surely our ladies must have hoped that their candid retorts would enable a new science of the boudoir to unearth wholesome and worthy scientific data. The may well have believed that the "Bobbsey Twins", and "Anne of Green Gables" prepared the only imperfectly for life after age fourteen.

Again, in the secular, almost medicinal confessions used by Kinsey, the girls may have been caught with their garter-belts down and inadvertently blurted truth which could cause our campus embryonic curate to upbraid the bad and the beautiful.

The important question is what can be done with our new knowledge. The facts alone are worthless.

Only one of the countless ways of using Kinsey's data would be in a program of better marriages for all. Saskatchewan social workers, usually young things with little knowledge and less experience now visit the homes of men and women whose matrimonial felicity has been bruised by outrageous fortune and the odd child. The worker offers some text-book advice (usually a satire on S. Leacock), leaves a dole, or promise of one, a basket of goodies. and a (censored).

Now Kinsey and his startling statistics may be able to do away with many of our social workers by destroying, or at least mitigating, some of the marital troubles which now keep social workers Florence Nightingale-ing it about.

Helpful Hint

"He wouldn't keep you awake if you used earplugs."

We Can Make It

Every year during United Nations week the question of the usefulness of our international police force in New York comes to mind. One is prompted to glance once at the record and once at the problems at hand, and shun away muttering, "Impossible".

It is so very easy to sit back and say that the United Nations, over eight years, has not found a complete solution to any major crisis. For the same reason it is just as easy to completely forget the many episodes which have found some form of working agreement in the centre on the East River.

The UN is the first democratic organization which has been set up and has successfully carried on some form of world government for a period of time. Like any other ruling body, it must have the confidence of every person it purports to represent. In turn, this means that every citizen of the United Nations must fully appreciate not only its faults, but also its accomplishments.

At this point it appears that many people are backing away from discussion of UN problems. Too many are only able to plead, "Don't fall apart now" and quake to their very cores lest their trusted leaders lose a slender foothold. What does it gain us to even think a crisis is impossible. Earnest efforts on the part of every individual concerned to understand the attempts being made to save his own skin, no matter what country he be from, would give our delegates the assurance they were on the right track.

Keen interest in a delegate's activities would result in a broader understanding of the right others have for a spirit of nationalism in their respective states. With the populace trying to understand the other side's point of view, United Nations' arch-enemies would be able to get down off their high horse and talk with the interest of others concerned first.

United Nations has been plugging along for eight years. We have long ago passed the stage where we cling to the innocent hope of a New Thing. Today, for the first time in the history of the world we have come to the point world politics are not in the hands of a few, as much as in the hands of the people who support the few. It seems about time we recognized the fact, and tried our own hand at the things we are most afraid of.

Complete Absolution

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Sir, this following letter is meant to absolve (1) Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity,

(2) Society for Cruelty to Engineers of all complicity in the matter of the transfer of Whitney Hall's plaque to "Skule." However, it well behooves us to repudiate any of the charges leveled by these noteworthy organizations at those dastardly cads who shelter themselves under the general pseudonym of Engineers.

The plaque incident is but a mild episode compared to what is to be. The Whitney Hall excursion only climaxes the long and violent succession of blatant insults which every respectable faculty on campus has suffered at the hands of these engineering roustabouts. Unless the saner students of SPS can prevail upon their less civilized brethren to cease from this latest series of outrages and lapse back into some semblance of respectability, we see no alternative but to relieve Skule of their prized cannon, the right possession of which they have lost due to their scandalous behaviour.

With all sincerity, we remain,

U.S. Foreign Policy

Morality vs. Expediency

The writer, a final year Pharmacy student, in this article, feels that in dealing with Israel, the United States has forgotten not only the Monroe Doctrine, but also the foreign policy she decided upon after the Second World War.

By MURRAY RUBIN

The moral implications of right and wrong seem to have very little place in the thinking of governments and the people who run them. When a state files claim to a certain territory or demands retribution for a wrong inflicted upon her, she draws support, not from countries who feel she is morally or legally just, but from those who find that political expediency warrants their aid.

SINCE POLITICS PLAYS such a part in determining right and wrong and since it is such a vacillating factor, it follows quite logically that what is right and wrong, could very well change drastically within the span of a year or even a few months.

On December of 1823, the US a new country and not too stable, it being only approximately 50 years after the revolution, issued the Monroe doctrine, which in part stated that the U.S. would declare any attempt on the part of the great European powers to extend their systems to any portion of the American continent as dangerous to the welfare and safety of the country.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO LOOK too far back to see that China, a new country having just ended a civil war might have had justification in being afraid that the U.S., a foreign power, might try to use her influence to undermine from Korea, the present regime. It was not to China's advantage to have this thorn in her side. The Monroe Doctrine could very well apply to China in this case, yet the U.S. immediately branded her an aggressor for doing something she might have had to do herself a number of years back.

Trieste advances the same situation. The U.S. at the end of the second world war was quite content to give this city to Italy without further justification than the fact that she was anti-communist and Yugoslavia was a member of the Communist union. When Yugoslavia broke with Russia she back-tracked in her original decision. This was done in order to satisfy the Nationalistic aims of Tito. Now the US has again changed her mind but as yet the political reasoning behind her move has not come to night.

JUST RECENTLY ISRAEL was condemned by Britain and the US for her attack on Jordan. Brigadier John Glubb, a Britisher, and leader of Jordan's Arab army said, and I quote the Globe and Mail, "The Palestine war may burst forth anew unless the Big Three and the UN halt Israel's military actions."

In the same article in the very last paragraph he acknowledges the fact that Israel had been provoked by infiltration from the Jordan side. Yet he states that the Israelis must deal with such infiltration within their own country and not by military excursions across the border in defiance of the 1949 armistice.

BEING A MILITARY MAN, he knows that this type of defence is costly both in money and lives and public pressure would bear on the Government to act. The same act, and under the jurisdiction of the same treaty, yet it was wrong for Israel and rightly for Jordan from this man's viewpoint and apparently the viewpoint of the British Government.

The Russians condemned American Witchhunts and unjust treatment of negroes yet she herself was guilt of gross iniquities at the Prague trials and of spreading anti-semitism throughout the eastern world.

IN EACH CASE the legal or moral right of each country or people was never considered. It was simply a case of countries linking up with each other and condemning all actions of the opposite side as wrong. This type of situation is understandably quite evident, but nevertheless it is morally wrong and intolerable. The success of the United Nations depends wholly on countries coming into council with open minds free to act for the interest of the world as a whole and not just for their own selfish returns.

Al, Old Pal

Dear Old Friend Al—

Well, Al, I seen that football game I was telling you about in my last letter to you which was some time ago. I'm very sorry but you know how a fellow gets so rapped up in his schoolwork. Believe you me Al this here football is the craziest doggone game I ever seen and I didn't enjoy it a bit.

First thing you go to this place they call a stadium, I think it is. Anyway it's not finished yet for they don't have a roof built on it or anything and instead of seats they just got planks for you to sit on. But it was a pretty nice day and anyway I dont mind a few hardships. You know me Al.

They start off by one jasper he kicks the ball (it ain't even round) and then one guy on the other side he grabs it and starts to run like a rabbit with it. I guess that was against the rules though for a bunch of the other players run after him and knock him down and jumped on him. It was something fierce but they kept on doing that until one guy busts away and runs all the way down the field. Then a bunch of girls run out on the edge of the field and start in like they was drunk or something. They yell and jump around and turn somersaults but all the people in the crowd yell at them until finally they go back and sit down.

Well it kept on that way and I couldn't make head or tail of it until finally somebody shoots a gun off and the players all run off the field. I say I guess the game is over and start to get up when the guy beside me says — Why you poor boob its only half time and laughs. I was going to punch him nose (you know me Al nobody laughs at me) but then I smelt his breath and seen he was drinking and not responsible for what he was saying so I decided not to do nothing.

The next part of the game was about the same and I still dont understand and then I bought a paper. They cost five cents but I dont mind once in a while and those dumb sportswriters the way they said was nothing like the game at all.

Write if you get a chance Al old pal,

Your old pal,
Ed.

Ticket Sales New Project For SHARE

This year SHARE one of the most active committees on the campus, is again under way. The Student Help to Asian Relief and Education committee is one you will be hearing aboot often. Last year the committee arranged for an Indian goods sale, the proceeds for which went towards a stodent seminar to India last summer under the planning of the World University Servile (WUS). Other income was derived from an annual band concert, sports films, and football parking.

One of their main activities was the sale of tickets for the appearance last October of tenor Roland Hayes. This year the Finnish Consul is letting SHARE sell 500 tickets to the concert on November 16th of the Helsinki Male Chorus. The Chorus will arrive at noon on November 16th and be welcomed a Convacation Hall. That night they will sing in Massey Hall.

Anyone wishing further information should phone Barry Cook at KI-1370.

HIJINKS HIT NEW HIGH

Skulemen's Plaque-ing Is Lacking

A second Skule plaque disappeared from the side of the Engineering building. The thieves left the following message scrawled in yellow chalk on the red bricks: "We are holding your plack for ransome. We will notify you later. Ha! Ha!" Signed MA "X".

Doug Christie, I SPS, said he did not know who had taken the plaques, but he expected to find them soon. He also gave two messages for the zealous Premedsmen who wrote to the editor in yesterday's Varsity. He said "If they want to get the Skule Cannon they will have to tr ay lot harder than they did last Saturday." Christie gave them this hint, "The combination of the safe is changed, and the Cannon is not there anyway."

The Pi Lambda Phi fraternity say they have seen neither of the two plaques.

CCF Club Blasts U.K. Government

The British government was condemned for allowing capitalist exploitation in British Guiana by the University of Toronto CCF club, at a meeting held yesterday afternoon in Victoria College.

A resolution, proposed by Bruce Batten II U.C., which strongly condemned the British action in recent weeks, was defeated after a heated debate. Al. Borovy, I Law, said "Let's re-affirm our principles before we go ahead and attack Britain when we don't have enough information."

The University of Toronto CCF Club further calls upon the Canadian government of investigate and curb the part played by Canadian Corporations in this exploitive process

The motion went on to say what it condemned the British Government "for allowing private exploitation of the bauxite, sugar and other resources of the colony to proceed to a point at which public protest was clearly provoked."

In conclusion it stated, "the University of Toronto CCF Club expresses it's support for th aim of economic and national liberation sought by the Guianese, no matter how much their endeavour to attain these objectives may or may not have been corrupted by Communist leadership."

Elected to the CCF provincial convention were Ron Heller, II U.C. and John Lee II U.C. as delegates, and as alternates Bill Grant, II U.C., and Sam Claskey III U.C. The purpose of the convention is to elect a new provincial leader for the CCF.

Bill Grant II U.C was elected first vice-president and Allan Borovy was elected second vice-president in charge of political action. Their election was necessitated by the resignation of the previous holders of these positions.

Sam Murphy, IV Vic., holds the speaker's chair as he and several other Vicmen carry it back to Alumnae Hall from the Croft Chapter House in UC, where it was being exhibited. The chair was stolen over the weekend from Vic.

Victoria-Trinity Feud Campus Peace Threat — Uneasy Truce

Victoria College now has its Speaker's chair back in its usual spot in Alumni Hall, but Trinity is still recovering from the repercussions of its hi-jacking hijinx.

A collection is underway at Trinity to collect the sum of $75.00 to pay for the repairs necessary in the Tower Common Room. Two Vic men, Ken Cork, Victoria College Union President, and Alex Langford, IV Vic., were locked in the room overnight.

Things are now quietening down after the reciprocal raids staged Tuesday night by Vic and Trinity men. Victoria claimed its Speaker's chair from the UC Croft Chapter House yesterday noon hour. It had been placed there as "a donation from the great grand-daughter of the first president of King's College who had delivered a denunciation of the secularization of his college while seated in it."

60-70 Vic men, led by Sam Murphy, president of the Victoria College Debating Society, raided Trinity on Tuesday night in retaliation for the theft of this chair.

One of the Vic raiding parties made off with the Provost's chair while another stole an architect's model of the new Trinity construction. The latter was being returned by Cork when he was abducted.

Langford was returning from a Hart House Debate when he was kidnapepd. Neither he nor Cork had taken part in the actual raids.

Trinity marched on Vic to recover its lost property. The attacking force was met by buckets of water and about 100 men. When Vic sounded the cavalry charge the Trinity types decided it was time for tea.

However, Trinity managed to purloin the plaques from Burwash Hall, Emmanuel College, the Library, and the Senior Common Room. These are still in custody.

"A week today, Trinity will see its Provost's Chair at the Vic-St. Mike's debate at which it will be resolved that 'This University needs more Characters'," said Murphy.

A spokesman for Vic said last night, "It was despicable enough when Trinity tried to place the initial blame on Skule, but the attempt to smirch the spotless record of UC is an unbelievable act of dishonor."

A spokesman for Trinity said "The vendetta between Trinity and Vic will not be allowed to die. This treacherous attack upon the sacred precincts of Trinity will not go unavenged," he informed reporters.

"The scurrilous lies and transparent propaganda behind which the despicable Victorians seek to conceal their Machiavellian machinations have deceived none. The absurdity of their concealing their own chair in order to justify a treacherous attack upon Trinity under the pretense or seeking it will be apparent to all."

New System In Bookstore

Racketeers Said In Book Theft

"Losses from the bookstore were in a higher percentage than from other retail stores but this is not so now," commented Mr. R. E. Saul, head of the University Bookstore. However, Mr. Saul went on to say that "we have strong reason to believe these losses were not the work of students but were from outside racketeers."

These pilferings have now largely stopped due to the better system that has been inaugurated under Mr. Saul's direction.

"Because the turnstiles were not popular with students it was decided to put in a new system in the store," said Mr. R. E. Saul. This new system necessitated removal of counters which are just now being replaced. Their removal gave much needed space for greater traffic at the first of the year.

The system for getting books is much in use on the continent and Mr. Saul decided to try it here. It consists in giving the student a stub which has a number: the student then tells the salesgirl what book he wants and then picks up his books at the cashier's counter. "This allows us to take the customers in order and thus shorten the waiting to some extent," Mr. Saul remarked.

Sales, in spite of the decrease in enrollment at the University, are slightly up, but in general Mr. Saul said, sales are pretty much the same from year to year. Approximately 20,000 students a week make use of the bookstore during rush times.

A new feature this year at the store has been the longer hours. 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m., but these hours will stop in about a fortnight. Mr. Saul said that these extended hours were for the University night courses and they would continue "for as long as it is worthwhile."

The nakedness of the interior of the store which was so necessary at the first of the year for greater facilitation of students, is slowly being replaced by a new department, the 'trade' section. By 'trade' section Mr. Saul means the novels and story section. Here the student may browse and read a bit in relative freedom and comfort.

With these additional services Mr. Saul hopes to give the student much better service.

UC Sin And Debt Debate Will Have Birthday Cake

A birthday cake left over from the centennial celebrations last weekend will be consumed by all those attending the UC Parliament today in the JCR at 4:00 p.m.

"Resolved that the wages of sin is debt" will be the topic under debate. Pat McColl speaking for the government said "can anyone lend me some money?" Her partner Bernie Chernos said "Sin may be pleasant, but it's no way to earn a living."

Jean Fox speaking for the Opposition said "I hold that it has long been a conspiracy on the part of certain reactionary elements in our society to brand sin as detrimental to the attainment of a happy life. Sin does not lead to debt, nor to any other evil. It is by progress through the narrow and winding paths of sin that we attain true goodness. As Milton says "I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue." Sin, on the other hand, is the trademark of wisdom, greatness, and wealth.

Tommy Daly said "It is my considered opinion that the concept of debt as being the wages of sin is a heresay stemming from a misunderstanding of mediaeval terminology. It is time for new vistas to be unrolled."

Following the debate the slightly antiquated birthday cake embellished by 100 blazing candles will be consumed by the ravenous debaters.

Small Reimbursements Discourage Bandsmen

Student 'apathy' was blamed yesterday by Wally Gulka, leader of the Blue and White Band, for the smaller size of this year's band. Despite several appeals for volunteers, this year's staff is only 36, a sharp reduction from last last year's 48.

Several band members who wish to remain annonymous blame other factors for the lack of enthusiasm among prospective bandsmen. The Blue and White society pays only the train fare of bandsmen on football-weekends. Other universities, (notably Western) also reimburse their bandsmen for room and board expenses on weekends. These average about $7.

Wally Gulka said that the Blue and White Society had no plans for meeting football-weekend trains from other universities. The band has never in recent years formally gone down to the Union Station to meet these trains. One impromptu effort at greeting out-of-town fans by band members a year ago was quickly squashed by railroad police who objected to the noise.

The Western Purple Spur Society turned out in force with the Western Band, cheerleaders, and majorettes to greet the Varsity train in London two weeks ago.

Red Feather Tag Tuesday

The Red Feather Tag Day which was to have been held today has been postponed until next Tuesday it was announced last night.

"Red Feathers which were to have decorated the taggers trays will not be available until Monday," reported Bill Batwin spokesman for the Red Feather campaign on the campus.

Iron Cellophane

Cracker Cracks Student

By FRED ROSS

"The Great Hall dining room serves soup in cups with amputated handles and crackers in impregnable shrouds of iron cellophane." This sentence should be inserted in next year's edition of This is Hart House, an informative booklet available to all students. After all, we men are a sturdy lot, we can take it; havent' we fought valiant battles against various text books when confronted by awe some odds? And any time the nurses want to put "Skule of Nursing " on our engineering buildings, we can rip those signs right down by jimmy crickets. So why cant we crack the cracker case? It is with a full cognizance of our indominable spirit that I find it necessary to lay odds of three to one on the crackers.

One noon last week I managed to get the thought machine past the Hall Porter. It evidently complied with the standard of dress, the one which is there but no one can find where, something like the thousand Grey Cup tickets which are sent annually to Hamilton.

Once in the Great Hall, I quickly hid my thought machine behind a copy of the SAC map of Toronto complete with red squares, sort of a geographical scrabble board, and waited for action. Soon the table filled with hungry students and luckily the food-laden artsman who sat across from me carried a bowl of soup complete with crackers on his aluminum tray. Quickly I adjusted the frequency to "food, beer, mastic tile and Gila monsters." and tuned the machine on the crackers lying calmly in their transparent blanket.

"This guy looks rather puny; I don't like little guys with big hands. They don't look stupid when they can't get the cellophane off, and they have nasty habits like squeezing us in those big hands. one guy put the whole mangled mess, cellophane and all in his soup. I like guys about 6', 200 pounds who lift weights and actually took PT classes in their first two years instead of playing volleyball. They look real foolish when they can't get the cellophane off."

The artsman returned from hurling his empty tray on the table and approached his dinner with the most colorless of the seven deadly sins, gluttony, shining in his eyes. Chortling sounds came from the machine.

"Yeah, here he comes, he picked me up, studies the wrapping, can't seem to break it. Now, here goes the part I like best . . . he's going to pull that red band. We've lost many a good cracker in this U of T campaign, but no one ever opened a cracker package by pulling on that red band. He's given up that and is starting on the brute force method — no you idiot, you can't pull it apart, the tensile strength is too great."

Now here comes the last act, he's going to use his knife on the wrapping. This is do or die. Hurray he's cut his hand and is going to the first aid, look at that blood flow. I've won, I've won, I've . . ."

I turned the machine off and sat rather shocked by the innate hostility of the cracker. Then I thoughtfully ate the artsman's soup and left. I didn't touch the crackers. A guy has to know when he's beaten.

M. Wallace Reviews UC History

The first of a series of Centennial lectures will be presented today. Principal Emeritus M. W. Wallace will speak on "University College, The First Fifty Years," in the West Hall of UC at 5 p.m.

This lecture and the last on December 3 by principal F. C. A. Jeanneret will cover the history of UC while the rest of the lectures to be presented every Thursday will deal with the relationships between literature and an assortment of other subjects.

Professor R. J. Getty chairman of the series said that later topics will deal with the relationships between literature and Religion, Philosophy, Learning, and Society.

No Radio Station For U of T Campus Weekly Spots All

"We are not trying to have a separate radio station this year, because generally the idea flopped last year, and there doesn't seem to be much interest in it this year," said Britta Frederickson, Radio Committee Chairman.

A new innovation this year, if it is found practicable will be a fifteen minute weekly broadcast of campus news, and interviews with members of various clubs and faculties. Lionel Salisbury (Trinity) who will be the director hopes to give everyone who is interested a chance to appear.

Letters have been sent out to different local radio-stations, and the Varsity Playhouse is only waiting for replies, before it starts work, said Miss Frederickson. "Last year we were at CKFH, and found it very satisfactory, and the staff most co-operative," Miss Frederickson remarked, "unfortunately, there were not proper rehearsing facilities." She commented that probably they would remain with CKHF. If the radio engineer were present at both the rehearsals and the actual broadcast itself, Miss Frederickson felt that certain technical difficulties would probably be ironed out.

Bruce Dunlop (Vic) will be in charge of the program, which will include eight or ten plays, half to be produced before, and half, after Christmas. Some of the plays will be original, and some will be adaptations.

"We hope to form a nucleus of players from key people in the college and faculty drama groups, to get a higher standard of broadcast," said Miss Frederickson. We are trying to do as much as our budget will allow."

"The Fall of the City" will be repeated this year, but we hope to make it better," said Miss Frederickson. She felt that the results were not too good last year, because there was not enough time for rehearsals, and the sound-effects were disappointing.

U. of A. Women May Receive Residences

EDMONTON, 3 Oct. CUP — The University of Alberta has taken the first step in solving the problem of lack of student residences. President Andrew Stewart revealed that at the request of the senate, the university is investigating the need for additional women's accommodation.

President Stewart said that many first year women students were unable to find campus accommodation because of the residence shortage. The university has received many complaints from parents, especially from outside areas, who believe all first year women students should be given the opportunity to reside on the campus.

The housing problem of married students has also become acute. When questioned on this subject, the president said that the cottage type generally favoured would be extremely costly and that "the small number which could even conceivably be financed would hardly make a dent in any waiting list of married students seeking such housing.

Executive Has Nothing

Last week's NFCUS conference was full of action and plans that one of the delegates in the Toronto group felt compelled to write down from memory the following article, which she had seen earlier:

An executive has nothing to do except——Decide what has to be done.
—Tell someone else to do it.
—Listen to reasons why it should be done . . . why it should be done by somebody else . . . or why it should be done in a different way.
—Follow up to see if the thing has been done . . . to discover that it has not been done.
—Inquire why it has not been done . . . listen to excuses from the person who should have done it.
—Follow up a second time to see if the thing has been done and discover that it has been done but incorrectly.
—Point out how it should have been done . . . conclude that as long as it has been done it may as well be left as it is.
—Consider how much simpler and better the thing would have been done had he done it himself in the first place. But that would strike at the very foundation of the belief of all employees that an executive has nothing to do.

Except for the lighting, there is little about the new wing of the library that looks conducive to studying as yet. However, the above pile of steel and mortar is a promising start. Dr. Samuel will lay its corner stone on Friday afternoon.

New Library Cornerstone Will Be Laid By Samuel

By GRIF CUNNINGHAM

This Friday afternoon the corner stone of the new wing of the main University Library will be laid by Dr. Sigmund Samuel. The ceremony will take place between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, and include the following dignitaries: Chancellor Beatty, President Smith, Henry Borden, Vice-Chairman of Governors, Robert Fennel, Chairman of the Board of the Museum, Dr. W. E. Dunlop, Minister of Education for Ontario, Dr. Wallace, Chief Librarian of the Main Library, Eric Haldenby, Architect responsible for the new wing, and Rabbi Abraham Feinberg who will open the proceedings with a dedication and prayer.

The construction of the new wing, which began last Easter, has proceeded at a rate sufficient to please everybody connected with its construction. The roof is scheduled to go on by Christmas and it is hoped that by next August they will be able to begin the mass moving of the books into the new wing. There are in various Men's Residences scattered throughout the University 80,000 tomes that have to be moved to the new library.

The funds for the wing came from two sources: Dr. Sigmund Samuel gave a million and a half dollars; the Board of Governors voted another million and a half from the proceeds of the building fund campaign.

The present Library designed to accommodate a university of 2500 souls proved itself inadequate with the influx of returned servicemen who invaded the University after tinued increase in enrollment a the war. However with the contemporary situation evolved into a painful bottleneck. It is hoped by next year that the situation will have corrected itself and no long queues will any more raise their ugly heads.

All this depends upon a great number of factors, the most important of which is a contented labour force and a steady flow of building materials. Barring difficulties in these respects we should next fall be greeted by a new library.

The University library is one of the few institutions that serves all the faculties. The University library has been referred to as the Heart of the University, for very obvious reasons. In this respect it seems funny that it was considered more important to build such buildings as the new Central Heating Plant, the Wallberg Building, plus others before it was decided it was time to build such an important building as the addition to the new Library.

For those sanguine souls there will be lectures as usual on Friday afternoon. Even the Library itself will be open at the usual hours.

Then

The picture above shows how the library will look when completed. It is hoped that future generations of students will appreciate the expensive improvements being made for their benefit. This model is now on display in the present library.

Trinity Not Stuffy Debaters Decide

Trinity is very nearly choked with tradition but not quite) that was the verdict of the Trinity Lit. in a debate last night over the controversial issue, "That Trinity is choked with tradition."

The Rev. Lyndon Smith, speaking for the government said that he constantly experienced a terrible choking sensation over the many traditions that are perpetrated at Trinity, ("the food possibly," said Fr. Smith), but the most odious and the most presumptuous is the tradition that Trinity is actually an educational institution. The opposition countered this by stating that only lip service is ever paid to that facet of a Trinity education.

Another obsolete tradition at Trinity, continued the speaker, is that of recreational sport. Both these traditions, grossly outdated, are at last properly dying out.

Tom Symons, speaking for the opposition, broke a time-honoured tradition of the Lieterary Institute by turning the debate to a serious vein. He cited the example of the visit of the "Red Dean" of Canterbury some years ago to the campus when only "reactionary Trinity" would open its doors to him.

Mr. Griesel, a progressive Yank from the sovereign state of Colorado" as he put it), deplored the "decadent emphasis on European scholastic methods". He suggested the instead of a conversazione as their annual dance they have a rodeo or something along that line,

"The Conversat, sir, is a rodeo, and that is what makes it the best dance on the campus," replied

Free Tickets To Dentantics May Be Won

If you ask any student you see on the campus next Tuesday whether he has bought his tickets to Dentantics you will stand a one in 2,000 chance of receiving two free tickets to the show.

Five men will wander about the campus carrying free tickets to be given to the first person asking "Have you got your tickets to Dentantics?" The Show will be presented on November 6th and 7th.

"I think this will be the best show Dents has produced" said Dentist Ted Sparrow yesterday. "They've cleaned it up."

When asked what would happen if Joan Armstrong, last year's reviewer of Revues for The Varsity, appeared at the show, Sparrow said that she would be carried out in the coffin that trailed after the Dent float.

Monotonous Food

Song of India

At last! Someone who reads The Varsity every day—and likes it! Yes, it's true! Rajesh Mittra, M.A. and 21-year-old Indian student who has come to Toronto to take his Ph.D. in electrical engineering, thinks The Varsity is one of the best and most enterprising institutions on the campus.

The soft-spoken winner of the World University Service Scholarship was born in Calcutta, and studied electronics at the University of Calcutta.

He felt that Canadian newspapers did not give much space to Indian news, and apart from a few articles on Korea rarely published much international news at all.

He has already noticed that Canadian University students are very active in extra-curricular activities, and divide their time about 50-50, whereas the Indian student must spend at least 75 percent of his time with his studies. He said that another big difference was the lack of knowledge of foreign affairs of the typical Canadian student.

Mittra, who is living in residence at Trinity College, said that this had been arranged by his sponsors, but he enjoyed dining with the people and learning to know Canadian customs.

"I like Canadian food from a short-range," he said, "but after a few days it begins to get monotonous, and the same dishes appear at the same time as regular features. In India, this would never happen, because there are thousands of varieties of dishes suitable to the time and season.

"Canadian girls are much more sociable and have a better chance to express their opinions and take part in activities." In India some girls attend university, but few take part in mixed activities, although the classes are co-educational. He said that girls in India like to wear more ornaments and fewer cosmetics than Canadians. He added that most of them still wear the traditional saris, and commented, "I think we will still see them for generations." Referring to a recent "Forum", he stated his opinions that "Women's place is in the home, or else why go home?"

"The attitude to Great Britain is quite friendly now," he said, "but the mentality that prevailed ten years back has changed. The British are welcome as friends, and not as masters." He commented that the same question had been put to him recently by the immigration officer as he entered Canada.

"We know more of the United States than of Canda, but we like Canada better then the States for political reasons," he remarked.

After a minimum of two years in which he hopes to become completely acquainted with the

"Exploring Minds" Will Replace Varsity Story On CBL-TV Program

A new television series, replacing the "Varsity Story" of last winter, is being undertaken by C.B.C. in joint co-operation with U. of T., McGill, and the University of Montreal, announced Dr. C. T. Bissel yesterday. The series is called "Exploring Minds" and is being presented at 7:30 p.m. Monday evenings, using the facilities of the Montreal to Toronto television hook-up.

Varsity will be on the air every other week, with McGill and U. of M. alternating in the weeks between. Toronto is contributing this Monday with a panel discussion entitled "What are the ten most important Canadian books?" The chairman will be Prof. Barker Fairley of the German department.

One of the programs, scheduled to appear early in December will feature Dr. Hans Selye, who will explain his new theory of stress. In this forthcoming lecture he will apply it to the hazards of Christmas shopping.

Mr. Sidney Newman of the C.B.C. who is program supervisor stated that the aim was "to present interesting facts of university life today in informative and lively discussion in co-operation with the faculties and student bodies of three of our great Universities."

He went further to say that as facilities improved and increased the series would be extended to include such universities as Western, Queen's, McMaster and Carleton College.

In case anyone was wondering, the Carabins are presenting their programs in English.

It is interesting to note that Varsity pioneered in this type of television presentation and continues to take a major role in the field.

Plato Philosophy And Purifiction

According to Associate Professor of Ethics at Trinity College the conc pt of body-soul dualism had its origin not in Christianity but in fifth .n' sixth century reek religion and philosophy. In a meeting of the U. of T. Philosophical Society Dr. Owen trie to refute the popular belief that there was no conflict between body and soul in Greek religion.

To prove that conflict did exist Dr. Owen said that many Greeks believed in the theories of Orphism and Transmigration; theories that asserted that man has bo heavenly and earthly elements and that the heavenly soul was condemned to Transmigration for ten thousand years until man was cleansed.

"The later theory of Pythagoreanism accepted both these beliefs as well as the belief that the highest kind of purification was intellectual purification. This belief was also shared by Plato and gradually gave rise to a hatred of the soul, a desire to sever the soul from the body and a belief that we can never attain wisdom or truth until we are rid of the body."

Dr. Owen pointed out that these conceptions differed from the biblical conception of the importance and goodness of man's physical part as well as his spiritual part.

"The Bible," he said, "emphasizes the importance of body and soul. There is no puritanical hostility to the body."

Close Library 3-4 Today

Although it will be open to those students desiring to use the reading rooms, the Library will not distribute any books this Friday afternoon between the hours of 3.00—4.00.

This is due to the fact that, during this time the staff will be partaking in the ceremony of laying the cornerstone for the new addition to the Library.

Red Feather Football

Vic Girls Undefeated With 12-3 Ball Win

Anyone want to buy a good ball club? We haven't any around here for sale but we do have a ball club on the campus that is really going places this season and it's none other than the Victoria ladies' sobtball group who after three weeks of competition have come through undefeated.

Yesterday afternoon, Vic. tanned U.C. 12-3 in what could have been a much tougher battle had the U.C. gals picked up a little stronger group this season. No individual was responsible for the U.C. loss but rather it appeared to be an all-round lack of power and confidence throughout the squad.

Jackie Wickware was first to make it home for Vic who took to bat first. Shortly after, Pat Cowman made it over the plate on a homer off Mary Foster's (the Sarnia kid) bat. Elishia File (her brother coaches the Vic squad) finished the scoring for that part of the inning and U.C. retaliated to bring the score to 4-2 for Vic. Dr. Connacker and Heather Chipman were the U.C. scorers.

Whether it was through overconfidence or too tiring an opener, the Vic gals fell apart in the second inning. Three went to bet and the same three struck out. Sellers hit a homer for U.C. who tried but failed to match or exceed the Vic ladies' four.

Vic. put on a power drive in the third to chalk up eight. Not being satisfied with this, they replaced pitcher Marg Gemmel who was not lacking power herself, with Mary Haggart who pitched a spectacular closer and held the U.C. gals to their meager three.

The CNE stadium will be the scene of the brightest thing in high school football in this province riday and Saturday night when the annual Red Feather football events get into swing. Not only billeting the top ranking football squads, the Red Feather battle will include more than enough colour in the persons of cheerleaders and bands from near and far — mostly far.

The big meet is slated to begin Friday at 7:00 p.m. with London Central facing St. Catharines. Following this, Hamilton Westdale and top ranking Toronto's Danforth Tech will battle it out.

Ottawa Fisher Park plays Alliston Banting in the Saturday opener followed by Sudbury Tech and the TDIAA's top Etobicoke crew.

AFRICAN EPIC

Too Late The Phalarope

TOO LATE THE PHALAROPE; Alan Paton; Clarke, Irwin & Co., $2.10.

Alan Paton, the South African who hit the literary jackpot a few years back with Cry, The Beloved Country, has come up with a number two which is in some ways a better novel than the first.

Too Late the Phalarope feels the loss of the beautifully rhythmic prose which carried the reader through Paton's first novel. Not that the latest book is a stylistic failure; it is still pleasantly simple and at moments poetic. But it is more wordy and no so consistently musical. However, the complaint is petty when you can read passages like this: "for in the rain you could hear the plovers calling, and the piet-my-vrou would cry from the kloof, which was like a hand suddenly plucking at the strings of the heart, so that your whole being shook and trembled; and why and why, why no one knew, it was the nature of man and of creation, that some sound, long remembered from the days of innocence before the world's corruption, could open the door of the soul, flooding it with a sudden knowledge of the sadness and terror and beauty of man's home and the earth.

The story of Too Late The Phalarope is powerful and the theme is tragic and of classical dimensions. Pieter van Vlaanderen is a man of divided character. One side — the side recognized by most of his associates and the citizens in his small South African town — produced the great athlete, the war hero, the marksman, the idol of younger men, the lieutenant in the police with the undefinable authority. The other side — seen only vaguely by one or two intimates — made the stamp-collector, the lover of nature, the man of moods, of gentleness or suppressed anger.

It is this second nature which leaves the man lonely and strangely insecure on the heights of respected fame. It is this which drives him to an irrational passion for security. When he looks to the most logical source of security — his wife — he discovers that she is unable to provide the kind of love he desires.

The frustration of his desires creates a reaction in Pieter in the shape of a fatal urge which drives him against his will to commit adultery with a criminal negress. The disaster which follows (a disaster which must be understood within the context of the strictly puritan, uniquely South African Boer society) destroys the man and his family.

This theme is one with that of the Greek tragic dramatists: the tragic hero is dogged by a fatal force emerging from a flaw in character; the resultant tragic action has a destructive finality which levels and empties the hero — purging him of evell — and he is given new purity and vital insight. His personal destruction is the incidental outcome as the price he must pay for his ultimate experience of life.

Alan Paton's sensitive pen has given the theme a moving and terrible impact. Unlike his first novel, Too Late The Phalarope universal in its truth. The author has successfully evaded an artistic impediment which he narrowly missed in Cry, The Beloved Country, that of making the novel a vehicle for propaganda. Paton's known views on Current South African problems have not infected his book. Nor has he ignored the very real antagonisms that exist. He has reached instead a subtle balance in his use of (say) the racial problem; he uses only material which furthers the artistic end of his work and such matters are always subjected to the overall theme.

INDIAN INTROSPECTION

The Vermilion Boat

THE VERMILION BOAT, Sudhin N. Ghose, Michael Joseph, $4.00.

The Vermilion Boat is a slim book attractively bound and illustrated with line drawings white on black. Its attractive exterior certainly does not belie its contents. Though the book most nearly resembles biography it would be hard to categorize it in any one literary form.

Sudhin Ghose in the course of recounting his student days in Calcutta and coming to manhood and fulfilled love, delves into history, philosophic and social essays, Indian myths and poetry, and the short humorous story, so that the whole becomes as fascinating as fiction.

Yet with a superb mastery of correlation he manages to make it a homogeneous work. The passage from the present, to the past, to the fictional, to the eternal is smoothed over by cross-references which makes the transition seem as natural as the process of thought, though sometimes just as illogical. What seems at one moment a highly digressive though interesting incident later becomes the key to understanding.

For instance, there is a detailed description of his visit to a "sporting house" in Calcutta, with particulars of the etiquette required for the "artistes" who live there. Later, this is significant as the block between him and Roma, the Eurasian girl he loves.

Even Edgar Allan Poe might have envied him his description of Pippala's quick destruction of a mansion which took years in the building. This also is an example of another device which he uses to good effect: symbolism. The "Vermilion Boat" of the title appears at different stages in his life representing different things, but always in connection with some difficulty which is surmounted. For him also the houses and wind speak.

It is because Sudhin Ghose emerges in the book as a man of sympathy and intelligence that it maintains its interest, for the only plot that is suspended till the end is the story of his love. His keen mind perceives accurately the truth of what is going on around him and within him, in-so-far as it is possible.

Not for him the romantic glossing over of reality. "A lot of novelists also think in that way and write a lot of nonsense, and a lot of fools waste time and money reading such novels" says Koly Huson who offers to initiate him into the ways of the world. Throughout, his attitude is revealed as a combination of the Penhari Pangaras in Bengal and the French of Chanderagore.

The racial and religious problems and mob fight, the communist activities, all figure in his discussion of "the gravest problem affecting the Indian sub-continent from the Himalayas to the sea: frustration in love and frustration in life; frustration brought about by the constant inner conflict between the desire to possess and the yearning to renounce; the longing to win the saint's crown of heavenly glory and to relish the rake's cup of vicious delights.

BOOZE KINSEY

Drinking In College

DRINKING IN COLLEGE, Robert Straus and Seldon D. Bacon, Burns & MacEachern, $4.75.

Here is a statistical study, somewhat along the lines of the Kinsey reports, of drinking in college. By means of a questionnaire administered to groups of college students during class hours, the authors (who are on the staff of the Center of Alcohol Studies at Yale) have examined their behavior and opinions regarding alcohol, as well as their social background. The results presented embody the findings from over 15,000 such questionnaires, and the authors' interpretations of them.

To a student at this university, at any rate, the findings are not likely to seem sensational. In fact, the book seems to prove with great earnestness and thoroughness what most of us knew, or though we knew, all along.

For example we have seen the students who spend several nights a week in the Chez Paree, and have thought they represent a small, if obvious minority (3 percent of males, according to the survey). We have also seen the total abstainers, and again the survey confirms our opinion regarding their number (26 percent).

The writers point out that such figures are very different for colleges of different types. But in a federation of colleges of the type of th University of Toronto, many differences would be smoothed out, both because of the very large numbers involved, and because of the diversity of social types represented in the various colleges and faculties.

Perhaps the chief point which this survey drives home is the fallacious thinking involved in the expression "college drinking". Drinking or abstinence, the figures abundantly show, are not caused by nor even apparently associated with attendance at college. Rather they seem to be the result of the student's environment before he came to college.

Throughout the book, the authors stress their view of drinking as a social phenomenon, to be correlated vith other social phenomena. And correlate they do—vith the most astonishing zeal.

However, when one has worked through the mass of data and correlations—and it is an enormous mass—one is struck with an odd omission. There is no mention of scholastic achievement in relation to drinking in any of the tables, and this variable does not seem to have been considered at all. Similarly there is no mention of athletic success—in fact only a single reference to athletics at all, in relation to reasons for abstaining.

These omissions make one wonder whether the author, in their pre-occupation with the sociological aspect of their work, have not passed by a valuable opportunity to make a contribution ot the physiology of drinking.

All results are presented in tables of admirable simplicity and elegance, and are invariably expressed as percentages—an aid to rapid and easy reading. In general, too, the mechanics of the statistical treatment have been kept in the background, in order not to clutter the text for the general reader.

Finally, one cannot help admiring the absolutely impartial way in which the entire work has been carried out. Only one judgment either pro or con drinking has crept in: the authors state categorically that "driving when drinking . . . is under no circumstances to be recommended." After reading the book, one remains completely at a loss to state whether the authors' personal leanings were on the side of the wets or the drys.

THE SECRET IS OUT

Modern Canadian Poetry

Edited by Earle Birney, The Ryerson Press, $4.00

Modern Canadian poetry, the best-kept secret of our age, has thrown off its wraps and answered the bell for another tussle with Oblivion. In the shape of 20th Century Canadian Poetry (Ryerson Press), edited by Earle Birney, a mighty shot-in-the-arm has been given this furtive, esoteric pet of the literary avant garde — one which, it is to be hoped, will drain the sump of red maples from off our high school and college curricula and replace it with something offering a mite more food for thought.

This is Professor Birney's avowed intention — this highly selective anthology of Canadian verse of the past fifty years is directed at the "general reader," but more particularly at the "teacher and student of Canadian literature," at both the matriculation and university levels. It was put together with the promise that "subleties of interpretation" are spurs and not deterrents to the active imagination. Fitted with a critical apparatus of introduction, thumb-nail biographies, and elaborate, incisive textual notes, well-bound and well-printed, the book has everything needed to achieve its end — and one insuperable drawback: the price, $4.00. Can't you just envisage Joe College spending Four Dollars for a book of poetry? Well, I hope I'm wrong!

The book is actually eminently satisfying. It's a superb collection, interestingly, uniquely arranged, a complete representation of the major themes and styles of our main new and slightly-older poets, yet so superbly arranged that the constant onrush of novelty produces not the slightest touch of nausea. The Big Four, of course, are adequately represented — Birney, himself, Klein, Finch and Pratt — and a host of newer names make impressive appearances. None of the poems have been preiously unpublished, but they are in almost all cases their writers' latest and best works. In contradistinction to the usual method of assembling an anthology, Birney has neglected chronology and concentrated on subject matter. It may seem incredible that a book which claims adequately to represent Canadian poetry of the past half-century should attempt to classify its contents by theme, but the poet's heart was true and Prof. Birney "emerged triumphant." The topics selected range from "The Canadian Nation," and "Legend and History," to "City and Town," "Child and Youth," and naturally, "Life and Death."

As in any such restriction of material, the personality of the editor is very much to the fore. There is ample evidence in the selections included from his own poetry that Birney found many of the poems particularly congenial to his own poetic cast of mind. The highly convoluted imagery,

> Unseen the god-lips whisper through wires
> Their fingers play on a glittering loom of dials
> Weaving patterns of power and caution,

the emphasis on the function of poetry to "unloose our imagination,"

> But when doors clamp we are forty sly warriors
> stowing briefcase ammunition for some Trojan target > merger-bombs for Bay Street, assault by speech in Winnipeg,

the use of "serious" puns,

> Ah, we are speechless with life as it should be > our destinies fixed but our seats adjustable,

the struggle with inimical, buffeting Fate,

> But lights fail, time is false,
> the town was less than its glow,
> Again in chrysalis folded
> they must go lonely
> drowsy back through ghosts
> the wind starts from the waiting snow,

and most important, probably, the problems of humanity,

> Within the politician's ribs,
> within my own, the time-bombs tick.
> O men be swift to be mankind > or let the grizzly take,

are in evidence time and again in the poetry of Birney and the sixty-nine others whose work is represented in this collection. In the common intellectual environment and common recognition of a

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

A DOLLAR A DUCAT —

Why $2.50 a seat? That's the price of the best seats in the house when the Blues entertain at the Bloor Bowl. But when you get down to thinking about it there is no real good reason why the paying customers should pay such a heavy toll.

Take last Saturday for instance. The Blues had the McMarauders visiting the stadium. So a crowd of 13,400 loyal fans turned out to watch the game. That means that roughly 14,000 seats went unoccupied all Saturday afternoon.

Now we would like to wager that if the price of seats started from about a buck and down, bigger crowds would result. After all, the more money that the football team can earn for the Athletic Department, the better. Why the need to earn as many shekels as possible? Well, during the season, from Fall to Spring, of all the Intercollegiate tsams that this University sponsors only two teams can pay their own bill. Those two teams are the football and basketball squads. All the others live off the fat of those two teams.

Would cheaper prices mean bigger crowds? Well, not necessarily, but it's an even money bet. Students aren't the richest people on earth and after the books of tickets are sold there must be more than a few who would like to buy a ticket that entitles the bearer to something better than a spot adjacent to the north-end score board.

A BOY ON A MAN'S ERRAND

Apparently the Sports Editor of the Queen's Journal objected to this column's opinion of the Queen's game three weeks ago. This Archie Kincaid of the Journal figured that there was a difference in opinion between the game story written by our Jim Proudfoot and the column on the game. The game story appeared to be pro Gaels and the column pro Blues. Well, that's a very good thing. Perhaps the Editor of the Journal never heard of two people having their own views of a football game. And to take it further, perhaps he never heard of bylines. A byline entitles a writer to express his own opinion and his alone.

Secondly, the game story gave credit where credit was due. Some of the Gaels played very good ball indeed. In fact Al Kocman was the best man on the field. The column simply pointed out that a team that is only conditioned to last for half a game, is probably going to lose, particularly when the other team is conditioned to play 60 minutes. Like we said. Don't send a boy on a man's errand.

Enough said, Uncle Kanhead?

END NOTES —

John Prendergast paid a visit to the doctor today. It seems that a thumb, his left one, was bent a little in practice about a week ago. The x-rays revealed a break with the result that Long John is sporting an elbow-length cast on his right arm. Don't forget to get your tickets to the Red Feather games. They are on sale at the Intramural Office for two bits. They are worth it. The best buy of the season.

Hamilton, Harding, Williams Alone Top Closest Team

University of Toronto Senior Track Team today ran up a total of 78 points, 46 ahead of their nearest competition (?) McGill, to win the Intercollegiate Track Championship and return the Mackenzie Trophy to its proper home — Varsity.

Hal Brown's estimate of this squad as his "best ever" proved true in the meet, held at McGill, as the Torontos showing top power all along the line notched 9 first places. This was enough to win the meet, but the men of Varsity took no chances and almost doubled their total with points place and show positions.

Last year when Western pulled a fast one and edged the Blue speeders for the Mackenzie, it was claimed that the absence of Dick Harding because of a sprained ankle cost Toronto at least 10 points. These 10 counters would have meant the title for the Torontos. In Montreal to-day Dick Harding proved the point by striding to easy first places in the 220 and 440 yard runs for a valuable 10 points. Vic freshman Norm Williams skipped to top spot in the low hurdles and the 120 yard high hurdles scoring another 10 in the Varsity cause. These two, as well as being stars of the meet picked up almost as many points between them as did the defending champions Western who finished third with 28.

George Stulac, who stars at just about anything you care to mention took second place in the pole vault. Fellow PHE athlete Juri Vrezesnevski tallied first in the Javelin throw with a great heave of 162½ feet. Then the strong man of PHE went out and put the shot well to place third in that event while Engineering's Bernie Deuchars finished in second slot in the Shot, close behing champ Lionel Whitman of McGill.

The Three Mile Run went to Fred McDougall of Queen's but Dave Preston and Herb Tilson netted more points for the Blue and White as they hustled in second and third positions.

Pete Watson, who sprained his ankle in winning the Interfaculty mile last week made second spot in the Half Mile race, forcing Western's Bruce Waller to set a new Collegiate 880 record of 1.55.9. But Watson faltered in the Mile and Waller took first without much trouble.

Last year's interfaculty champ, Bob Hamilton put on quite a display for the colonials out in Lower Canada by taking two second places behind this year's intramural champ Norm Williams in the hurdle events and a first in the broad jump. Hamilton was Varsity's top point-getter in the meet on this performance and his total with Harding and William's combined were the Varsity victory margin.

Upset of the day was registered by U. of T. high jumper West McGill's entry in the jump was heavily favoured to win easily and most observers had already conceded him the first place—but not West. Being of a skeptical bent bent West had to be shown. He wasn't, so he did some showing of his own with less crowing and nabbed first place with a leap of 5 foot 10 inches.

Final standings were TORONTO —78, McGill—32 . . . Western—28 . . . Queen's—21 . . . McMaster—2.

Scarlet and Gold 12-1 Against UC In Mural Game

BY FRED GRAY

As interfaculty football rolled into its second week Vic's Scarlet and Gold squad began to show the form that carried them to the Cup last year as they set back a highly regarded U.C. team 12 to 1 yesterday afternoon.

The end of the first half found U.C. in the lead by a single point although the hard-driving play of both quarters. U.C. received the kick-off and attempted to catch Vic. napping as they put the ball into play without a huddle. Thus, as well as the rest of the UC first-quarter offensive plays, was stopped cold by Vic's. defensive squad. Twice during the half Vic. appeared to be on the verge of scoring. Ray Atkins drove through the line for 15 yards followed by a beautifully executed reverse that saw Don Lewis scaper for an additional 25 to set Vic deep in UC territory. But an incompleted pass and two strong defensive plays by the UC line stopped the Scarlet and Gold short. When Vic. regained control of the ball they again drove deep into the U.C. end, only to run into a stone wall on the Tigers' 10-yard line. UC started the second quarter in a scoring position as a quick kick at the end of the first quarter followed by a short kick on third down by Vic. put them on Vic's 25. A timely interception by Bill Lewis removed the threat but U.C. was able to net a single later in the quarter as the tacklers raced in to drop Peter Potter behind the goal line.

The second half belonged almost entirely to Vic as they roared through, over, and around the U.C. club for two majors and a single. U.C. tried periodically to get back into the contest by taking to the air, and were on the whole unsuccessful. Notable exceptions, though were two fine snags by offensive ends Barry Mitchel and John Moffat. Vic. gave notice of things to come as a reverse on the run-back of the kick-off saw Pete Potter hand off to John Bond who carried to center field before being stopped. From here, led by the running of Ray Atkins, Johnny Bond, and Bill Goudie, the boys from Vic drove down the field for their first major. The convert attempt by Bill Lewis was good. Vic. picked up their single point when Bill Lewis raced in to down the U.C. ball carrier behind the line later in the third quarter. Vic completed their scoring early in the fourth quarter as Ray Atkins topped a fine game by scoring his second T.D. The convert attempt was unsuccessful.

Danny Paterson at quarter, Howie Barrett and Bill Fullerton, all showed well in a losing cause, while due credit shoud be given the Vic. offensive and defensive lines who threw the blocks and made the tackles to make victory possible.

Meds Strong Down Skule

Meds I took aim on the Intramural lacrosse title yesterday in the Hart House Gym as they whipped S.P.S. I handily 14-5. Though it is still early in the season the Medsmen are not taking things lightly. The men from the lower campus played hard right up to the final whistle, taking no chances.

Urqhart was the class of both sides as the smooth Medsman snapped 4 good markers, almost winning single-handed. Jack Gear hat-tricked for the Medsers while Kerr added 2. Bishop with 2 was the spark for S.P.S.

In volleyball Jr. UC took the measure of PreMeds but needed the full 3 games to make it.

Other volleyball action saw title-minded Forestry top the Architects in two straight.

Come On Teeder !

High School football stars are supposed to be a dime a dozen when they come to College. None but the superstars of Steve Oneschuk calibre have any hopes of stepping right up to the Varsity in their first try. If this be true then we must rate the Blue's sterling right end Ted Kennedy a real prospect for such ranking.

A large one, Ted Kennedy stretches 6'2" above ground and tips the toledos at 175 pounds. He's fast on his feet and his head works quickly, as any opposing ball-carriers who have tried to outsmart him will agree.

Now 20 years old, with at least two more years in Varsity colours, Ted is in first year P. and H.E. Kennedy came to the University of Toronto from Etobicoke Collegiate which school is somewhat well-known in the T.D.I.A. football league as it has, for the past two years in a row, beaten all comers to win their loop championship. It follows of course that friend Kennedy was a star performer on both these winning squads. As the receiving half of the forward-passing parternship of Gerry Doucette and Ted Kennedy, Ted mangled opposition pass defences with his sure snaring of all throws within flying distance. In his last season with the Rams, Ted held on to enough touch down passes to rank fourth in the league scoring parade. In both championship seasons the Rams, with Kennedy working at his best, won their encounters in the tough Red Feather tourney and made strong bids for the tournment title.

Even with this impressive record it seemed that Ted was in for a year on the Varsity bench, the common course on all frosh, but unfortunate injuries to other Varsity ends shoved Ted into the starting lineup for the Blues. Once in his excellent tackling, pass-catching and blocking proved that he belonged in Senior company, and there Kennedy has stuck. No mere fill-in on the Blues, Ted has held on to his spot at right end even after the return to action of his injured team-mates while more experienced veterans were shifted to make room for the hard-working freshman.

The reason for this is easily seen in Ted's feelings on the difference between High School and Varsity ball. Says Ted, "I found that you have to work hard all the time on the Blues, and you can't let up."

Ted Kennedy has worked hard all the way down the line and if he doesn't let up may well write one of the brightest pages ever in the Blue Book.

Dorothy Johnson

The music room at Hart House opened its doors yesterday afternoon for another Wednesday 5 p.m. recital, this week by Dorothy Johnson, pianist. Miss Johnson opened the recital with Bach's popular chorale "Fervent is my longing". It was not the best of openings, the balance being poor and the tone weak, but anyone who might have left at this point would have completely misjudged the attractive young pianist who came back strong and sure in the following numbers.

Haydn's sonata in E minor, next on the program was captured with all the carefree capriciousness of this well-known and well-loved composer. The second movement, a simple tune, later highly ornamental was played meticulously but not unpleasantly, followed immediately by the final movement, a gay melodious theme. Miss Johnston completely understood the nature of the composer for she enjoyed playing it as much perhaps as any who attended enjoyed listening.

The major work of the afternoon, Beethoven's piano sonata Op. 31, no. 2 in D minor opens with a short arpeggio figure followed by the allegro first-movement theme, which denotes the character of the whole sonata. The entire work has a slightly Schumannesque flavour to it. Miss Johnson's more than adequate technique was shown to advantage here, controlling the suddenly violent, suddenly subtle aspects of this concert favorite.

In the second movement, marked adagio, she showed a confident control over the emotional content of the music, the melody never being lost in the undercurrent of harmonic devices. The final movement was clear, crisp and convincing.

After a short break, Miss Johnson resumed the recital with the Barcarolle by Gabriel Faure, a slightly lethargic bit of music played sympathetically (a silk purse for a sow's ear sort of thing).

The following music by Bartok, called Musiques Nocturnes, (which incidentally is not a nocturne in the usual sense, but an imitation of sounds heard at night in Hungary), was the only modern work of the afternoon. Only Bartok could devise a melody couched in such weird suggestive sounds and rhythmic intricacies to give the impression of Hungarian wild nightlife. Unusual — yes, interesting—yes, musical—I wonder.

In the closing two selections, two Intermezzi and Rhapsody in G minor both by Brahms, the talented young pianist seemed very much in her element, displaying a beauty of tone and brilliant clarity seldom achieved in the succulent, almost dripping piano works of Brahms. In Dorothy Johnson we have a true talent, sensitive, responsive and capable of great musical expression.

Modern Canadian Poetry

suitable method of expression of the dilemma facing this paranoic age we have, of course, an excuse for this similarity—if one were needed.

It remains, now, only to list a few of the poems which struck me as being of the very highest excellence; for the poor contributions are few and in no cases do a significant "message," a well-turned phrase ,or even just an arresting idea fail to redeem technical insufficiencies. "Best of Show," then, to Theodore Goodridge Roberts' The Blue Heron, Anne Marriott's Woodyards in the Rain, A. M. Klein's Lone Bather, E. J. Pratt's Sea-Gulls, and Prof. Birney's own David. For these alone, I'd pay $4.00.

Song Of India

Canadian way of life, Mittra will return to India.

"I am going back to work for my country," he said. "It is that aim of every young Indian wherever he is. It is time now for progress, and we want to stand shoulder to shoulder with the other countries."

He himself wrote the following description of WUS:

"World University Service of Canada, one of the branches of an international organization, World University Service is actively busy in promoting student welfare in India, including provisions of material help for construction of residence houses and health centres. Apart from that, one of the main objectives of WUS is mutual exchange of ideas and outlooks between students of countries separated from each other like India and Canada.

"They provide financial help and other arrangements for bringing students from countries in Asia over to Canada for better understanding between the student circles of these countries. In fact, I was awarded one such opportunity to come over to Canada to see, and enjoy what Canadian life is."

The Proper Party ?

The British House of Commons will begin today what is expected to be its hottest debate in the last four years. On it will stand the justification or condemnation of recent actions by the UK Government in British Guiana.

Lately the Government of that Crown Colony was ousted from its rule for what have since appeared to be political reasons. And the nasty word, Communist, has somehow found its way into the malee.

The People's Progressive Party, led by Cheddi Jagan, was legally elected in April, but, early this month, was deprived of power when the British Government revoked the "liberalized" constitution.

We feel that a principle has been violated here.

Jagan went to the people with a program of social reforms and he was elected. But it is now evident that the policies of his party are a little "too left" to suit — not the people of Guiana — but the British Government which is hundreds of miles away.

We feel that any party, leftist or rightist, that can be elected should be given the right to rule. Otherwise, how can we believe in the principle of rule by the people.

Jagan has been accused, though he has repeatedly denied this, of being a Communist. It has even been reported that he reads, of all things, books on Marxism. This surely is a warning to all ambitious politicians.

We can't help but feel that the British attitude in this case would have been different had another party been elected. But, then, who is electing the government of British Guiana?

The election of the PPP was made possible under a newly expanded constitution in the Colony in which the British, for the first time, instituted adult (over 21) suffrage with no educational conditions. The result was clear.

Do we or don't we believe in rule by the people? Or is that dependent on whether the "proper" party is chosen?

What Do We Know ?

Nationalism In Russia

By DAN ZAROWSKY

Finding it an issue of topical discussion, The Varsity presents an article throwing light on one point of view on what's going on inside Russia.

Recently, there appeared in The Varsity a brief note on the report of three American journalists who were permitted to travel in Soviet-Russia. Among other things they issued "sober warnings regarding the existence of anti-communist feeling among the populace." Although it would be interesting to know whether they spoke Russian, or had to use an interpreter, how they arrived at their conclusion after visiting two or three cities in Russia, and what exactly do they mean by "unrest" — one wonders if they expected to find Moscow or Kiev in a state of civil war, or, perhaps, even get a chance of taking pictures of the rebellious groups, complete with pipes and drums — the crux of the matter lies elsewhere.

THE ESSENTIAL POINT IS NOT whether they were able to discover the unrest in Russia or not, but the shift of emphasis which their statement tends to produce.

Mr. Hollander's argument is somewhat like this: It is foolish to try to capitalize on the resistance to the communist regime in Russia because there are no signs (according to his observations) of a general unrest in Russia. Actually the western world is concerned with forces which produce unrest, and not with unrest itself. These forces extend further and go deeper than what could be gathered from a short-lived external manifestation. Nor do they have to manifest themselves in such spectacular ways as revolts or violent strikes. Passive resistance is a more effective and a less dangerous method. When we read from time to time that this or that minister was fired because he did not succeed in forcing through the measures of his economic or national policy we can read between the lines what lies behind such a simple statement.

THE WESTERN POWERS have no intention of attacking Russia or any other communist country; therefore, the fact of unrest, or for that matter revolt in any of these countries is of little practical value to the west — recent events in East Germany, not to speak of Korea, provide an excellent example: in case of a conflict, however, each side will try to mobilize all the forces it will be able to muster and as far as the west is concerned, much of that force will lie behind the Iron Curtain.

The forces upon which the west could count in case of a conflict with Soviet-Russia are: nationalism and anti-communism. Nationalism proved to be a source of difficulties for Russia ever since she had set out to subjugate her neighbours in Europe as well as in Asia. The Bolsheviks used skillfully the national sentiments to further their own ends, but they soon came to realize that in order to carry communism to non-Russian countries they still had to resort to the more reliable means — armed conquest. As far as the subjugated peoples were concerned, the final result was merely a change of the oppressor. The second force — anti-communism — is farily obvious and it is not necessary to go into it.

MOST INTERESTING IS THE question of the interaction of these two powers. Whereas in the non-Russian republics, nationalism is closely tied-up with anti-communism and both work hand-in-hand, in the Russian Soviet-Republic the opposite seems to be the case. We had seen Stalin appealing to Russian — not to communist — patriotism, old Russian national heroes restored to their place after twenty odd years of contempt and degradation. Even the Russian emigration leaders declare that the Russian people would rather choose communism than let go the non-Russian peoples from Soviet-Union. This gives rise to a curious situation. On the one hand, the Russian emigrees maintain that the Russian people is in no way responsible for the communist aggression and imperialism, but on the other hand they assert that this same people would be quite ready to continue the communist imperialism, should someone try to check it

THE QUESTION REMAINS how strong are the nationalist and the anti-communist feelings in Soviet-Russia now. It is clear that the years between 1920 and 1941 represent a considerable increase of the communist power which took place at the expense of its two main enemies, but it was no easy victory. The rapid recovery of nationalism at the first sight of the defeat of Soviet-Russia speaks for itself. On the other hand, communism had suffered heavy blows during the last war. Many nationalities deserted it and the Soviet government had to resort to drastic measures, including deportation of whole districts in the Caucasus, Ukraine, and in the Baltic, as well as the whole Tartar population in the Crimea. The faith in the "invincible" Red Army was badly shaken, the army itself received first-hand experience of the superior civilization of the west. For a number of years Soviet propaganda had to concentrate on dissuasion and explanation of the causes responsible for such a state of things. Continuous desertion of Soviet soldiers and civilians whenever there is any hope of success indicates that the communists did not yet quite succeed in regaining their grip over their victims.

Guilty

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Sir, it is fortunate that Varsity provides opportunity to reply to such letters as one that appeared yesterday in its section.

No one seems to know who stole the plaque except an anonymous or ficticious observer.

The important thing, however, is why should SPS take the blame for every crime perpetrated on this campus? On the matter of Friday's rampage, Iam sure that only a representative group of SPS'ers were involved. Yelling "Tiok: Oike and singing Engineering chants does not constitute an engineer. The trouble is that other faculties don't have well-known yells or songs and thus are not brought ot Justice.

Soviet Overtures

The Editor,
The Varsity;

In his article "Couched in Fear" Rich Anco refered to such changes in IUS policy and attitude as to be considered good grounds for co-operation with IUS. He points to the Soviet offer of associate membership and the new politeness encountered by western delegates at the Warsaw rally last August.

Still, I do not see any major change in policy. Has IUS made a radical change in its "Partisan and political approach to student needs and the role of students in society"? Does he consider the marked change in manners at Warsaw a sincere change in attitude? The Commies realize that students from undeveloped countries now know that the International Union of Students contains only the Soviets and themselves. Thus, by our associate membership they can claim their organization as truly representative of world student opinion. I find only a change in tactics to draw our alleged (by them) support of their propaganda machine.

I am afraid I can not accept Soviet overtures, and hope, like Rich Anco, "that words would be backed by action"—we have done that before and the result was just more Propaganda and "name-calling".

In conclusion, I found Rich Anco quite biased toward the decision expressed by the majority to make no commitments. Thus he labelled his adversaries as "insincere, weak, and couched in fear" (of what?).

SAC Rules

The Editor,
The Varsity.

On Tuesday, October 20, the Music Committee of the SAC considered applications for the post of assistant conductor of the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra, (all of which had been submitted before the October 1 deadline.) After recommendations and discussion, an appointment was made but which will not be official until after the next SAC meeting. No appointment has been made before this meeting and no official word had been issued by the Music Committee before this meeting.

Sin Darn Expensive UC Debaters Decide

The University College Parliament broke tradition yesterday by serving eskimo pies, and cake, baked especially for the recent Centennial celebrations, b[illegible]s debate in the Junior Room. The cake, which was topped by 100 candles, was cut by Principal Jeanneret.

Debators Pat McColl, Bernie Chernos, Jean Fox and Tom Daly acted as "the candle blowers" before they divided over the resolution that "the wages of sin is debt." After a confusing miscount the resolution was upheld, 37-24.

Bernie Chernos, leader of the affirmative, stated that "Our whole existence to-day is determined by economic affairs." Even the modern mother explains Junior by a sale in Eaton's Annex, no longer by the stork, he said. "Nothing is free. With increased fees, the student will not be more able to afford the sin he so deliciously enjoys", Chernos said.

Opposition leader, Jean Fox, addressed the House as "the intelligentsia". "Sin, if properly channelled, can work to one's profit. It all boils down to the sins of those who know, and those who don't," she said.

Pat McColl continued the argument "that sin is the wages of debt" by taking her listeners on an imaginary trip to Paradise. She pictured Eve helping herself to an apple even though she had left her purse behind. "She could not pay the Creator for it," Pat said, "so we are still paying her debt."

Tom Daly, speaking for the opposition, complained that the government had "caked our minds with heresy" and posed for serious contemplation the question. "Should we

UC Future Was Grim In First Fifty Years

"He would have been a bold man who saw a rosy future for UC," said Principal Emeritus M. W. Wallace speaking on "University College: Its First Fifty Years" in West Hall UC yesterday [illegible]ng.

This lecture, the first of the UC Thursday Evening Series, highlighted some of the "more important crises" of UC's past and the achievements of Sir Daniel Wilson, former president of the college.

Dr. Wallace spoke of the difficulties under which UC was founded in 1853, for it got its start in "a dominant spirit of hatred". Religious groups resented the first secular college in Canada and termed it "a Godless university".

In 1861, a Royal Commission was called to investigate UC's worth. Two years later, the Commission "almost recommended its extinction". However, the crisis passed, and no further investigations were held until '95, when the Commission looked into the students' strike.

Daniel (later Sir Daniel) Wilson was appointed to University College in 1853 as a professor of English Literature, and, in the words of Dr. Wallace, "No one has left a more enduring mark

Parking Creates Headache Again — Hart House Roadways Congested

"There will be no improvement in student parking facilities," said Mr. E. A. Macdonald, secretary-treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, yesterday. He was referring only to the SAC space, the roadway running north from the Memorial Tower to Hoskin Ave.

Macdonald hastened to make clear that the parking stickers are free, but that a definite need for parking facilities must be proved by the student on applying before it would be made available. Those eligible are students who live out of town and commute or students who are handicapped in some way so that they need a car to get around.

The University Superintendent's office also said that they too extend parking and entrance privileges, in their jurisdiction, to handicapped students. This is an exception to the ruling which only allows staff to park in their area.

Mr. Alec Russell, of the Superintendent's Office, stated yesterday. "We are trying to make the best use of the facilities that we have at the moment, always keeping safety and fire prevention in mind." He added that the presence of a large number of workmen on campus was not helping the situation any.

The new UC Men's Residence is occupying what was once a fairly large parking lot on St. George St. According to Russell, this added to the problem. As far as the university knows there will be no added facilities to compensate for the loss.

Macdonald said that, so far, 94 stickers have been released to students entitling them to park in the roadway beside Hart House. These permits are issued on the condition that the cars be parked a foot away from the sidewalk so that the bumpers do not interfere with pedeestrians. They must be parked on the proper side of the road so as to leave room for cars backing out and turning.

In a count taken yesterday morning, out of the 52 cars in the area, 11 were parked on the wrong side of the road, another 11 had their bumpers in shin-bruising position and one was parked illegally at the tower in the middle of the road.

Campus Painted At Night Five Students Picked Up

Wednesday night was paint night on the campus. Two fences and the door of the Engineering building were redecorated overnight in bright colours.

It was reported that the night watchman at the Skule House saw five students at work on the door, and called the police. The five students were picked up by a police cruiser but were not held. Police officials say that no formal complaint was laid.

At the Engineering building the door and the sidewalk were covered with "Meds," skulls and crossbones, year markings and "Vic." in yellow paint. Men from the Superintendent's office worked all morning to remove the paint using a blow torch.

More than two hundred feet of blue fence, at the site of the new UC residence, were covered with Skule slogans and advertisements for Skule Nite in yellow paint. There were also smeared parts saying "Dirty Old Meds." The fence around the new library was similarly decorated in blue on the white background.

Dean K. F. Tupper of the Engineering Faculty said that he felt that those who put up or painted signs anywhere should remove them again. The President of the Medical Society claimed he had heard nothing o the paintwork.

The same night, all the plaques on the Medical Building were removed, and nobody knew or would say who took them.

Workshop

Those who have submitted news stories in The Varsity this week are urged to attend a workshop in the News Office at one o'clock today. This week's papers will be thoroughly discussed.

Whose Soiree Now?

By PETER GRANT

It's too late.

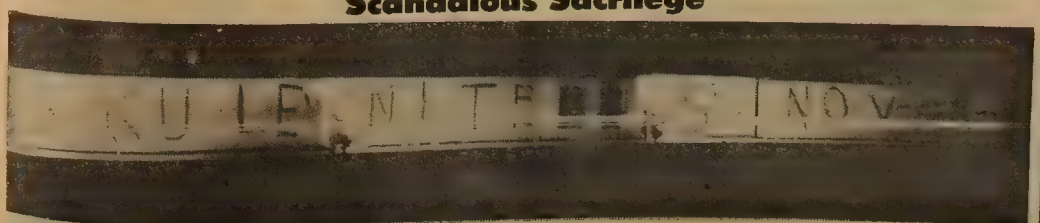
It's too late to come down here, begging for a chance to be editor, report, continues, fun copy, scrub the floor, or write sport columns. For tonight The Varsity is having its first big brawl of the season, and you can't come unless you're a Varsity contributor or a lush broad. However, if you've ever done anything (ANYTHING!) for the Varsity, the party is yours.

Varsity Parties, for the uninitiate are informal. They are held in divers dives; rarely in the same one twice. Your cunning, unscrupulous editors have conned a kindly sucker into housing tonight's fracas.

Those interested will not find the time and place in this article. The Vice Squad would love to know. You can locate the thing either (A) by listening for orgiastic noises or (B) by consulting a secret Bulletin in The Varsity office, written in invisible ink. When you walk in, various lovelies will sidel up and entice you to write something for Sunday night. Slap them across the mouth. They love it.

Library Stone Laid Today

The new Sigmund Samuel Library wing will have its cornerstone laid this afternoon at three o'clock by Dr. Sigmund Samuel himself. The Blue and White Band will be in attendance.



The Library will remain open during the proceedings but students will not be able to obtain books from the desk until four o'clock.

Dr. Samuel donated one and a half million dollars towards the construction of the three million dollar wing. The wing will house the Library for the faculty of Arts.

Chancellor Beatty, President Smith, Henry Borden (Vice chairman of the Board of Governors), Robert Feunel (Chairman of the Board of the Museum), Dr. Dunlop (Minister of Education), Dr. Wallace (Chief Librarian) and Eric Haldenby (Architect) will be present at the laying.

Rabbi Abraham Feinberg will open the proceedings with a dedication and prayer.

Scandalous Sacrilege

This splash of free publicity is obviously the work of Meds students. That group has always shown an alert interest in the financial success of Skule undertakings. Anyway everybody knows that Skule would never attempt to disfigure University property.

Our staff photographer did not finish lectures till late last night, hence the ingenious floodlighting of the scene. The Varsity comes through with the picturesque scenes night or day. Another picturesque scene may be found on the erection around the UC Men's Residence construction.

Wilson said "The students' environment is at least as important as academic studies."

HH Songsters Make Record University Songs On Wax

A record of Varsity songs has been finally produced. The Hart House Glee Club last spring recorded, with the co-operation of RCA Victor, a record of Varsity songs. This record, produced in both 33- and 78-rpm sizes, is on sale in the Hart House Tuck Shop, and in the SAC office in Hart House.

Included in the record are songs from all the major colleges and faculties on the campus, these include: "Follow the Blues", "Whiffenpoof Song", "We'll Remember Old UC", "Met Agona Stephanoe", "Lady Godiva', plus several others.

The idea of the record originated at Harvard University in the U.S.A. It became quite popular at several American Universities, and eventually the idea found it's way to Toronto. This record is the first attempt by any Canadian University to record it's most popular songs, and it is hoped that sales will make the venture successful.

The record should appeal to both graduate and undergraduate alike, to bring back memories of the days spent at University.

Varsity Graduates and Undergraduates can now have a permanent record of the songs so familiar to them during their college days in the Varsity Album produced by the Hart House Glee Club.

we go out and sin to pay our fees."

The discussion from the floor was executed in Greek, Latin, French and English. It entered the fields of economics, politics, metaphysics and religion. The Bible, Karl Marx and Confucius Newsbomb were among the authorities quoted.

While dealing with the question of sin on the religious level, cries of Hallelujah! greeted the conversion of one repentent sinner to the government side of the House.

One "true sinner", speaking from the floor, stated "I am so far from debt that you may see me for a $5.00 loan after all this is over."

Some of the more unusual speakers were one "farmer", a "southerner", a "representative of the International Contrition Council", and one Saint.

Intellectual Confusion Due To Decay—Martin

"Today we shop for personal philosophies of life as we would for groceries," said Doug Martin, '49 graduate in Business Administration of Western University, to an open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group on Wednesday.

"The result of the decay of old institutions is intellectual and spiritual confusion.".

"The startling claim of Baha'u'llah, founder of the Baha'i World Faith, is that he ushered in a new world order." Belief in Baha'u'llah as the most recent of the divine Messengers from God was expressed by Mr. Martin.

Martin felt that through this Manifestation, mankind would "graduate from the school" of development of "consciousness of God."

have come to Canada. He felt that it is our obligation to help these citizens in becoming an integral part of our community. A knowledge of their language and of their historical, cultural and social backgrounds will enable us to pave the way in eliminating racial and religious prejudices. This is essential to furthering our complete unity and harmony, he said.

At the close of his talk Prof. Goggio awarded proficiency medals to Yetta Halpern and Colleen Clark II UC Arts for their outstanding efforts in Spanish study.

Need A Skeleton

Pictured above is "Pop" Taylor, chief locksmith on the campus and his look-making machine (at least that's what we think it is). "Pop" has been key custodian for the last thirty-three years and has had some fascinating experiences including an episode which involved an unclad bathing beauty. "Pop" has 16 thousand, five hundred keys in his care and he still manages to look composed. The key room is located in Simcoe Hall.

—Varsity Staff Photo by Ross Dunn.

Locks and Lassies

Key Room Custodian

There they hung. Pegged to the wall by the nail through the hole in their head. Rows and rows of these cold lifeless objects that nobody, save a few, cared about. Scores of people walked by without so much as giving them a curious glance. This was it. This was the Key Room.

Hidden in the deep and dark confines of Simcoe Hall this small room opens and closes the University. Until 1924 the Key Room could be found in the U.C. cloisters. The keeper of the keys for the past thirty-three years has been Harry "Pop" Kelly.

Right now Pop has eleven thousand locker keys and five thousand five hundred door keys, all different, in his care. These keys cover all the locks from the College of Pharmacy on Gerrard St. to the Institute of Child Studies on Walmer Road to the Connaught Laboratory farm in King county right up to the Dunlap Observatory in Richmond Hill. Pop has a lot of ground to cover and did it personally when paved roads were a thing of the future.

Many summers ago when women were using the Hart House athletic wing, Pop was given an emergency call to open a locker. The woman in charge told Pop to wait at the head of the stairs until she herded the bathing suit clad girls away from the scene of action. Fifteen minutes after she left him she returned, her task accomplished.

But alas, her efforts were in vain. Standing near the scene of the troubled locker was a girl in the state of complete undress. The woman in charge became flustered but not the girl. With a smile and "Be ready in a minute" the unabashed female donned her bathing suit while the woman's blood pressure rose and Pop had a good laugh. The locker was opened and Pop put the whole episode down as an open and shut case.

Pop is an ardent bowler. It was he and Frank Selke (new manager of the Montreal Canadiens and then an electrician) who started the University bowling league. In 1943 Pop won the Canadian Bowling Association championship with a three game score of 978.

In the old days Pop was U. of T.'s jack of all trades. He is now specializing in his favourite job, that of locksmithing. Pop is a good man to visit on a rainy day. His stories are all open and shut cases.

Damned Lies

Liberals Not Socialist Says Victoria Student

"Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity — these are the aims of Socialism — and liberalism is not enough to achieve them," declared yesterday. He spoke in the series of CCF lectures entitled Socialism

"Liberals tend to stress liberty and give a half-hearted support to equality. But they neglect fraternity, the third principle of Socialism," said Stevenson.

"The Liberals place too high a value on the human personality. They also allege that Socialism, in attempting to ensure equality and fraternity, would destory the liberty of the individual. Socialists must convince liberals that socialism will not repress individual freedom."

Al Millard, the other speaker at the discussion group, traced briefly the development of liberalism. He said that the old laissez-faire doctrine of liberalism was dying out. Liberals were coming to realize that individual freedom could not be attained in a vacuum of government indifference and lack of state direction.

A foundation and framework of governmental laws and regulations were needed to protect individual freedom and to ensure social progress. Liberals therefore were jettisoning their ideas about the least government possible and recognizing that this hands-off policy greatly favoured the rich at the expense of the poor.

The speakers also stressed that the socialists were aiming at a classless society were true fellowship and fraternity were possible.

The meeting, held in Room 4, UC, was attended by about thrity people, and was chaired by Norm Chalmers, II Law, President of the U of T CCF. It was the fourth in a series of 22 lecture 'and discussion groups held under the auspices of the UC CCF club entitled 'Socialism la'.

Leader In Music To Develop Here Says Music Dean

More public and private support of good music in Canada was called for by Dr. Boyd Neel in his address to the music graduates of the Conservatory last night at Convocation Hall. "Canadian music, from a performing point of view, has no equal anywhere," stated Dr. Neel.

Dr. Neel, who holds medical degree from Cambridge University, has been recently appointed Dean of the Royal Conservatory of Music.

"There is a craving for music of the very best by the very best" stated Dr. Neel as he expressed the opinion that Canada's chances for establishing a national music were better than that of the U.S. because of less variety of nationality groups. He went on to say that "All genius has an element of nationalism in it."

"I venture to predict that a leader will suddenly appear in Canada and a national music will develop." said the noted British musician.

Dr. Edward Johnson, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Conservatory said in his introduction that, "no nation can live by material things alone." He stated that "the only ones which furnish the will to defend material things are the arts."

Dr. Johnson expressed the aim of the Conservatory to make Toronto "not only the musical centre of Canada, but to make it the musical centre of the whole world." He expressed the need for courageous and intelligent leadership in Canadian music.

Over fifty-five graduates received their diplomas from Dr. Sidney Smith as they were presented by Doctors Ettore Mazzoleni and Arnold Walter It is interesting to note that out of the 211 persons to receive diplomas this year, only 42 were from Toronto.

In the impressive Convocation Hall ceremony, the organ was played by Douglas Bodle.

itself have deserved any but the hollow mockery of liberal-seeming principles. It is surely better to be firm today in the hope of a more fortunate tomorrow, rather than to allow the future to be squandered in pursuit of Bolshevik utopias.

These observations will, I think, find strength in the fact of a total lack of passion in Britain over the communist issue. There are no McCarthys to besmirch the characters of honourable men. Only the guilty have need to fear, and that, I submit, is why Mr. Jagan has need to fear much.

LPP Member Advocates Better National Policies

"The last Federal election in Canada solved none of our problems," said Mr. Leslie Morris, at the opening meeting of the campus Labour Progressive Party Club yesterday. Canada faces an economic depression unless her citizens insist on a new national policy of peace, world trade, and settlement of all disputes by negotiation. "We must end the policy foisted on this country by the government, of selling-out economically to the United States," he said.

Morris, who is on the national executive of the LPP, felt that while on the surface things are stable and the people are satisfied below the surface is concern and anxiety as to what the future will bring forth.

He said that a struggle was being carried between a three centuries old once progressive social system, and the socialism adopted by the USSR, China and the thirteen other socialist countries. These lands will never return to capitalism, he said, but they are determined to make the new way work. There are difficulties and problems, but for the first time, they are being consciously tackled by the efforts of the whole population.

He said that there is danger of both an agricultural and economic crisis if steps are not taken soon to release Canada from the bonds imposed upon it by the financial policy of the United States, in matter such as hindering the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway. He said that there is a danger that Canada will become merely a hinterland economic satelite of the United Staes in the future unless the current policy of the Canadian government of trying to integrate our economy with the States. He stressed that this means that Canada will become merely a source of raw materials, and will be more likely to be drawn into any conflict which the States may join.

He said, however, that there are increasing signs of resistance to the betrayal and an overdue national consciousness is arising.

He also said that Canada must trade with the whole world, not restricting herself to countries which can pay American dollars.

To achieve full nationhood, he felt that Canada should have a new national policy. There should be a constitutional reform, including the drafting of a Bill of Rights, and the granting of full national rights to Quebec, including the right of separation and secession. Any nation in a federation which does not have this power he thought possessed only secondary citizenship.

If world trade were instituted, it would add to world peace, because economic relationships increase the dependence of nations upon each other, Morris said.

He also felt that soon, in the future, the Conservatives and the Liberals would cease their Tweedle-dum, Tweedle-dee, in and out government, and form coalition governments. To combat this danger, he hoped that the diversified elements of the left might form a program of limited economic plans, including such members as the French-Canadian movement for freedom hearkening back to the days of Loui Riel and Papineau, the CCF, Social Credit and LPP.

He said that a "people's" coalition would fight the fascist-type coalition of the right, although no one party would be strong enough to fight by itself, and the magnet to attract the people would be the independence of Canada.

Study Of Languages Has Cultural Value Believes Dr. Goggio

"The study of modern languages has a great cultural and practical value. It is one of the finest instruments of mental discipline," said Prof. Goggio in an address delivered to first and second year Wednesday morning students in Spanish, Italian and Portugese. He added: "this study develops memory, imagination, an increased vocabulary and broadens your outlook of world affairs. It helps you rise above the provincialism of your environment. It makes you a citizen of the world."

"No country can rely upon its domestic stores of knowledge he said. The civilized world is a cooperative manufacturer of knowledge. Therefore it must be investigated if we are to extend the boundaries of our native land and aid our international relations, he reasoned.

Horszowski And The TSO

Wednesday's Toronto Symphony Orchestra was definitely a challenging program. It included one work of each of the three great B's: Bach, Beethoven and Brahms. As the works are all comparatively well known, the interest could not depend on novelty but only on excellence of performance.

Due to the unusually exciting playing of Mieczyslaw Horsowski, the Beethoven Concerto No. 4 in G major did achieve this excellence. Physically, Horsowski is a small man, but artistically his stature is imposing. He played with a combination of clarity and fluidity so that the tone of a note while being distinct carried over and merged with the next. The piano became a singing instrument such as is the violin. In the cadenza which was written by Dr. D. F. Tovey to take the place of an extemporaneous one indicated by the composer, he displayed his extraordinary range and variety of sound. Throughout the Concerto Sir Ernest MacMillan gave a courteous co-operation to let him appear favourably.

The opening number, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 4 in G major seemed unsure. In places it fell apart and all the vigour leaked out. With the attempt to make all the strings of an orchestra sound like the few of the original score it became delicate to the point of fading away. The most constant element were the graceful running flute soli by Mr. W Fiore and Mr. E. Smith.

The confidence with which the orchestra attacked the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor was in direct contrast with the treatment of the Bach. The string tone in the Andante Sostenute made this movement quite touching. The wind sections too, redeemed earlier slips by sound playing in the fourth movement. But this confidence was not always used to their advantage. Too often it led to a merely automatic playing and all the gyrations of Sir Ernest could not bring it alive.

HERMAN GEIGER-TOREL

Another series of Hart House Sunday evening concerts begins this Sunday, Oct. 25, with a performance of Menotti's opera The Old Maid and the Thief. The performers will be members of the Royal Conservatory Opera Company.

The conductor of this complete performance of the short comic opera will be Nicholas Goldschmidt. The cast will consist of four well-known singers: Joanne Ivey, Joan Edwards, Joan Hall and Andrew MacMillan. Herman Geiger-Torel will be the stage-director.

The concert begins at 9:00 p.m. in the Great Hall of Hart House. Tickets are available free of charge to members of Hart House on presentation of their membership cards at the hall porter's desk between 8:00 a.m. and 10 p.m. daily.

Ladies will be admitted as guests of members on double tickets.

Survey Of German Universities

A survey of universities in Soviet occupied Germany showed that 28 percent of 1743 professors and lecturers did not possess doctor's degrees in the academic year 1953.

To rectify this shortcoming the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED) has set up an "Institute of Social Sciences" where Party members may take a three year course to obtain the doctor's degree.

Some requirements for admission are Party membership for a minimum of three years and experience in political and propaganda work. The subjects of the entrance examination are revealing with regard to the "scientific" value of the doctorate obtainable there: a knowledge is required of "History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union," "Dialectical and Historical Materialism" and "Political Economies of Capitalism and Socialism."

In keeping with professors' courses; this year's students at the University of Jena had to pledge that they would study "In the spirit of democracy, of social progress and of international understanding." They also had to promise to devote their whole strength to the building-up of the "German Democratic Republic."

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

INCONSISTANT, ALREADY YET

Talk about turnabouts, the best yet is found in the preface to this year's edition of the basketball rule book. Page 6 of that eminent publication states "the changes are few in number, will have little effect on the average game." After years of rule changes, the Rules Committee comes up with "few changes" just when they can correct probably their worst sin and give the game back to the players.

Last year, as all will remember, the makers of the rules dreamed up the one and one play situation. This rule allowed a player that was fouled the opportunity of taking a second free threw if the first was unsuccessful. The reason that the governors of that great indoor sport saw fit to drop this gem in the laps of basketball enthusiasts was that they were a little perplexed about the increasing number of fouls that were being called per game. The best illustration of this fact can be sighted from the Blue-Brockport game last year. In a 70-point game the Golden Eagles sank some 20 free throws. This little piece of information points up both the prevelance of illegitimate play and the importance of free throws. That new rule was supposed to discourage fouls.

THE BEST-LAID PLANS, ETC.

But things have a habit of not working out as you would like them to. Such was the case with the one and one. There were still more fouls than you could shake a stick at. And to top it off, the length of an average game was increased by about a quarter of an hour. As most fans were saying "it (the rule) added nothing to the game but a headache." Some of the college leagues in the States even went so far as to ignore the ruling. The rule makers ignored the one and one, too. They didn't take it out of this year's rule book.

THE SURE CURE —

But that doesn't solve the original problem of the increase in the number of fouls. As most sober people will admit, there is no place in basketball for fouls. True, that in such a fast game, played in a small gym, there are bound to be fouls. You can't avoid them all.

About the only way that you will kill or cure is by hitting a team that will foul where it will hurt the most. That's in the score. Why fool around wasting time and effort with a one and one? Let's give two points for a successful free throw. With the threat of two points hanging over their heads you can just bet that coaches will start insisting that their men keep away from fouls as much as possible. And if the referees got together and learned the rule books well enough to lay the law down in games the boys would soon learn that it doesn't pay to foul a man, intentionally or not intentionally.

END NOTES. The Junior Interfaculty Harrier will be a two-mile run this year is on Tuesday of next week and the Senior run is set for November 5. There will be an Interfaculty Sports Page next Tuesday morning, the first in a weekly series. Weekly that is if the interfaculty will be kind enough to provide enough news. To date things have been pretty slow on the mural front. That move of Coach Bob Masterson, Bruce Johnson to play tackle, should prove to be pretty smart, Bruce is a good defensive tackle.

Trinity Tops In Campus Ball Irish Win To Tie For First

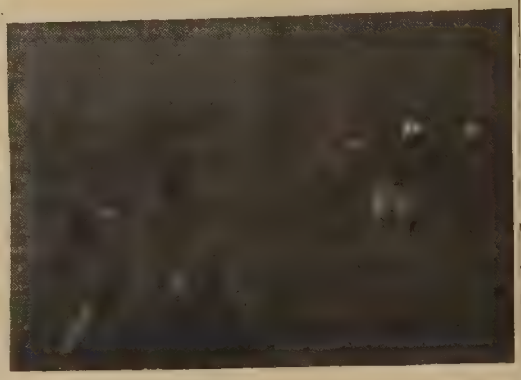
By MOISHE REITER

Fading back on the final play of the game, with his team one major down, St. Mike's quarterback threw a long pass right into the hands of Olie Babarad for a touchdown and a 7-6 victory over Forestry. The major only tied the score but Curt Russel's speedy sweep around right end for the convert made it all official for the Saints.

It was hard luck for the Tree men as they had successfully held their opponents throughout the match and seemed away to their first win of the young season, when a surprise surge by the lads of St. Mike's toppled all their hopes.

Forestry opened the scoring on a drive by Bill Hall for a major in the first period which was unconverted. Shortly after, the Tree-men almost made it two when their charging tacklers just missed a loose ball in the St. Mike's end zone but they had to settle for a single point. That was the end for the Foresters as far as the scoring went, but they certainly made themselves felt with hard tackling and some scoring drives that came very near.

St. Mike's, on the other hand seemed to be holding all their power back for that last stretch drive — and when their time came did they go! So quickly did the St. Mike's sting hit Forestry that they were still stunned when the convert attempt was made and didn't get near Russel as he shot around end.



Dentistry went all out, but towards the end they just fizzed out and Trinity ended up top-men with a 9-6 victory. In the first half there was no stopping the Dentists and there was no getting by them. Trinity sallies into the Dents' front wall usually went backwards, while Dents made long gains when they carried. The first touchdown was the work of a surging Dents wing-line that cracked through and forced a Trinity fumble behind the Black goal-line. Al Vraichulis nabbed the loose ball and put Dents one major up. Convert attempt went bad.

Tony Barwick put Trinity back in the game with a lovely 20 yard field goal just before the half to bring Trinity within two points of the Dentists.

Soon after the second period opened John Whyte dropped back behind a strong Trinity front wall and heaved a long one to Wally Kostiv who went the rest of the way for the first Trinity major of the day. From then on, aside from brief spasms of offensive power by Dents, it was all Trinity. For insurance Barwick added another point in converting the T.D.

In the final moments of the match Dents desperately started throwing in the direction of the Trinity goal, but alas, alack they were no good. Trinity ended things neatly by holding the ball until the gun.

JV's Go On Road To Take On Aggies

There have been ugly whispers floating about Inter-Collegiate Intermediate rugby circles to the effect that the O.A.C. Aggies may have a chance to gain possession of the Championship mantle which is now so nobly worn by the Varsity J-V's. Last week the Aggies nearly caught the strong Western Colts but the Londoners came out with an edge of one major to best the Farmer boys 20-14. This week the chaps from Guelph must produce against the Varsitys or put their title aspirations back in winter storage. A Toronto victory would just about salt the Shaw Trophy away in Hart House, with only another win over the Colts needed to make it official.

But, stay, — not so fast. Before Varsity can start polishing up their silver cup they have to prove ownership, and the ambitious Aggies, coupled with Baby Blue injury troubles could make for a rough afternoon up at Guelph on Saturday.

Bill Miller and Bob McDonald are still out of the Intermediate lineup with their identical bruised ligament injuries. This alone has almost given John McManus the shakes but then to add rubber to the fire, John's line has been further weakened by the breaking of John Prendergast's left thumb, a painful charley-horse that's bothering Rowney and a wobbly leg on diminutive half Al Wong. Prendergast broke his thumb some time last week, but, so hardy are Varsity footballers, he didn't know of the break till X-rays showed it. He'l wear a cast and be out at centre on Saturday. Rowney also will go but, like Prendergast, will not be at his usual form. Wong's leg is on the heal but he will not be overworked.

With the Blues inactive this week the Intermediates get a lucky break, — right when they need it. For this week-end the Blues have lent two of their stalwarts to the Juniors. Hefty Karl Kanteroff will brace the Baby Blue wingline and Murray Hadlow is adding to an already solid backfield as he comes in at wingback.

Last week in their practice session with Ryerson Rams the Baby Blues discovered some new passing combos and several new ball-carriers proved themselves able. Aggies will have to be very sharp if they are to stop Varsity's top passing ace Harry Wilson from passing the Baby Blues to a victory, now that Wilson has found that he can pass to almost anybody and find a sure receiver. Bill Karpinski and Vic Kurdyak are two good targets for Harry's flinging and when Gerry Lansky takes time out from his sterling blocking and tackling he can nab some nice passes.

Garry Banks is out for this game. In his place there is Harry Hall, Varsity tennis star, who counted two touchdowns against Ryerson last week. Hall had a bad elbow at season's start but came back last week and showed lots of power.

Such as Jim Keffer and Duart Farquarson on the line should stall the Aggies' ground movements and clear the way for the Varsity drives.

The Junior Varsity go to OAC tomorrow after their 15th win in a row. They have troubles, but if they go as they can the J-V's should make it no. 15 for the Blue and White . . . We're off to Guelph.

Gals In H-House Pool?

Don your water wings ladies, it's off to Hart House pool for the annual interfaculty swim meet to be held there at 7.30 Saturday night. OOps! these gals can swim! So thanks just the same, you can leave the life preservers at home. Besides, Hart House pool is quite well equipped, so we hear. No women allowed usually, you know; you know why too.

The gals making up the teams from every faculty and college on the campus have been practising for the big meet since the first week of school over at the UTS pool. Events in the meet will include racing, diving and several displays of synchronized work. Let it be known to all you competitors that the policy is this; no medical certificate, no competition.

On this campus, interfaculty swimming is somewhat of a warm-up for intercol competition. Most of the gals who make up the intercollegiate swim team will be competing tomorrow night. Coach Freddy Baxter says she has had her eyes open for potential members but as yet nothing has been settled.

Practises are scheduled to continue as before for Monday, Wednesday and Thursdays and the big weed-out will soon be in operation. Whether you entered the interfac meet or not, anyone is invited to join intercollegiate practices—until further "notice", that is.

Gals' Tennis Tournament At Queen's

The four top women's stars from the U of T left town yesterday to play the annual intercol match at Queen's. The tournament which is scheduled to get under way this morning will be continued into Saturday morning and afternoon to decide the champs in the intercol circuit.

Last year the Toronto squad tied with Queen's and Western for top place in a meet that was rained out for the first day. This left a pretty grueling schedule to meet on Saturday so this year, the girls are hoping for a bit of assistance from Mr. Sun.

Ann Innis, who has been heading this sport all Fall came second in the interfaculty finals singles event. Ann, who represented T.U. last year, is in 3rd year UC, and has been playing the sport for five years at the Toronto Lawn a Tennis Club.

First in the singles event was Mary Lynn Boys from Barrie. In third year Trinity, Mary Lynn has a tennis pro for a father — must be hereditary.

The two who will be playing doubles for this fair U are Ann Kilgour POT I, and Di Walker third UC. Di who also figured in the badminton circuit last season was also on the '52 tennis squad which battled it out at Western

Masterson Has Troubles Line Juggled as Experiment

By JIM PROUDFOOT

There are many football coaches who would be feeling very happy about the fortunes of a team which had won two of its first three starts by scores of 16-7 and 24-0 and lost its other by just three points. And they would be very pleased with the prospect of two weeks to patch up weak spots before the schedule resumed.

But Varsity Blues coach Bob Masterson fits the above situation and he isn't particularly contented about it.

The Blues won their last start 24-0 against McMaster Marauders last Saturday and don't play again for eight days—until Saturday, Oct. 1, when they make their annual safari to Montreal to play McGill Redmen. Masterson is using the two weeks for experimentation in hopes of bolstering what he regards as weak points in the squad.

Actually, the most pressing problem facing the team at present is th centre position. Hurt by the loss of Gerry Sutherland and Ray Yakasovitch from last year's team, the Blues came up with John Wismer as a first-stringer on offence. The defensive spot was wide open. John Prendergast and Jack Meaker tried out there, but are now with the intermediates. Then last Saturday, John Chisholm moved up from the Jaycees and was quite satisfactory. Unfortunately, Chisholm aggravated a shoulder injury he picked up at training camp and has been forced to call it a season. Prendergast has an arm in a cast (broken thumb) and Meaker is through with football, with the result that finding a man to play defensive centre is the big problem these days. It's reported that wingback Bob Leeming has been working at that spot and undoubtedly a number of fellows will get a shot at the position before next Saturday's game.

When end Fred Smale returned to action last week, another outside, Bill Horton was moved to flying wing, where he could utilize his defensive experience at linebacker, a postion Masterson though had been woefully weak in the 13-10 loss to Western. Horton lived up to expectations, but the surplus at end returned this week with Gene Chorostecki's recovery from a sprained ankle suffered in a pre-season game with Balmy Beach. To make room for Chorostecki, Bruce Johnson is being shifted to the defensive tackle spot. Another middle, co-captain Roy McMurtry will move into a line-backing chore on defense. Pete Maik, who worked on the secondary against Western, is practising at that spot in scrimmages this week.

One advantage of the two-week lay-off, as far as the Blues are concerned, is that it gives their guard platoon a chance to recuperate from the tough afternoon they had against McMaster. Frank Palermo sprained an ankle in the first quarter and had to play the game on it and Don Mattason was sidelined in the first period. Both will be in shape by next Saturday.

The backfield is in good shape. Bob Dale's ankle is coming around now and he'll be okay. Steve Oneschuk, Bob Pinkney and Bill McFarlane have come out of the three games so far without serious injury and the fullbacks, Phil Muntz and Don Cheeseman have no miseries.

Of course, it's always a toss-up who will start at quarter back. Ed Skrzypek, Olie Mandryk and Doug Geekie have each had a try at first-string and have been impressive.

Blue Notes—Karl Kanteroff a burly veteran tackle who coached Victoria college to the [illegible] last fall, will play for the intermediates in OAC today . . . . Coach Masterson stated in a radio interview last week that the Blues would beat Western . . . . The Mustangs come here Nov. 7 with the Blues heading to Kingston the following week to play Queen's in the last game of the seeason . . . . Western coach John Metras, alway quotable, says his current squad isn't the greatest he ever had—just a great team . . . Western plays Queen's in London tomorrow while McMaster entertains McGill.

BRUCE

Knox, SPS In Interfac

Knox College have established themselves as the team to beat in the Interfaculty soccer league. Possessers of an unbeaten record the Knoxians added another triumph to their string yesterday by defeating Wycliffe 2-1.

The match, played on the front campus saw Knox tighten their hold on first place in the league and stay 2 points ahead of their nearest rivals Emmanuel.

Yoos and Heal each drilled a shot into the Wycliffe net to keep one goal in front. Wycliffe's lonely counter was marked up by John Moffat.

In volleyball there wasn't much trouble for the SPS Seniors as they spiked Sr. Vic in two straight games. The first one was a softie for the Skuleboys as they won 15-5 but the second was just nothing for the boys in Blue and Gold as they took it 15-2.

UC Over Vics Pre-Meds Win At Lacrosse

Defending Champions of the Interfaculty Lacrosse loop, UC I yesterday took steps leading to a repeat of last season's mastery of their league as they ambled by a team from Vic 11-3. Don Carroll beat Vic all alone as he rapped in 4 goals but the men from UC added 7 more just to be sure.

Watson hat-tricked for the winners while Jack Rogers and trusty old Al Eagleson notched another two each.

Premeds I Year edged Trinity B's 7-6 in an earlier match. Two hat-trickers triggered in the game with one on each side — Sorokolit for the Medicos and Webber for Trinity.

If It's A Plaque You Lack...

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

Support Of The Band

We have heard many complaints this year deploring the lack of "characters" on this campus. In spite of the recent purloining of plaques, many students feel Varsity has lost its old-time spirit.

The failure of the recent pep rally, smaller attendance at football games, discontinuation of the Stadium Show and even the four-page issues of The Varsity are cited as examples of this decrease in spirit.

Students look to other campi for comparisons as often the lower spirit is blamed on the now complete exodus of World War II veterans.

Every University has had to contend with this loss but they have not all shown the decrease in esprit de corps evident on this campus.

Those attending the Western game in London two weeks ago were loud in their praise for the spirit exhibited there. The Varsity train was met at the station by the Western Purple Spur Society with the Western Band, cheerleaders and majorettes, who paraded the Varsity rooters to the hotel tying up downtown traffic in the process.

Why don't we show the same spirit and welcome those coming to games in Toronto? The only reason that has been offered is that the Blue and White Society has not the energy to make the arrangements.

We complain that the students here lack spirit, but have we the right to blame them now that it has become apparent that the Blue and White Society — the organization that is supposed to foster and direct Varsity spirit — has shown itself to be weak.

A lack of enthusiasm is bound to follow this. This year's Band has decreased in size from 48 to 36. Why? Band members of high calibre and earnest enthusiasm realize that they now have what amounts to a Joe-job.

The Blue and White could make it easier for the band to rouse some proud Varsity spirit if the financial burden were taken off the shoulders of the bandsmen. At the moment the bandsmen pay all expenses except trainfare during away weekends.

Can the Blue and White society assume these expenses as does the Purple Spur, or does B and W stand for Big and Weak?

A Look Inside

In keeping with the spirit of a motion passed at the recent NFCUS Conference, The Varsity will, from time to time, print news releases from publications of the International Union of Students. Some of these are published today.

The NFCUS resolution recommended that "Canadian University Press (an organization of university student newspapers) send information and clippings on Canadian student activities to IUS provided that IUS agrees to provide NFCUS with copies in all languages of all IUS news of Canadian activities."

THE VARSITY

Member Canadian University Press
Published five times a week by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Opinions expressed in these columns are not necessarily the opinions of the Students' Administrative Council

Per Capita Fee Issue

From Dollars to Donuts?

The second in a series of articles analyzing developments and issues at the recent NFCUS Conference. Below, the question as to whether the national student federation is worth the increase in fees or not, or whether NFCUS is worth anything, is discussed.

By RICH ANCO

The big question that appeared to rest on the tongues of the 60-odd delegates to the last NFCUS conference was "Can the Federation really do something on a large scale?" And they answered it in the affirmative by voting for an increase in per capita fees.

THEIR REASONING FOLLOWED ALONG this line: NFCUS hasn't done much in the past, but that's because it hasn't had the money to do anything, so we should vote to give them more money to get more accomplished. Only eleven universities, Toronto among them, went along with this.

The fact is that there will be nine universities that, this year, will definitely not be paying 50 cents. In other words if NFCUS was planning or had planned on some expanded program it would have to be paid out of the coffers of just over half the member universities.

THIS WHOLE IDEA IS ALL the more amazing when realize that McGill and the University of British Columbia (two of Canada's largest universities next to Toronto) have turned thumbs down on any increase this year. Along with these two are: Bishop's, McMaster, Sir George Williams, UNB, Queen's, Manitoba and Dalhousie.

The position of UBC is not wholly unjustified. Its delegation argued that NFCUS could never be effective if it only spoke in terms of the amount of per capita income it received. There have been fees hikes from six to twelve to twenty cents, but it's very difficult to say that NFCUS has soared forth on any like parallel.

AND THAT BRINGS UP THE question of what "startling" plans NFCUS has for the coming year. A concentrated look through the almost 20 reports and sub-reports will show the same results that have been shown in the past. In National Affairs the Massey Commission report on national scholarships is still the big thing. Nothing was done by NFCUS last year, but (and this is to their credit), they're still trying. No concrete plans were laid as to how this national organization was to go about pressing for the scholarships.

In International Affairs, the Federation reaffirmed its desire to have closer relations with CoSec, although even now its financial contribution is not what CoSec had expected. The bungling of NFCUS on the IUS question has already been brought up in an earlier article.

In Student Government, a Declaration of Student Rights was written up that was bursting over with a good amount of idealism. It reminded this observer of the American Bill of Rights — high-sounding but relatively ineffective when put to a real test.

IN FINANCE, NFCUS created the talk of the conference. The delegates in this group stayed up until 6:30 a.m. one morning to draw up a budget based on a revenue they were not sure they would get. The budget was accepted and the Federation will now proceed to operate on a 50-cent per capita revenue from eleven universities and a 20-cent from nine.

What will happen if NFCUS does not get the increase of thirty cents they expect this year from the eleven members, no one knows. One thing is sure — their program would have to be melted down. And if their program is melted down, it will certainly not be any better, if not worse, than last year's. Plans to get students exempted from paying unemployment insurance have been abandoned this year already.

IF THE FEE HIKE WAS TO improve and widen NFCUS plans, then it has apparently failed for this year's conference shows that the same things have been discussed and decided upon in the past. The one big question is: "Will this be the year when one of these decisions is put into practice?"

It is difficult to say this is the year. NFCUS has held together on this nebulous "hope" and has periodically revealed its tremendous potentialities to the Canadian student community. It has definitely failed in the past — and the decisions of the 17th conference are any indication, has failed again — to materialize these potentialities.

And so, in this frame of mind, we must ask if NFCUS is worth the 50 cents or if it is worth anything at all.

In A Mudbath Of Idealism

Editor,
The Varsity.

My opinion of your paper was greatly depreciated by the disgusting cartoon and seditious, unrealistic article on the British Guiana question. Instead of showing loyalty to the Crown and giving constructive criticism in her difficulty with a ticklish problem, the writer has merely taken the opportunity to blow on his own "democratic" trumpet. It is extremely self-satisfying to wallow in a mud-bath of narrow-minded idealism rather than face the hard, cold facts of actuality.

The prompt efficient action of the British Government in stopping what could have constituted an extremely unpleasant and difficult situation, should be applauded. Fennimore Cooper's conception of the "noble savage" has not yet been disregarded by some elements who fail to realize that franchise is worthless unless the people to whom it is given are sufficienty educated to appreciate the significance of its responsibilities. Criticism, if any, of British policy should be directed towards their initial action in removing educational qualifications for the franchise. The recent events have shown how easily the natives can be swayed by the "free candy" of sugary socialist propaganda.

Jagan, in a recent interview with reporters in London refused to state whether or not he was influenced by, or sympathetic towards, communism and communist methods. Silence in this case appears clearly as an admission of guilt. It is extremely important for Britain to protect her Colonial interests and the welfare of the children of "The Great White Mother." As a matter of realistic defense policy it is necessary that communism must not be allowed to develop a germ cell on the continent of South America.

Yes, "rule by the 'people' " is fine when these 'people' can be trusted to make mature decisions. Until that time however the well-being of [illegible] and the free world must be protected by the time-tested guardian stable authority. The [illegible] ment of Great Brit[illegible] congratulated and s[illegible] pecially by us wh[illegible] for the speed of its move[illegible] brave disregard for those muddle-thinking, narrow-minded innocents who fail to realize that strong measures are necessary to protect democracy as a [illegible]

Especially Pernicious

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Regarding two items in Wednesday's the Varsity, I feel a few words should be said. I refer to the CCF Club's profound deliberations on the Guiana question, and the editorial on the same topic.

It seems a hue and cry is being raised about the suspension of the British Guiana constitution. It is not surprising to hear the CCF screaming "British Imperialism." That party has long been the despair of all those who favour intelligent and firm politics in the present world situation. But something better might have been expected from the editors, who have hither-to shown reason and moderation.

I, for one, feel that it was high time to put a stop to the dangerous actions of the Communist clique at the head of the P.P.P. Party. And the British are wisely disregarding a maliciously false political principle, all too current nowadays. In an age besotted with ridiculous theories, that of the divine right of democratic self-rule is especially pernicious Because Canada and other advanced countries are fit for democracy, it does not follow that all countries are. The British weighed British Guiana in the balance, and found it wanting; our thanks are due to the British Government for their perception and determination. Such action will help to dispel that pretty myth, that engaging fallacy, of the right of self-determination of peoples". Some are fit for it, others are not.

It is to be hoped that this action is a token of things to come.

Phoney Liberalism

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In reading the leading article in The Varsity today, I was shocked by its inverted intellecteelleectualism and phoney liberalism. It seems that there always are some men amongst us willing to believe the worst of those concerned who deserve the best.

Such, at any rate, is the present case. The article concerned complains of Britain's suspension of the British Guinana Constitution. It cites no proof whatever to show that this action was not justified. It merely states that Mr. Jagan denies being a communist. Of course he does! Would not any such communist do likewise in similar circumstances?

From fallacious premise The Varsity then moves on to fallacious argument. It feels that a principle has been violated" in the British revocation of the "liberalized" constitution'. One wonders how long a communist government in the colony would

McGill Professor Damns Daily's Dillies

Montreal, Oct. 22—CUP—"I cannot recall reading any other periodical . . . that is as illiterate as the McGill Daily," said a member of the McGill English department.

Assistant Professor S. E. Sprott said the "Issue of the Daily for Monday, Sept. 21 was a disgrace to the University," as it "Contained such illiterate idioms, and so many outright errors in grammar, spelling, and punctuation that its publication on a university campus seemed presumptuous."

In a letter to the editor of the McGill student newspaper, Professor Sprott asked the rhetorical question "Why is the Daily as bad as it is?" and answered it with two alternatives, "Gross ignorance on the part of those responsible for the paper," or "Hypocrisy . . . because from time to time the Daily has had quite a bit to say about literature and about its own standards."

The Professor suggested "A thorough revaluation of the standards and aims of the Daily." He disapproved of the editorial policy of the paper which demands nothing more from prospective staff members than "A rudimentary knowledge of spelling." He suggested that staff members should be "At least moderately competent in spelling."

Who's To Blame?

The University President:
Such rawness in a student is a shame,
But lack of preparation is to blame.

The High School Principal:
Good Heavens! What crudity! The boy's a fool;
The fault of course is with the primary school.

The Primary School Teacher:
Poor kindergarten blockhead! And they call
That preparation! Worse than none at all!

The Kindergarten Teacher:
Never such a lack of training did I see!
What sort of person can the mother be?

The Mother:
You stupid child! But then you're not to blame;
Your father's family are all the same.

The particular issue to which Professor Sprott referred was the "Freshman Issue" which was intended to introduce freshmen to various aspects of McGill. Professor Sprott asked "What were they to think when they found that the university newspaper contained schoolboys' errors in spelling like 'fourty' and 'immesurably'?" He quoted a passage from the paper, "Courses must be planned with the aid of a timetable. These will be issued to all students, but they should also check with the revised timetable . . . ," and asked the editors what "enlightenment" the freshmen could receive from "Prose constructed as badly as this passage."

In looking for an answer to the question of "Why students put up with such a paper," he spoke of the "Peculiar tolerance which exists on the campus for literary expression that is halfway to being correct." Professor Sprott denounced this tolerance as "A symptom of disease" and not "A mark of broadmindedness or maturity."

The Professor closed his letter to the Daily's editor with a comment on both the paper and the university stating, "The university community that perpetuates its mistakes and thinks that correctness and accuracy, not to mention grace and force of expression do not matter very much, though it may bring out a paper every morning for forty years, it will not matter very much."

Traditional Tap

Dr. Sigmund Samuel, member of the board of Governors, spread the mortar, and above, gives the traditional three taps to the cornerstone of the new Samual Library being constructed on the campus. The library was dedicated by Rabbi Abraham Feinberg last Friday afternoon.

Library Donor, Dr. Samuel Cements New Cornerstone

Dr. Sigmund Samuel laid the cornerstone Friday to the new $3,000,000 library wing that carries his name.

"Great universities can exist without research institutes but they cannot exist without libraries," President Sidney Smith said. Libraries feed the mind and the imagination, he said. "Here there will be unshackled learning."

Dr. Smith told of Dr. Samuel's many generous gifts to the university. "He has chosen to use his wealth in well doing to befriend mankind. To this we accord him our warmest tribute and our highest praise, and we thank him," he said.

After spreading the mortar and giving the stone the usual three taps, Dr. Samuel told of his lifelong interest in books. "Reading has always been a great treat for me," he said. During the days of his formal education he diligently pursued the three R's, he said. Friday afternoons were given over to reading any books we wished and I always considered this the treat of my 'education.'

Dr. Samuel felt that education should be sought after and the library was the best place to do it in. The history of Canada had always thrilled him, he said. Here he found out that truth was stranger than fiction.

Because of Dr. Samuel's great interest in Canadian history he was instrumental in the foundation of the Canadian Gallery on Queen's park behind the library. He told the audience that a special bridge will connect the new library to the Canadian Gallery. Dr. Samuel himself donated many paintings and books to the Canadian Gallery. He hoped that more people would frequent the Gallery when the new library wing is opened as a way to enrich their knowledge of Canadian history.

Within the cornerstone were sealed for posterity a number of documents relating to the university. In the centre of the stone in a hermetically sealed copper box

Caput Meets On Weekend To Consider Panty Raids

Last week's panty raids have caused some reaction in University administrative circles. This weekend the Caput, the governing body of the University, met to consider what action was to be taken against the raidiers who marched on Whitiney and Annesley Halls and St. Hilda's after the centennial pep rally held over a week ago.

Last night members of the Caput could give no comment on the results of the meeting. An official report is expected later in the week.

The raids on the women's residencse began last Fridiay night when over 200 students stormed down on the buildings shouting "We want pants." The Blue and White pep rally and street dance had just about come to an end when these students decided to add to the program. In little time, the American college pastime was under way.

An open cellar window in Annesley Hall gave the raiders their first panties, nighties and brassieres. Miss Margaret Prang, don of Annesley, was reported in a downtown daily to have called the panty raids "juvenile". It was also estimated that $50 worth of underwear had been snatched from the coeds' rooms there.

The raiders, however, were partly repulsed at the other two residences, and marched down St. George St. tying up midnight traffic.

Several university officials have commented, off the cuff, that something had to be done about the panty raids which last year were a frequent occurrence in US colleges.

Blast Burns Engineer At Mac Football Game

An engineer blew himself up at last week's McMaster game.

John Vince, III SPS, is responsible for half-time entertainment at the Toronto home games. At last week's game, Vince, the man in the black cloak, was running around the field exploding gunpowder.

He tried it once too often, and it exploded in his face. Now his face in burned and his left hand is in a cast.

Vince remembers what happened though. "I boobed," he said. He misplaced the fuse he was suppose to use, and tried touching the match directly to the gunpowder. His advice to other would-be firebugs: USE A FUSE.

Undaunted by this, however, Vince's cast will be off for the Western game, and he will probably go on touching off gunpowder —but not in the same quantity. He says it is only a rumor that he will gry to blow off his right arm.

Vince says he has made application to have the Blue and White secretary accompany him to lectures. "I am not left-handed but she is a vey nice girl," he said.

Warm Prose

$3 Worth Of Pulp Gems

By CHRISTINA ALI

Did you realize that people read The Varsity? That is, people as differentiated from students; you know the type who earn a living by some means or other. They not only read it — some of them even pay for it.

The story behind this phenomenon is the fact that The Varsity has a mailing list of about 200. Somebody at the University of Toronto Press industriously addresses and mails each issue to subscribers all the way from London, Ontario to London, England (the most exotic destination point on the list) and various places in between.

People on the mailing list fall into several categories; some of them are voluntary subscribers, some have large expense accounts and others have our gems of wisdom thrust upon them.

In compliance with general newspaper practice, copies of The Varsity in which their clients run ads are sent to advertising agencies. Even at that some of them keep on using The Varsity as an advertising medium year after year. For publicity purposes columnists on all three of the big er Toronto dailies get copies and so do various magazine editors and radio personnel. It must warm their litter y hearts to read the scintillating prose contained in The Varsity.

A large part of the mailing list is taken up by the addresses of other college papers throughout Canada and in several states across the line. This is the Exchange list and The Varsity also receives copies of newspapers from the universities to which the Toronto paper is sent. Wonder what they think about pantie raids in Virginia? Do they have pepless pep rallys in Saskatchewan?

All of these could be called strictly business readers but the surprising thing about the list is that it contains the names of about 50 people who fall into none of the classifications described above. They're the ones who actually pay $3.00 per year just to receive the eight-page rag five times a week. The only explanation which the SAC (they handle the subscription list) can offer is that "they're just interested in the University." Anyway their devotion is touching.

Their number includes a well-known Toronto musician, an ex-editor of The Varsity who made good in the journalism field (he's an assistant editor on a large Canadian magazine) and assorted doctors, lawyers, businessmen and big wigs.

Can't you see them browsing through it now. They must be seized with fits of deep purple nostalgia when they realize that somewhere in this weary world things are normal, life is as it should be — the Skulemen are looking lingerie again. It must restore their faith to know that Vic is feuding with Trinity, Dentsmen are feuding with Medsmen, Intellectuals are feuding with The Varsity and S.P.S. is feuding with everybody and anybody.

So stifle those scornful snorts of laughter and stop using The Varsity or a pen wiper. There may come a day when you'll be so far gone you'll actually want to pay for it.

What Is Carabin?

Hope And History

By STAN SCHIFF

"Ah, if Canadians could know each other more thoroughly, how much more deeply they would love each other," said Dean Levesque of the Faculty of Social Work, Laval University, recently. He was deploring the lack of understanding between Anglo, and French Canadians.

With a thought similar to this in mind, the first Carabin Weekend was organised in 1947. (The term itself is French slang for student.) Forty Roman Catholic, French-speaking students from the University of Montreal visited Varsity for one weekend, while their hosts returned to Montreal later in the year.

The potentialities of their annual exchange explain why it is now a highlight of the year's extra-curricular activities. In addition to meeting students whose enthusiasm and gaiety we can only admire, we meet a system of values grown from a different culture, which is often loftier, and less materialistic than our own. The students from Quebec have grown up in this distinct set of culture values, and are willing to struggle to maintain them.

The opportunity provided by the weekend, to study and attempt to understand these attitudes from a historic and functional point of view has proved fascinating and informative for all those who have taken part in past years.

A liberal mixing of parties, discussion speeches, and a banquet provide the ground on which these varying ideas and concepts are exchanged.

Since the University of Montreal is composed strictly of students in professional courses, lack of interest, and small representation from science faculties in Toronto has disappointed the Carabins in recent years. The weekend in Toronto will be held early in December. Participation is through application forms in the SAC Office.

Say Too Many Activities Causing Queen's Failures

Kingston Ont., Oct. 20—CUP—The deans of two Queen's University faculties believe that failures in freshmen year are partially caused by too many activities at the beginning fo the first term.

Dean D. S. Ellis of Science and Dean R. O. Earl of Arts said that the large number of activities planned for the first few weeks make it difficult for students to settle down as the term progresses.

Dr. Earl stated that faculty societies should discuss the matter of freshman reception and bring it before the faculty-student committee for consideration.

Student reaction to this proposal took both sides as some believe that the freshman reception provides the only means by which students will get to know each other and their university.

One senior science student said "A re-organization of freshmen reception activities is necessary. The main emphasis should be placed on helping them instead of telling them."

McGill Offers New Course

Montreal, Oct. 5(—CUP)—McGill is now offering a three-year night course in journalism. Four courses will be taken in each year, leading to a certificate.

Individual courses will also be available. Students write in all courses, are sent out on assignments. Their work is analyzed carefully in class. Over 24 Montreal newspaper men and women will be taking part.

SAC Requests Rally; Maybe Before Playoff

There may be more pep rallies this year.

A delegation of SAC members has asked the Blue and White Society if it will be possible to have more pep rallies this year. No definite arrangements will be considered until the SAC meeting next Wednesday at which time the question will likely be discussed, according to Blue and White Publicity Chairman John McKellar. However, SAC President John Stalker has asked for more rallies this year — one before the Western game November 7.

not consider it feasible to hold a rally before the Western game, Chairman Paul Lorch said last night. "While the pep rally before the McMaster game two weeks ago was very successful, we can't push our luck too far," he said. "The best way to have a successful pep rally is to wait until there is real provocation for one." The Blue and White feels that if the SAC wants another rally, one might be arranged before the playoffs if Varsity enters them.

The rally and dance before the McMaster game cost more than $200. The Blue and White hopes that the next rally can be held indoors to cut costs.

New Addition To Royal Vic

Montreal, Oct. 19—CUP—New hope for people with emotional disturbances is to be found in the new wing of the Allan Memorial Institute of Psychiatry. It is estimated that the new edition will increase the facilities of the institute byi some two or three times.

Dr. D. Ewen Cameron, director of the institute will preside at the opening ceremonies on the 21st of October.

The new wing represents the first of three large stages of the building program of the Royal Victoria Hospital and has been financed by the public through the hospital campaign of 1951.

Christian First, Then Churchman Says Fleming To Open Series

"Why I Am a Christian" was the topic last night of Donald Fleming QC, Progressive Conservative MP for Eglinton and prominent Toronto lawyer, at the first of a new series of Chapel Services in Vic Chapel.

"Jesus is the way, the truth and the life" This statement, Fleming said, is the chief basis of his personal belief in Christianity "To be a Chrstian, I must believe in God, and be a professed follower of Jesus; however I am a Christian before I am a church member," he said.

"Jesus is the way because his teachings are the highest moral standard," Fleming said. "His teachings cannot be followed without a belief in Him. Belief requires courage, but belief is no trouble for in Christ there is complete and absolute truth."

Fleming said the Christian way is practical for the only answer to sin is Divine forgiveness and the power of Jesus which makes us stand in the face of temptation. He emphasized the unlimited opportunity for service and stressed that the more Christian grace we share with others, the more we have for ourselves.

He concluded by saying that there is no easy way to follow Christ; however, after apparent failure, success will be real.

After the servie, a recept as held in Wymilwood Student Union at which Fleming met the students. The series is sponsored by the Victoria College Union and will present Dean Tupper of the Faculty of Engineering on November 8.

Bob Ticket To Winner Of Contest

At noon today some student will win a pair of free tickets to the Vic Bob Show "Tales of the Vienna Wolves." The Bob is offering tickets for next week to the winner of a contest.

The Vienna Transportation Company will be sending one of its vehicles aroudn the front campus at 1.00 o'clock. The vehicle will be drawn by a horse of questionable age. In fact the contest is to guess this horse's age.

Producer of Tales of the Vienna Wolves, Jim Wood, said yesterday "All onlookers will be treated to a sight of the gorgeous cheerleaders who will accompany the streetcar as well as the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band (SGLIRPB), which is well known in campus music circles."

Commenting on the show, Vic-man Bud Newburry said "Our kickline is bound to make at least half of Skule transfer to Arts."

Caledon Hills Farm, shown above, is entering its fourth year as the property of the University of Toronto. Designed to give students an opportunity to get out of the city during the academic year, the farm is in use almost every weekend by various campus clubs. Its 158 acres has cliffs and caves, quarries, two natural swimming pools, and woodlots.

Natural State Submission Required In UN – Martin

"To keep civilization in peace and order we must submit ourselves to some ruling organization," said the Honourable Paul Martin, Minister of Health and Welfare and head of the Canadian Delegation to the United Nations, in an address to the United Nations club on the campus Friday.

So much depends on the U.N., he said, "for the peace, tranquility and order of civilization are not possible unless we have the machinery of world government." He predicted that the day must come when the independent states in the U.N. will be willing to hand over some of their sovereignty in order to support a real world government.

He encouraged his audience to support the U.N. with a loyalty which will not allow others to belittle it. "Not a blind loyalty, but an honest conviction that it has a most important role in world order, is the spirit we must give the U.N. in order to make it a success."

As an example of its importance, Mr. Martin explained the action taken in Korea. Instead of following the example of its predecessor, the League of Nations, and offering appeasement to the aggressor, the U.N. remained true to its charter and took arms against the aggressor. For the first time in history, an international organization, based on the principles of collective security, was able to move its members into organized action to preserve world peace.

In his undergraduate days at St. Michael's College, Mr. Martin was a member of the League of Nations Organization on the campus. He told the club that one of his keenest disappointment was the failure of this organization in 1938, and the betrayal of charter by its most faithful adherents.

However, in spite of his disillusionment about the failure of the League of Nations, Mr. Martin has never lost his belief in the supremacy of a world law. This, he feels, is not impractical or idealistic. "The impractical people," he said, "are those who believe that we can carry on in the face of international circumstances as they are, without such a world body."

World Co-operation Emphasized By Lie US Action Praised

In the event of another war, sitting on the fence will be impossible, said the first secretary-general of the United Nations, Mr. Trygve Lie, in speaking at the opening lecture of the Holy Blossom Temple Forum last Saturday evening. In pointing out that distance has been shortened considerably in the last decade by modern devices he said, "We are today living in a time of interdependence."

He named Soviet Russia as the chief stumbling block to the UN aim of ultimate world peace and security when he said, "The reason why we didn't get the peace which we hoped for was that the Soviet Union chose to follow a policy of Communist Imperialism. "It was a shock to me and a shock to everyone," he added.

In answer to a question from the floor concerning US domination of the UN, Lie replied, "I don't think they are trying to dominate. They are lobbying." Here he was referring to both the US and Russia. "You criticize the US," he cautioned, "but don't ever forget where we would be without them today.—try to keep your temper."

Lie praised the action of the United States and the Security Council at the opening of hostilities in Korea. "If the security Council and if the United States hadn't taken such a brave atttude the saftey of the Pacific Ocean would have been nil," said the ex-secretary-general. "For the first time, collective action against aggression was established."

In commenting on discord in the UN between the Allies he said that now they have to keep together and that there must naturally be differences but they must resolve themselves. "The only ones to benefit would be Communists," he added.

Lie praised Canada highly for her aid in the second world war, for her diplomatic co-operation and for the progress she has made in her development.

The Norwegian statesman had many recommendations to make which he felt would aid the international organization to meet its problems. He stated that there must be some changes concerning new members, saying, "I think there should be no veto concerning new members in the UN." Lie pointed out the "resolutions have no binding effects on the member governments," giving as one reason the lack of police force.

In the question and answer session which followed his lecture, Lie came out strongly against the admittance of Red China to the UN. "I think it would be untimely and a danger to the future of the peace organization to allow any nation to shoot its way into the UN," he said.

Mr. Lie said in conclusion, "I hope the day will come when you and I can go to bed without fear in our hearts." "All those who support the United Nations support peace and security in their own countries as well."

Phlash News Hits Campus

Yesterday another College publication hit the campus. This four-page mimeographed news bulletin is published at the Faculty of Pharmacy and is called "Phlash," (not Flash).

Organized by the Publicity committee composed of Bud Gillap, Andy Truan, Bruce Williams, and Ron Anco, it is the first such paper ever to be printed by its students.

The "Phlash" stated in one of its first articles that with the completion of Pharmacy's new athletic constitution there might again be an athletic letter. However, it seems to be taking a long time to complete, it said. The athletic letter, a Pharmacy crest, superimposed on a red "P" was dropped a few years ago because many felt it had lost its value.

The purpose of "Phlash" is to keep Pharmacy students informed of activities and news around the Faculty building on Gerrard Street, the paper said.

Comin' Round

Wild and Wooly

Rocky Geologist

After a summer of not seeing each other, two friends met last week in front of Hart House.

"Hi, John!" called one, moving a lot of hair.

"Who are you!" asked the other, a clean shaven character with that back-to-college look on his face, and a blazer below it. He looked closer, and a slow look of amazement covered his face.

"No, it can't be," he stammered.

Every year students return from the devious occupations of the summer changed beyond recognition. Their friends pass them like strangers, strangers pass them like . . . anyway, they look around after them, and everywhere they go, they create a minor sensation. Beards. They come back with beards—razors and television to the contrary.

We aren't sure whether that's a real cliff or just a big bluff, but the bewhiskered character clinging to its face is Dave Rostocker, IV Physics and Geology. The locale is somewhere in the of Bauff, where the geologists went last summer to look for Dave found some.

Dave Rostoker, IV Physics and Geology, is one of those modern Robinsons, who has acquired his ancient look in a particularly modern manner—hunting for oil.

As something called a junior geologist for the Shell Oil Company of Canada, a position he obtained through the University, he rode, climbed, cut, and walked his way through 75 square miles of wild virgin country in the Foothills of the Rockies (how does that tune go again?). It took him three months to do it, just long enough to grow a respectable chin concealer.

After flying out to Calgary, Dave spent three weeks in the "exploration office" preparing maps, air photographs, campus equipment, books and other such useful gadgets. Then came an outfitters ranch, situated somewhere in the middle of nowhere, or 25 miles from Sundre, Alberta.

To get horses, the outfitter, who has been a rodeo cowboy for 33 years, and now is a mere 68, simply goes out on the range and ropes some of the wild unbroken ones. Simple. Don't have to bother about stable or feed.

The party which set out for the bush consisted of four geologists, three wranglers, and 22 horses. It carried a month's grub, tents, stoves, and camping equipment.

On the job, which was mapping the geological structure and stratigraphy (study of strata) 50 miles north-east of Banff, they moved camp about every three days. Durcreeks, rivers and ridges for outcroppings of bedrock. These were pinpointed on airphotos and such things as type and "attitude" of rock studied. A party which included Prof. W. Torwell of the Department of Geological Sciences had gone in the year before to do preliminary surveying. This year's expedition finished the work.

"Because the average elevation was 5000 feet, we went to bed early, and didn't have much 'night life' " says Dave. "All summer we only saw civilization twice; when we went into Calagary for supplies, I liked it."

Roaming some of the wildest country in the world were herds of wild horses, elk, swift and silent deer, antelope, muskrate, mink. Every stream was choked up with beaver dams, and the banks were crisscrossed with the footsteps of beers. Rocky mountain walls climbed the sheer mountain walls defying gravity, and fish went for unbaited hooks.

The Red Deer River and the Panther River were the major water arteries along which Dave's party did its exploration. At the end they returned to Calgary, and Dave flew back to "civilization" full of wild memories, a desire to go back next year—and a beard.

TAG DAY

The Red Feather tagging, scheduled for last Thursday will be staged tomorrow without fail, it was announced this weekend by Bill Baldwin, chairman of the International Students Service Commission. Tags are now available, and taggers will be on the campus before 9.00 a.m. he said.

Statements Of Loyalty At Nevada

Berkeley, Calf., Oct. 14—CUP— The Nevada Board of Regents has decided faculty members of the University of Nevada will be required to give "loyalty statements".

The Regents emphasized that the statement is not a loyalty oath as it is not given under oath.

The statements require faculty members to state whether they are, or ever have been members of the Communist Party. They will be issued at the end of the present school year and those members who admit to communist affiliation will not be given new contracts. Those indicating past connections will be suvmitted to thorough investigation.

Some Nevada faculty members said privately that the new order will be resented on the campus but doubt it will result in an open fight.

Many Benefits Offered By COTC

The aim of the Canadina Officers Training Corps is to train officers for the Reserve and Active Forces of the Canadain Army. The training program consists of a winter lecture course and a summer of practical training with the Canadian Army Active Force. In the third summer, the student, who is now qualified as a second lieutenant, is employed as an officer with the Active Force anywhere in Canada, or he may be attached to the Canadian Brigade in Germany.

The COTC has a great deal more to offer than a holiday with pay. It has advantages in leadership training, plus good experience in group activities that should prove of lasting value to the University graduate in whatever walk of life he may choose.

The programme is designed to fit with students' academic requirements and is based on the practical experience demanded by the faculties each summer.

The Army looks to our university for officer material. In the university graduate it looks for leadership qualities, the initiative, and the intellectual ability, along with integrity, that make for a good army officer.

To supplement the present flow of officers from the COTC and in response to the demand created by our commitments in Korea and in Europe, the Army has made the New Regular Officers Training Plan. Under this plan Varsity students may apply to join the Active Force as Officer Cadets and proceed to a degree at this university. For this fees are paid and a living allowance provided. During the summer the officer cadet receives his practical military training, leading to his commission.

Recruiting for both the COTC and ROTP will continue, at 119 St. George Street, until the end of December.

NY College Rules Frats Cut Ties

Morgantown, W., Va., Oct. 15' (CUP) — The State University of New York has ordered all student sororities and fraternities to sever their national affiliations and to eliminate any artificial criteria in the selection of members.

The measure is designed to remove the taint of discrimination in groups of state-owned universities.

In a recent editorial the Daily Athenaeum states that a social group will include discriminatory clauses in its admission requirements whether written or generally understood.

The editorial also points out that the severing of national connections "may weaken the fraternities and sororities to a point where they can no longer function," and that the national orgainization has been the instrument of stripping fraternities of some of their more "disgusting parts" such as hazing.

The Athenaeum wonders if the universities will be "getting rid of discrimination in an effective enough way to justify the severing of the more beneficial ties."

Damage Bill To Springfield Totals $50

Springfield, Mass. Oct. 15 CUP "Who should foot the bill for damage done in a panty raid last spring?" is the question at Springfield College. The bill is $50.

The student's council president says his group does not want any part of it, since it is not responsible for the actions of individual students. He says the girls' fluttering of their undies down from windows was not "done in an effort to ward off attackers."

Trinity's Loss Edison's Gain

Dr. George Edison, Professor of Philosophy at Trinity College has been elected Dominion Fellow at St. John's College, Cambridge University, for the year 1954. He will leave for England at the end of December.

The fellowship is awarded annually to any Commonwealth university professor, but this is only the third time that the honor has been won by a Canadian.

Dr. Edison said yesterday that he will use the fellowship to continue the research for a book on Aristotle that he is writing. He has been working on the book, which deals with Aristotle's Metaphysics, for five years now.

Prof. Morowetz will replace Dr. Edison as Registrar of Trinity College and some Trinity students will take their philosophy lectures at Victoria when Dr. Edison leaves.

Reviewing The Revue

Jim Wood, the director of the Vic Bob Revue makes some inspiring remarks to the members of the cast. For the second year running, Vic is presenting an original book show and this year it's called "Tales of the Vienna Wolves". It all has to do with the cold war situation in Vienna.

The city of the waltz is under four power occupation, and the commandants of the four occupying powers, their wives, their aides and three brilliant anarchists help to thaw out the cold war—not to mention a beautiful woman, who seems to be able to outwit military red tape.

The show will feature a cast of over 75, including many experienced performers from last year's Bob Revue, in a variety of Viennese music and dancing. Tickets are on sale at the VCU coffee shop, and the curtain goes up Nov. 2, 3 and 4. (We're told it's 75 per cent sold out already.)

Blanche Thebom

Blanche Thebom of Metropolitan Opera fame last Thursday night appeared before a capacity crowd at Eaton Auditorium to open the current concert series at the popular seventh floor concert spot. The well-known mezzo-soprano opened the concert with the Mozart aria Parto, parto from "Titus". It is a very exacting work, demanding an extensive range and a high degree of dramatic vocal skill. Miss Thebom proved herself worthy of the task although at times she seemed at her vocal limit even though her dramatic ability never failed her.

Her second group consisted of five songs by Brahms. Generally speaking this was her best for it was the medium to best express her natural ability. Her characterizations in the lieder group were their selling-points, being thoroughly enjoyed by all. In fact they were so enjoyed that Miss Thebom obliged with an encore by the same composer.

The next selection was an area Ne me refuse pas from Massanet's opera "Herodiade", which Miss Thebom sang with vigor and conviction. For an encore she sang of a girl, young, demure and simple who misses the love she never had. The illusion was credible.

Her next group consisting of two songs by Faure and three short pieces by Ravel were her most enjoyable selections. Her voice was lyrical, intimate and flexible, if not always in perfect intonation. One of the Ravel songs, called Vocalise was especially unusual, being based upon popular vocal exercises used by singers as warm-up procedure.

The last group was negro spirituals—My Lord, what a Mournin' and The Gospel Train. Spirituals always appeal to audiences, and these two being particularly fine were very well received. Several encores followed, Cyril Scott's Lullaby, My Heart at the Sweet Voice from "Samson and Dalilah," Tarantella, La Danza by Rossini, The Bird and the Beast by Dowerty and finally the well-known Oliver Cromwell. It would be reasonable to assume that Miss Thebom was well liked, and I might add, with good cause.

AND CRAFTY ART

A Y Jackson

"IT would be almost an impertinence", said Vincent Massey, Governor General of Canada, "for me to comment on these paintings."

"IT would be nice", said Mary Burbridge, Culture Editor of The Varsity, "to have sixty lines or so on A. Y. Jackson." Our invitation in one hand, our impertinence in the other, we attended the opening of the current exhibition at the Toronto Art Gallery. This was last Thursday night.

The gallery was full of:

The officials; sturdy in tails, spotted with shiny little campaign medals:

The ladies; gowns overflowing with perfumed abundance.

The models; tall dinosaurs of women, lovely with a fossilized perfection.

The artists; bravely bearded, distinguished in their best Bohemian sport shirts.

The B a r m e n; in regimental whites, skuttering indispensably among the artworks. It was disappointing. We had expected it to be more exclusive.

And there were acres of the canvasses of that grand old Johnny-one-note of Canadian painting, Dr. A. Y. Jackson. This is the first comprehensive exhibition of Dr. Jackson's work, and certanly not a bad one. It consists of a large number of excellent pictures, but it is, perhaps, a mistake.

Because once you have seen a few of the bright, billowing, corrugated Canadian landscapes which are Dr. Jackson's specialty, there is really on point in going on the the next room. It will contain only more cumulous Canadian earth, backed by more mountainous Canadian sky. True, the scenes range from Atlantic to Pacific; the seasons, the time of day and the weather conditions vary. But it would be a relief to find just a few of the portraits, figures, horses, fish and other subjects artists treat when they aren't painting Canada in the raw.

Apparently Dr. Jackson discovered, at an early age, that he was A. Y. Jackson, and determined to paint exactly like A. Y. Jackson for the rest of his life. A courageous decision, it has brought its own success. Today he is probably the best A. Y. Jackson-style painter anywhere in the world.

Also showing: a display of Canadian handicrafts, which should fascinate all who are fascinated by Canadian handicrafts.

DRAMA REVIEW

Antigone

Robert Gill's production of Antigone at Hart House is the most worthwhile piece of theatre this season. The translation of the adaptation of the classical play has succeeded miraculously in preserving the essentials of tragedy, the essentials which made the Greeks conceive of it as a purge to the soul, an experience wherein the human soul is raised to such heights of emotion that humbler feelings fall away. Such, to a considerable extent, was the effect of the Antigone we saw last night. The dramatic intensity of the opening curtain, its caught the audience and held it in an ever-tightening grip which loosened only with the final curtain.

The chorus, played with a wealth of casual expression by John Douglas, set the scene for the evening in convincing terms of everyday thought. Mr. Douglas turned out a beautifully smooth and finished performance; his stolid dignity gave him an air of the inevitable fate which hung over Creon, the Nemesis which the Greeks said followed overweening pride, the pride which defies God and the natural order of things, the pride which made Creon, almost unconsciously, think of himself as absolute and invincible.

The conflict between Antigone and Creon built up to such a climax of immovable force and indomitable will that it seemed one or the other must break, physically, before our eyes. The comically matter-of-fact guard, played with great aplomb by Leon Major, was a welcome relief to the tenseness. Lila Gutzin's Antigone was fresh and young and lovable; she was at the same time mature and deeply expressive. Her performance would be improved, however, if she were careful to move more gracefully; her flowing dress and the almost empty stage make every step she takes important. Creon, played by Ivan Thornley-Hall, was a real and understandable man, yet rather larger than life. Rising to heights of passion he was impressive and compelling; sinking again to human level he was kindly, bewildered, angry, perceptive and sensible by turn. Never for a moment did he fail to hold our attention. In his final lines, struck with horrible grief at the loss of his son and wife, at his failure to defy the gods, his quiet dignity [illegible] heart-rending in its [illegible].

Mary Morgan's Ismene was a perfect contrast to her [illegible]ger sister, frightened and [illegible]al, hesitant where Antigone was decided, retreating where she advanced. There were mom[illegible] perhaps, when her emotion [illegible] unconvincing; it was [illegible] the play when I was less caught up in its flow; later, her hysteria was real and contagious.

Beverley Milne's performance as the old nurse was unconvincing because she was too obviously an old nurse and her character as a real person failed to emerge. Ted Walker, as Antigone's [illegible]aemon, began his love scene with some embarrassment; wa[illegible] his stiffnexs disappeared he was tenderly conbincing.

The bare simplicity of the set made almost no intrusion on the audience and left the stage entirely to the actors. The impression was very like what one supposes must have given a background to Greek tragedy; the fact that for the ancients it was a religious experience and for us an aesthetic one creates a difference in kind, not in degree, of appreciation. The chief drawback to complete onstage lighting, which was often unsatisfactory and cast unfortunate shadows upon the actors' faces. Being unable to see an actor properly makes it more difficult to hear him. It was the chorus who suffered most in this respect and some of his most interesting lines were lost.

Despite adaptation and translation, despite playing to modern audiences who are not attuned to the tone of Greek tragedy, Antigone retain the soul and essence of that wonderful art form. It translates a question eternal and universal in scope into terms any audience can understand—a question which baffles audiences in Hart House, Toronto, as much as it did those in the Theatre at Athens. And in making this question understandable to us it draws us into itself until we are as involved as the players, as the real Antigone and Creon: until we are shaken with anger and fear and doubt, until we emerge to make our own decision.

Nancy S. Donnell.

And Chorus

Two of the principal players in the Hart House Theatre production of Antigone, which opened on Saturday night, John Douglas appears here as the Chorus and Lyla Gutzin plays the title role. The play continues all this week.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

LIVE AND LEARN

A little less than a year ago everybody but particularly the people in Hamilton were living it up because the Intercollegiate had voted the McMaster Marauders into the league as full partner. People didn't pay too much attention to the performance of the Marauders prior to their entry into a league but, now that they are in the loop, people are paying attention to their record, attention of the raised-eyebrow variety.

You can learn by your mistakes but that particular brand of learning can be very costly. That's the lesson that the other four members of the circuit are picking up this football season. The turnstiles haven't been clicking very well wherever the Marauders have been playing. In Toronto it was only to the tune of 13,400.

More important than their effect on the gate receipts is their play in the league. Of course the one will affect the other. In the season prior to their entry into the league McMaster played exhibition games with all the regular delegates of the Intercollegiate, And as everyone knows, the little freshmen played a fair brand of ball considering that 50 per cent. of their team were in their freshman year. This year the men of Ivor Wynne are doing about as well. They are in their Sophomore year and they still haven't won a game. Their latest loss was to McGill this weekend in Hamilton by the score of 13-7.

WHAT TO DO?

It begins to look like someone reconsider McMaster as a member of the Intercollegiate. They aren't doing themselves a bit of good if all they can do is lose. You have to have a winning ball club to draw new blood into the fold. So perhaps it would be better if McMaster did a voluntary fade-out at the end of the season. As they will soon find out, it costs money to operate a team in the senior circuit and you don't encourage the paying customer with a team that can't win a game. Better they have a winning team in the Intermediate loop than a losing team in the Intercollegiate.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

To take a fade-out this year would not necessarily exclude them from the charmed circle for all time. They established a precedent for the future by being a playing member this year.

Probably the authorities at McMaster were banking on an expansion of the University, faculty-wise. But so far the expansion has not taken place and it may not for some time. Until there is an expansion, McMaster would have to field a team from the enrollment of a Faculty of Arts, a science course and Theology. The chances of their fielding a winning combo from such a small enrollment are pretty slim.

Geography won't help them much either. Mac is situated approximately half-way between Toronto and London, the homes of the two winningest teams in the Intercollegiate. How then can the Marauders hope to draw any new blood of any good with such competition?

So to Ivor Wynne and Al Smith go our condolences. Please don't prolong the agony, men; after all enough should be enough.

END NOTES:

Toronto has won four of the Intercollegiate titles that have been decided to date. The score to date includes the Senior and Intermediate track crowns, the Intermediate Golf and Intercollegiate tennis. The only one the Blues have failed to take so far was Senior Golf. That's a fair average! With two TD's, against Queen's Murray Henderson of the Mustangs replaces our Steve Oneschuk as runnerup in the Intercollegiate points race. The Blues still have the best defensive record of any team in the loop with only 20 points scored against them in the three league games to date.

Four people are needed for the trip to Montreal leaving by car at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon and returning 10 a.m. Sunday morning. Anyone interested should see Moishe Reiter at the Varsity sports desk today at 1:30. Cost of the trip will be $13 return.

Varsity Nosed Out Harrier Harrows

Varsity's intercollegiate harrier team dropped its first meet of the season, a 27-28 decision to Niagara University, over the five-mile High Park course. It was something of a moral victory, though, as Toronto's Dave Preston finished ahead of the field with a time of 28 minutes and 43 seconds, and Herb Tilson was second.

Points for tabulation in cross-country racing are computed by adding the numbers of the finishers' positions. Thus, the lower score wins. Niagara runners ensured their victory by crossing the line third, fourth, fifth and sixth.

Varsity's Gord. Banks and Gord. Rintoul, who had run the three-mile the day before at Guelph, were seventh and eighty, respectively. A Niagara man was ninth and Toronto's George McMullen was tenth.

Next meet for Varsity's squad is Wednesday when they run at Buffalo State and then they play host to Wayne University here Saturday.

Aggies Make It Close Blues Block Field Goal To Preserve 14-13 Win

Guelph, Sat., Oct. 24: Varsity's Baby Blues' football team were the spoilers of an otherwise perfect Homecoming Weekend for O.A.C. grads today as the Toronto cowed the Farmer-boys 14-13, and extended their unbeaten record.

This had been a good day for the Aggies. Both their Soccer teams defeated the visiting Westerns, and in their pre-game Float Parade the homers crowed confidently of "cooking the Blue goose", of the "Baby Blues being all wet" and of how the Aggie "nut-cracker will crack them Blues".

To the Aggies' shame these crows had to be eaten after the game, but not till then. For the Aggies had every chance to win the match and only when the Redmen missed a field goal attempt on the final play of the game was the Varsity victory certain.

The Aggies started the game very keenly and didn't even give Varsity a chance to try their offense. On the kick-off Varsity fumbled and Guelph recovered on the visitors' 16. Two plays later Aggie quarter Ed. Wladyka wriggled over for the OAC score. That T.D. was unconverted but the farmers pushed back and Dave Mitchell booted a 40-yard single to make it up and put Aggies 6 up on the Blues.

A pass interception by Murray Hadlow set up the first Blue score. Hadlow carried to the Aggie 43 on this play but the J-V's could get only as far as the 30 from which place Hadlow lifted a long boot for a single.

Shortly after John Sopinka drove in to recover a blocked Aggie field goal attempt on the Varsity 24, Bill Stevenson dropped back, threw 30 yards to Jack Rogers and he went all the way. The touchdown was unconverted but it tied the game up.

Then Al Wong returned the ball to the Varsity 37 on an Aggie kick and again Stevenson whipped a long one, this time to Sopinka, and again it was good for the whole way. Wally Bulchak kicked the convert giving, the Baby Blues a half-time lead of 12-6.

After half-time a 28-yard run by Bulchak brought the Varsitys to the Guelph 21 but they could go no further and had to settle for a single by Dick Risk. Soon afterwards Risk kicked what proved to be the winning point, making it 14-6.

The Aggies moved from mid-field to the Varsity goal line and Ron Stuart bulled over for five. Stuart then kicked a good convert. What had appeared to be a sewn-up ball game for the Varsitys was now wide open, with the Aggies a mere two points behind. Dave Mitchell made it closer with a single from the Varsity 45 late in the last quarter.

Gaining possession on the Varsity 30 on the last play of the game Aggie quarterback Wladyka chose to go for broke and in ad of a single he called for a field goal attempt—and that was all it was. The J-V's, awake to their danger, cracked through to block the attempt and keep their unbeaten skein intact.

Blue Notes: The officiating at times, particularly during Aggie stretch drive, appeared leave the dozen Varsitys on the field competing with 15 Aggies. . . . The return match at Varsity should have the Baby Blues on top by a couple of majors.

Combines Win Black Meds 26-0

Meds have proven to be quite apt in the last week at the game art of mid-night sorties but not at football as Skule swamped the Meds men 26 to 0.

Play remained fairly even until Skule struck suddenly for their first major in the closing seconds of the first quarter. A long Hart-to-Weaver pass carried play to center field and a first down. Geo. Lewis carried for another first, and from here Don Hart was able to hit Cal Weaver with another fine pass as he broke into the clear behind the Meds defenders and raced for the touchdown. Earl Ford converted.

The second half proved to be all Skule as their heavier more experienced line men, notably Earl Ford and John Shortt at the gurad positions, began to make their presence felt. Ron Lyons intercepted a Meds pass at center field. Marv. Larsen passed to that man Weaver again to take the ball to the Meds 6-yard-line and from here Geo. Georgas galloped for the T.D. Earl Ford booted his second successful convert. S.P.S. gained their second T.D. of the third quarter when a dropped pitch-out in the Meds backfield was booted across the goal line were Geo. Lewis gathered in the ball for the major. The convert attempted by Ford was good. Ron Ellis charged through to block a Meds kick behind their line but narrowly missed the T.D. as the all bounced out of play for a safety touch and 2 points. Another blocked kick by Ed. Rohacek at mid-field set the stage for the "Combined" final touchdown. Don Hart pitched to Geo. Lewis at the Meds 5-yard-line from where he was able to race over for the T.D. Ford again stepped in to convert.

Toronto Wins Track Meet

Running true to their usual top form the Varsity Intermediate Track Team bested all comers and won the Intercollegiate Intermediate track championship at Guelph last Friday.

Soccer Blues Take Buffalo 4-3

Saturday the senior Blues soccer team travelled to Buffalo to take part in what has become an annual thriller and came away victors by a 4-3 score after a ding-dong battle. As usual the Blues team was depleted due to difficulties encountered in crossing the border, and only seven of the senior team were eligible to play.

The Blues were confronted with the usual regalia to which they have become accustomed. This includes a game which is played to rules which seemed to be made up as one goes along. For soccer fans these rules include kick-ins instead of throw-ins, four twenty-two minute quarters and unlimited substitution.

The Blues were so weak that they started with coach Bobby Auld in the nets but were forced to withdraw at the request of the Buffalo coach, who was determined to win at all costs.

The Blues began the scoring with a goal from Ashbourne who proved on of the shining lights of the Blues team. Buffalo equalized on a penalty given against the Blues for a very minor infraction. The Blues went ahead on a goal from Hubicki who left his normal full-back position to dazzle the Herdsmen. Once more Buffalo equalized and then went ahead on a goal which one of the referees admitted was an offside play. With their backs to the wall, Ashbourne put the Blues back on level terms with a pass from Leach. With Hubicki and Lethmridge knocking Buffalo players all over the pitch the Blues once more went on the defensive and in the third quarter Williams put them ahead to stay, with a stylish effort. Williams, at centre-half, was the outstanding Blues figure throughout the game.

PHE Wins Swim

PHE showed its superiority in the swimming bracket Saturday night by dominating the women's interfaculty meet by a total of 155.5 points. It was the third straight win for physed who was bothered throughout by the Vic squad who seconded them with 127 score.

Both squads ran a neck and neck battle up until the final two meets which gave the potent PHE gang the final lead. Trinity followed with 80.5 and UC finished with a slim 13 point total. Meds entered a team but failed to register at all.

The annual meet, held at Hart House included a three sectioned programme of racing, diving and sychronized events. No records were made, the outstanding feature being in the keen competition throughout, particularly between the two top teams. Beryl Lewis and Barb Gluck, both of PHE headed the scoring, Beryl with 43, Barb with 42, followed by Mary Crowther of Vic with 25.

Joan Archer, a Vic gal headed the diving events and a Trinityite Hugheen Cree finished first in synchronized swim. Vic's Mary Wingate missed top spot in the routines by a slim two point margin.

Too many entrants in both back stroke and freestyle events forced a double heat in both of which won.

Swim practises got into swing the first week of school and will be continuing in the form of intercollegiate warm-ups startin this afternoon. The intercol battle is slated for late November.

Henderson Gets Two TD's To Pace Mustang Victory

London, Oct. 25 (Special) — Paced by Murray Henderson who splurged for two touchdowns, the University of Western Ontario Mustangs rolled to their fourth straight intercollegiate football victory here Saturday. Queen's Golden Gaels were the victims this time and the score was 19-7 as the Mustangs extended their first-place lead to two full games over Toronto and McGill who are tied for second place.

Frank Geard's kicking was the best the Tricolor had to offer. He connected for a pair of singles that gave Queen's a 2-1 lead early in the first quarter. The Mustangs soon broke loose, though, and had taken a 13-2 lead by halftime and that turned out to be enough to let them breeze home.

Fullback Jacques Belec opened the scoring by kicking a single shortly after the opening kickoff but the Tricolor soon edged into a 2-1 lead on two mighty kicks by Geard. After the second single, Western shifted into high gear moving from their own 25 for a touchdown in three plays. Garnet Mason was the scorer on a run from the Queen's 58. Gino Fracas made the extra point. In the second period, they made it 13-2, marching from their own 54 on a pair of long runs by Henderson, who carried over from the six, Fracas converting again.

Queen's got back into the game briefly on an unconverted touchdown. Western's Don Prowse fumbled on his own 17 and Queen's recovered. Quarterback Pete Cranston passed to Jack Cook for a major. Western got that back in the last period when Murray Henderson set one up with a 20-yard dash to the Queen's eight and went over himself. Fracas again converted, his third point of the day.

OLD BOYS vs BLOOR SENIORS—50c

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

A quiet weekend on the home front gave vent to some measure of deep meditation on odds and ends of women's sport. Two weeks ago, we dealt with facilities and activities at Western; today a few notes on our own situation in compulsory sport.

This University wasn't made for Women's athletics and for years this field has been building up momentum until enthusiasm has become greater than facilities. Up until last year, the athletic offices were located off the campus and the University was forced to make use of gym and pool way over 415 Yonge Strett.

When Falconer Hall became PHE headquarters last December, the beginning of a new era in women's sport occured. The gals moved out of "415" and have since been conducting all athletics on the campus.

With the new era came a new twist to compulsory sport. Most of us from sophs up recall the old system of the elective and gymnastic routine. And what good did it do? Darn Little! Once a week (if we didn't skip) we'd spend an hour marching and exercising only because we had to do it. No one lost weight, no one got into condition and few enjoyed it!

Last year, as the season ended, a questionnaire was passed about during these hour periods, the majority of suggestions pointed to cutting out "gymnastics" and replacing it with an elective. That's just what has happened and the saving feature of complusory sport.

The setup now is to conduct two elective classes per week in two different fields. Unlike previous years, these electives will be continued for the second term as well. This gives the girls a chance to learn something fairly well, whereas the old system of nine lessons only gave them the feel of the sport. The old enmity is almost no more since opportunity has been offered to partake in favoured activities. It's the best thing that could have happened to compulsory sport. No remarks from you Frosh!

Tennis Gals Win Intercol.

The University of Toronto ladies placed first in the intercollegiate tennis tourney held at Queen's this weekend. It was the girls' first straight win in two years in what turned out to be the most pleasant and enjoyable of such meets to date.

Toronto finished with a total of 11, having lost one of twelve events, followed closely by Queen's with nine, McMaster with 5, McGill with 4 and Western with one.

Mary Lynn Boys of Toronto took top honours in the first singles, while Ann Innis head the second's list. Elizabeth Jennings Queen's finished first in the doubles events.

Rams Set A Fast Pace Rambling Over U.C. 35-2

The Ryerson Institute Rams had their second try against University of Toronto football teams Friday. Their first attempt had been somewhat unsuccessful as the intermediate Blues took them to camp 57-0. But they fared far better with University College Tigers of the interfaculty league, whipping them 35-2.

Ted Toogood's Ryerson squad had a beg edge on the U.C boys but the UC boys but the Varsity lads made at least three forays into Ram territory. The best they could manage, though, was a couple of singles by Dan Patterson.

For the Ryersons, Reid Fraser and Glen Burnside scored two touchdowns each. Bob McWillaims kicked five converts and the other majors were registered by Dint Jones and Churck Weir.

Mac's Surge Stopped Redmen Triumphant 13-7

Hamilton, Oct. 25 (Special) — Though they led for almost three-quarters of the game, McMaster Marauders dropped their fourth intercollegiate football game in a row here Saturday. It was the McGill Redmen who turned on the heat in the late stages of the game to dump the Macmen 13-7.

The victory moves McGill into a tie for second place with Varsity Blues who were idle over the week-end. The Redmen and Blues have two wins each, the Indians having won both starts over McMaster.

McGill's [illegible]edy backfielder, George Klein, scored a touchdown to snare second place in the intercollegiate scoring race behind Western's Gino Fracas. It was the track star's fourth major of the season. The other McGill TD came on a successful pass from Bob Shaw to Hal Biewald. McMaster's scoring was a converted touchdown by Jow Kosakowski and a single by Lorne Wrigglesworth.

The hometown Macmen started out as if they wanted to chase the visitors right out of Civic stadium. They had the Redmen hemmed in for most of the first quarter until from midfield, Jim Dodds dashed 30 yards and Johnny Pelech added 15 to carry play to the McGill nine. Wimp Crawford drove to the one and quarterback Joe Kosakowski sneaked across with the touchdown. Jim Dodds converted.

McGill tied it in the second period with a march from their own 20 with Klein the scorer. Fred Wilmot converted. The half ended with Wrigglesworth hoofing a 25-yard single.

McGill knotted it again soon after the second half began with Shaw kicking a single from the Marauder 40. Then the Redmen pulled in front to stay when they blocked a kick at the Mac 33 and went for a major on two passes by Shaw, Biewald catching one in the end zone. The convert was no good but Shaw made up for it in the fourth when Wrigglesworth was rouged on his kick.

Varsity Smashes To Win 16-0 Over Rugger Nomads

In a tough, though somewhat ragged game on Saturday, the University rugger team gained a smashing victory over Toronto Nomads II.

Roy Campbell opened the scoring in the first five minutes of the game as he bulled over the line for a try in the corner and three points for University. A few minutes later, Rich Anderson crashed through the defence after a good three-line run. Dave Fayle converted this try to bring the score up to 8-0 for the University at half-time.

Play was generally a bit wild with much fumbling and too much fly-kicking, but the University forwards were handling the ball well in the line-outs, getting it back to the three's cleenly. The muddy condition of the field favoured forward play. Ron Ham took the ball at his feet to the line twice where each time he was tackled while not in possession, but for some reason the referee did not award a penalty for this breach of the rules either time.

Half-way through the second half, Bob Trillia made a brilliant dash along the touch-line to score, but a leg injury suffered as he went down on the ball forced him to retire from the game and University had to finish one man short. University pressed hard through-out, and came close to scoring several times before Pat Kelly broke through with the ball at his feet to set up scrum-half Bill Chadwick who scored. Dave Fayle converted and there was hardly time to resume play before the final whistle blew.

Full-time score: University 16, Nomads II 0.

And To You

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

"Gentlemen"

You have accused US of idealism. We regret this, as all our friends consider us unprincipled rats; if they learn the truth, we shall sue for defamation of character.

It is surprising that last Thursday's cartoon disgusted you, as you reiterate almost exactly the sentiments ascribed by us to Colonel Blimp. But you are right, gentlemen. A man must be very intelligent and learned to decide what is best for him, or what is best for others, who never asked him. But he requires no great mental development (your letters are evidence) to know what he doesn't like. The Guianese, after a period long enough for some consideration, do not like the British. The way they used their franchise suggests that these forcibly adopted children have weighed British administration, and found it wanting. An Oedipus complex, gentlemen.

If Jagan is a puppet of Moscow (and we are in no position to affirm or deny it) he is not much of a choice. But the people's choice was between Jagan and a puppet of Britain. As Britons, gentlemen, we blush.

We agree. Few people deserve self-government. And we thank God that in Guiana and in Britain we have so much more than we deserve. We trust neither ourselves, the Guianese, nor you to make "mature decisions". We only ask the right of all men to make their own mistakes, rather than have their mistakes made for them by those with more experience.

And we have just enough residual idealism to hate the guts of any man who refers to other human beings as "People" in quotation marks. You, "gentlemen".

Stone Of Strength?

The cornerstone of the Sigmund Samuel Library was laid Friday. Of all the cornerstones being laid this year, it is perhaps the most important, for it begins the end of a sorely needed addition to this campus.

The strength of any university is reflected in the "strength" of its library. Where, then, do we seek the strength of a library?

In censorship? This is a weakness accepted by too many fog-brained chaps who feel that university students have no right to decide what to and what not to read. In case there are some who fail to see it, we repeat that research is a two-sided matter.

In book-burning? This, too, is a weakness which rests on the belief that students are really nitwits who cannot chose "right" from "wrong". It is a degree more serious that censorship for it implies an emotional type of thought-control that tends to paralyze the entire university membership frm top to botom.

In Padlock Laws? Here we are at the worst of any weakness. Here the dirt and smell of rotten politics is brought into the arena of intelligent, selfless research.

We hope that the new and enlarged library will stand as a monument of challenge to these weaknesses as the old library has in the past. Dr. Samuel has helped to provide the structure — an individual could hardly do more — but it is up to the collective group to place inside those walls the spirit that, in som of the colleges of Quebec and the United States, has vanished in a storm of hot air.

The Editor,
The Varsity:

When is a decision a 'Mature' decision? Mr. Bryant apparently thinks HE knows, but surely hsi letter denies this. There's nothing d e m o c r a t i c, let alone "mature" about calling Britain the "Great White Mother". It's amazing that a third year Canadian University student should still be carrying the white man's burden! Surely the doctrine was never better put than in "Britain (must) protect—the welfare of her children." What right has any nation to consdier another its "child"? Some parts of the world may still need guidance, but that should come from an impartial UN commission, and not from an eimpire-builder nation that spent several centureis gathering useful appendages.

When Mr. Bryant speaks of "socialist propaganda" he betrays part of his real meaning of "maturity". Apparently maturity, for him, means at least anti-socialism. And it would seem that maturity further mplies that the British Guianas could at least have had the sense to elect a decently conservative government, instead of voting for an end to the exploitation of their resources by foreign capitalists, among which Canadian corporations are not the least offenders.

No less disgusting is Mr. Daly's reference to the rigrt of self-determination as a "myth". The struggle of the satelite peoples of Russian is a struggle for self-rule, and Mr. Daly, being anti-Communist, is undoubtedly all for this sort of thing. But when it's a matter of British colonies instead of Russian satellites, Mr. Daly calls them unfit for self-rule. Letters of this sort raise the question of how many Canadians are fit for democracy!

Act On Our Own

The Editor,
The Varsity:

I should like to compliment Mr. Anco on his article concerning the National Federation of Canadian University Students and the International Union of Students, and join with him in deploring the negative stand which NFCUS took concerning the possibility of closer cooperation with the west. Indeed the conference was remarkable in its complete failure to refect in its decisions the opinions of the majority of Canadian students. Last year, the students from coast to coast demonstrated in no uncertain terms their desire to get together with European students to exchange ideas, and to learn to understand each other better. But in spite of this, NFCUS brushed over the controversial Russian students issue, and all but rejected the friendly overtures of the IUS.

Mr. Anco asks if there is a chance for recovery. I think there is. The Students' Administrative Council has already indicated its interest in IUS. We should go ahead from there. The University of Toronto should attempt to learn as much as possible about IUS. This can be done by corresponding directly with IUS. We should follow Chuck Taylors advice and distribute the IUS publication—World Students' News. This magazine is a forum in which articles of universal interest, by students of many countries, are printed. We might well invite a member of the IUS executive to visit us and discuss fully the possibilities which exist for cooperation. Finally, the University of Toronto could become an associate member of IUS regardless of the NFCUS decision, as such affiliation is possible according to the IUS constitution.

The NFCUS conference in the last two years have shown that we cannot depend on the national body to act in furthering east-west co-operation. What remains for us is to go ahead on our own and act in the way which we know will assure international goodwill and friendship.

Clean Up

The Editor,
The Varsity:

We were happy to see the statement of Ted Sparrow in Thursday's issue of The Varsity that Dentantics has been cleaned up. This step is long overdue, and we trust includes liberal application of grandma's lye soap and elbow-grease. May we suggest thorough fumigation as a follow-up?

We cannot excuse, however, Mr. Sparrow's unprovoked attack on Joan Armstrong, formerly of The Varsity staff. Miss Armstrong's criticism of last year's Denantics need no justification to anyone who saw the show, though her remarks about the Dental profession might better have been omitted.

A clean Dentantics is difficult to imagine . . . It will set a precedent if the stories we have heard are to be credited. We shall be on hand Tuesday to go after the free tickets; but in the meantime, Mr. Sparrow, please leave personalities out of your publicity.

J. M. MacPherson.

End Justifies Means

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The Varsity has graduated itself from ineptitude in campus problems and principles to international witticism. E.g. "And the nasty word, Communist, has somehow found its wasy into the melee" in British Guiana. It would seem from news reports that the nasty word Communist quite properly belongs in the situation. Janet Jagan, wife of the Premier, and reputed real brain of the People's Progressive Party, is a former member of the U.S. Young Communist League, and other leaders of this party have connections with world wide Communist organization. But more important has been the actual record of the group in the use of Communist methods to foment strikes and unrest, and in their attempt to undermine the colony's recently granted constitution.

The action of the British Government was a drasitc one and doubtless it will be fully debated in the House of Commons as to whether or not the move was justified. To temporarily suspend the elections of the people is an action easily criticzed, but it may well be justified if it is the alternatve to the setting up of a Communist [illegible] who may gain power through free elections but would not allow to do away with that freedom.

The Varsity, in pooh-poohing the Red connections of the People's Progressive Party, and in suggesting that the British Government suspended the constitution merely because a Government was elected with which they did not agree, reminds us strongly of those who once supported the "Simple agrarian reformers" of Mao-Tse-Tung.

Where Are Those Men?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Where are the MEN who will stand by the girls when they need them? Where are the MEN who have courage enough to speak audibly to their brothers" against their unmanly behaviour in the girls' residences? Are they satisfied with merely whispering to us that not ALL men are like that. Of course, down deep we want to believe that too, but it certainly is nice when they are not afraid to speak up and say it.

To those MEN (for that's what I know you want to be called) who have a lust for women's attire, I say that there are hundreds of stores (in case you didn't know it) that would be delighted to sell you anything you desire. But the very fact that you will have to pay for it, should impress it on your minds that we do, too. And in these days of increased costs, when Necessity has compelled at least some of us to choose between an extra "change of raimment" or an education, it hits where it hurts when you see something you once believed was a MAN, tearing off with your only "change". Perhaps it was done in the name of Fun—but fun for whom? Far be it from me to even hint that anyone should be restricted in his fun. I merely suggest that he redirect it.

MEN—to earn the admiration and respect of all, I challenge you to "do noble things". —I dare you to accept it!

Much Ado

The Editor,
The Varsity:

The article which appeared in The Varsity, Wednesday, October 21, under the title "Bob Gill said ADO CONFUSED" contained several statements which were remarkable as products of the fertile imagination of some member of The Varsity staff but which have no basis in actual fact. Trinity and Victoria Dramatic The idea that the union of the Societies to produce "Much Ado Theatre in December was caused About Nothing" at Hart House by a conspiracy between Bob Gill and the Central Ontario Drama league is one of the most absurd accusations which The Varsity has printed to date. The business manager of Hart House Theatre merely suggested that if the CODL were allowed to rent the theatre for two weeks in January, the financial picture at the theatre would be somewhat brighter. This was admittedly a factor in the decision of the two socieies to combine to produce one big production, it can hardly be said to have been brought about by a "conspiracy". Such an idea is, I fear, to dramatic. Even more preposterous is the hint that Bob Gill was "cutting in on the talent."

Mr. Gill is at the university to produce plays, using the best talent available to him. His four shows are the most important dramatic activity on the compus and if students want to act in his productions instead of in their own college shows he can hardly be accused of "cutting in". One might just as well criticize Bob Masterson for using men to play for the Blues, instead of letting them play for their individual college teams.

I suggest, sir, that if you wish to portray Mr. Gill as a villain, spinning webs of intrigue, some more plausible accusition must be found against him, and some care taken to see that your information is at least moderately accurate.

SAC's External Affairs Now Split In Big Three

The External Affairs Committee is a permanent committee of the Students' Administrative Council. In general the purpose of this committee is to maintain and promote relations between students of this and other universities both in Canada and throughout the world.

The EAC was split at the end of last year into three separate sub-committees, each with a chairman representing it on the SAC. The committees are NFCUS, Exchange Weekend and World University Service (WUS).

This split was necessitated by expansion in EAC activities. Previously one man had handled all of them. Now each one has a chairman represented on the council as well as its own chairman in committee. An SAC rep from one of the colleges or faculties has accepted the job of representation in each case.

The Committee membership is made up of elected representatives from each college and faculty as well as interested volunteers. An Executive chaired by the President of the SAC and made up of the three chairmen and a representative of each section, considers matters of general policy and reports these to the Council for approval.

Besides the three major committees' work of NFCUS liaison; implementation of the WUS program and handling of the many inter-university visits such as the annual Carabin and Cornell Weekends; the EAC also handles:

The fund-raising campaign for Student Help to Asian Relief and Education (SHARE). Formerly called All-Varsity Aid, this campaign is in its fourth year. $7,000 was raised last year in money and textbooks. Part of this sum was given to WUS services and the rest sent to Asian Universities in the form of special medical equipment.

The Host Committee (a sub-committee under the WUS section) endeavors to acclimatize non-Canadian students to their new environment with the co-operation of the organization called Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS). Teas and weekends are organized and visits of foreign students to the campus are arranged.

The Exchange Committee arranges for Toronto students to study at other Canadian and foreign universities. Exchanges from the University of Toronto are difficult to obtain because of the near impossibility of matching course requirements.

The arrangements for students' travel at reduced rates. This NFCUS project dealt with 70,000 dollars worth of business last year.

The NFCUS Chairman on the SAC is Scott Symons, Trin.; the WUS Chairman is Doug Hamlin, Vic.; the Exchange Weekend Chairman is Miss Elizabeth Scroggie, POT.

Steeplejacks Lower The "Daffydil" Flag

Students coming to early lectures yesterday morning were greeted by a white sheet waving from the University mast instead of the usual Union Jack. The flag was tangled with the rope and hung about halfway up the mast. It appeared damaged, and only one corner was attached to the rope.

"The flag is now in my office," said A. Russell, Executive Assistant Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds. "It consists of a piece of new bedsheet." When asked describe the flag, Mr. Russell refused, saying that "it wasn't good advertisement anyway."

On the white sheet appeared in two rows of black letters the work DAFFYDIL and a skull-and-crossbones in a lower corner. Daffydil is the name of the yearly Medical show, scheduled to run during the week of December 14-18.

When attempts were made in the morning to remove the falg, in order to run up the Union Jack, the bottom of the flag was torn away, and the weight of the rope raised the sheet almost to the top of the mast. It hung there attached at only one corner to the rope, and completely out of reach. The tinsmith of UC and several workmen spent the rest of the morning trying to dislodge it, but lacked sufficient ladders to get within reach.

A professional steeplejack was then called in, who put in ladders to the very top of the mast. An ascent with spikes was not attempted because of the possible damage to the old wood of the mast. It took the man till 2.30 p.m. to bring the falg down and disentangle the ropes.

The approximate fee to the steeplejack company, as estimated by the foreman will be about $50. "This sort of thing suits me fine, because it keeps us in business," said the foreman, "But personally, I think it's stupid."

UT Tories Campaign In Niagara

A group of campus Progressive Conservatives organized by Ted Rogers, IV Trinity, drove to Niagara Falls Saturday to help in yesterday's provincial by-election in that riding.

The group arrived in the Falls at 9.30 a.m. and had breakfast at the home of the P.C. candidate Arthur Jolley. Later they canvassed the area and distributed literature. The day's work completed, they had dinner at the General Brock, a tour of the Hydro plants in the area and a party at the home of Mr. Jolley's campaign manager.

"In my opinion, this is the best way to get practical experience in politics while aiding the political party of one's choice," Rogers said.

For Safe Keeping

Cheerleaders In The Stores

"Toike Oike, Toike Oike" was the cry of the engineers yesterday noon as they carried five Vic cheerleaders into the red Skule Building. The girls, who were part of a publicity stunt for the Vic Bob, were held captive for the afternoon and then released at 5.15 p.m.

"Tales of the Vienna Wolves", next week's Bob Revue, was being publicized during lunch by a milk wagon made up to look like a horse drawn streetcar of the Vienna Transportation Company. The cheerleaders, before being carried off, were handing out entry blanks to a contest to guess the age of the horse in days.

As soon as the streetcar had rounded the front campus and was in front of Skule it was attacked by engineers. The horse became panicky but was defended from liberation by the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band. At this point the girls were carried into the Engineering Stores and the horse headed for Bloor Street.

Amid cries of "Yea Vic" the girls gave out entry blanks and the captors calculated the horse's age on slide rules. After having cokes and doughnuts and refusing to have their sweaters auctioned, the cheerleaders were removed by car to a fraternity on St. George, for safe keeping.

From this base attempts were made to find responsible Vicmen and get them to trade the Lady Godiva Memorial Band uniforms which Vic captured two years ago.

Vic when they looked for the uniforms, found they had been lost a year ago. Meanwhile forces were gathered and attempts made to find the hideout.

While in captivity, the girls were again treated, this time to a case of cokes, Girl Guide cookies and a package of cigarettes. One commented on the poker game which followed the refreshments, "It is a good game but everyone is cheating."

The decision was made by the Vicmen, after fruitless attempts to find the girls, to offer the Trinity Provost's Chair in exchange. Before the offer could be given the Engineers released the cheerleade and took them back to Vic.

President of the Engineering Society, Don Fredenburg and Vice-President Alec Pathy said after, "We are very disappointed that the Vic men didn't think their girls were worth the Lady Godiva Memorial Band uniforms. The girls, however, were good sports and we are sending them tickets to the Engineers' Ball. They have a cordial invitation to transfer to Skule as soon as they wish."

President of the Victoria College Union, Ken Cork said, "Again I deplore such typical inane childishness from the Engineers." Jim Wood, Producer of "Tales of the Vienna Wolves", said, "I congratulate the panty-raiding, girl-stealing, faculty on their wisdom in releasing the kidnapped cheerleaders. Doubtless they realized the error of their ways and made it unnecessary for the Vic juggernaut, which was at the time rolling up its sleeves for battle, to take disciplinary action against its 'sister' faculty."

In reply to the charge of girl-stealing Pathy said, "We called up each girl's parents and not one of them objected. After all, we are Engineers."

The cheerleaders commented, "although the Engineers won the Bob Apple Battle the Apples are still in Vic." The Engineers present agreed that the cheerleaders were proof of that.

The publicity committee of "Tales of the Vienna Wolves" announced late last night that Arn Bailley, III Vic, won the two free tickets to the Bob Revue with his estimate of 3042 days old, only 14 days from the horse's true age of 3056 days.

Red Feather Tags Today At University

Today is Red Feather Tag Day. Girls from St Hilda's, Nursing, Medicine, and Victoria College will be on duty at strategic points throughout the campus from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. There will be 17 girls tagging at all times during this period, working in hourly shifts. Some faculties, however, are being covered by personal canvass.

"While it is too early to predict results, the interest so far has been encouraging," said Bill Baldwin, in charge of the Red Feather campaign on the campus. Sixty students attended the showing of the Red Feather Film last week, about three times as many as last year.

In the personal canvassing, architecture has handed in $48, which Baldwin says is about one dollar per student canvassed so far. Law and St. Hilda's have started canvassing already, while Emmanuel, Nursing, Architecture, Physio, Pharmacy, and Wycliffe have appointed class representatives and are ready to start.

U of T Soccer Players Denied Entry To USA For Game At Buffalo

Four members of the University of Toronto senior soccer team were denied admittance to the United States for last Saturday's game in Buffalo with Buffalo State Teachers' College. The athletes in question are not Canadian citizens and have only native passports so that they were not allowed across the border under the terms of the McCarran Act.

Ed. Duru, the goal-tender, who is a native of Turkey was one of those barred. Others were Jose Atucha who comes originally from Venezuela, Wally Eze, Nigeria, and Karl Tamberg, Estonia. In addition team manager Mike Uzumeri, another Turkish native, was refused admittance.

Athletic Association officials had submitted the players' passports to the US Consulate several days before the game and the American immigration officials indicated which men would be denied access to the US.

The move came as no surprose, however. Last winter, several Varsity swimmers who were natives of European nations were barred from travelling to Niagara University for a meet.

IRC To Hear Illinois Prof. On US Policy

Professor Kenneth W. Thompson will speak on "Unsolved Problems in American Foreign Policy" at 4.10 p.m. The meeting, organized b the International Relations Club will be held in Falconer Hall.

Professor Thompson is the Foreign Policy Chairman of the Independent voters of Illinois and an officer of the American Association of University Professors.

A former Infantry and Counter-Intelligence Officer, he has taught at the University of Chicago and the University of California, and was Policy Chairman of the American Association for the United Nation.

Students Request Tag For Striking Miners

At the SAC meeting this Wednesday night, a group of students will seek permission to hold a tag day to assist the striking miners of the Timmins-Noranda area.

This group seeks to assist as much as is possible, in a financial way, the strikers who have been on strike for several months and may, it is feared, be on strike for several more.

The situation is rapidly becoming desperate as the communities rely completely on the strike-bound industries, for their subsistence. With this in mind the committee feels that Varsity students will participate in this appeal for funds.

The tag day will be held early in December, if the SAC is willing.

The major issue in the union-management squabble is over the union's request to have a voluntary revocable checkoff. This has proved such a contentious issue the committee feels there is little doubt that the Tay Day will not be too late.

Queen's Show Has One Plot

Kingston, Oct. 23—(CUP)—The annual Queen's Revue has received permission from the Alma Mater Society to produce this year's show. The AMS also decided to donate $350 to meet advance expences.

This year's production will differ from its predecessor in that there will be a central plot. The plot will deal with "spoof of culture" on the campus. Besides the main theme there will be the usual singing and dancing plus three chorus lines.

Proceeds go to the Alma Mater Society.

Canterbury Club Digs, Paints, Prays

Last Saturday members of the Canterbury club went to Trinity East Anglican Church (Trinity by the Gas Works) for a day of hard work, discussion, and worship based on a work-camp program learnt from SCM leaders. Two years ago the 111-year-old parish at Trinity faced extinction. Today, since the creation of a working relationship between people and the new minister, the Rev. Mr. Maurice Flint, the congregation is far from being depressed.

The Anglican campus group's job at this church was to work with scouts and parishioners, digging out a basement under the church, painting what had already been dug and built into activity rooms, and scraping the Sunday School hall floor.

Centennial Exhibit

The Croft Loft

"How do you like that? UC is a hundred years old. My how time flies!" It sure is, my good friend, but do you know what has been going on around that venerable Norman structure for this last century? If you haven't a clue, or if you have just a rough idea it means you have missed the Croft Chapter House Exhibit, set up for the Centennial by Professor Milnes of the UC German department.

Adorning the walls of the circular edifice on the south-west corner of UC is a collection of photographs, all remarkably clear, some sketches and a collection of water colours by Sir Daniel Wilson. Sir Daniel, Professor H. N. Milne informed me, was an accomplished artist and engraver as well as a professor of English, History and Anthropology. He was also the second president of the school. Versatile, what?

The Croft Chapter House itself has a wealth of historical background. Part of the original building, it was not touched by St. Valentines Day fire, although there are axe marks on the door where the firemen tried unsuccessfully to get in. It was once the chemistry laboratory of Professor Henry Homes Croft, whose portrait adorns the wall over the fireplace. The painting may be compared to the sketch done of the good professor at the age of six, which is also in the exhibit.

While you are looking in that case, you may see an oval silver box, which everyone thinks is a tea-caddy. Don't let it fool you. Those bottles around it belonged inside because you see, his portable bar carried the drinks of the day, gin, brandy, vermouth and creme de menthe. There is also a key, which originally fitted in the front door. It is a ten-inch monster made of wrought iron.

In another case, on the far side of the room, you will see the program of music for the evening of the St. Valentine Day Fire. Needless to say, the music was not played, at least it wasn't played that evening. Under the same glass, there are copies of old examinations, dated 1866 and 1867. They are a grim reminder that some things go on for ever and ever.

Some of the features are unintentional. They just happen to occupy the Croft House anyway. For instance, the long oval table and the fireplace which were moved down from room 51, once the senate chamber, when Simcoe Hall was built. Over the fireplace, on a mantel ledge, there is one remnant of the old bell, which melted during the fire. Other parts may be found in the Memorial Tower carillon, incorporated into one of the bells and in a lamp which was shaped from the bronze and is on display in the same case as Croft's portable bar.

Of interest to the girls will be the manly poses struck by the football team of 1870. I'm sure the fair sex will also be interested in the fact that since the first women didn't graduate until 1885, the play "Antigone", done in the original Greek in 1882, had as the female lead, Dr. Maurice Hutton, dressed appropriately, of course.

Further along the wall, the face of "Papa" de Champs, "a real bit of old France," says Prof. Milnes, shines down through his beard. You may find him with other faculty members of past and present. A "before and after" series of Dean Ferguson is also in the same section.

The exhibit is a must for all staff and students, no matter what faculty, for the building in which it is displayed is the forerunner of what we now know as the University of Toronto. It is open from 3:00 to 5:30 on every weekday and will run for a month.

The Croft Chapter House Centenary exhibit is a fine tribute, both to its curator, Prof. Milnes and to its inspiration, University College. When you have a moment to spare, drop in. "Papa" de Champs will be happy to see you.

Graduate Students Go First As US Drafts 23,000 For Oct. Armed Services

Berkely, California, Oct. 20 — (CUP) — Some 23,000 men, some of them university students, will be drafted into the armed services of the US this month, according to James G. Siler, supervisor of Special Services for the University of California.

It is expected that the draft boards will pick graduate students first. Siler explained that boards are not required to grant determents simply because a certain number of courses are being taken or because of any particular grade average.

Students are often reclassified during December and if a student is reclassified 1-A, he must appeal to the board within 10 days or as Siler said "he's as good as in the service."

Dr. Hayne To Discuss Fr.-Canada

Dr. D. M. Hayne, Professor of French at University College, will speak on "The French-Canadian Outlook", at 8.30 tomorrow night in the University College Women's Union. This talk will be particularly designed for those who intend to apply for the Carabin Weekends, according to Carabin co-chairman Stan Schiff. Those interested in the weekends are urged to attend, he added.

Dr. Hayne is a graduate of University College, and obtained his M.A. and Ph. D. from the University of Ottawa while with the National Research Council. Since then has has studied in Montreal, Quebec, and Ottawa. He has been on the staff of University College since 1945.

Application forms for the Carabin Weekend will be available at Dr. Hayne's talk, and at the SAC office beginning Oct. 29.

Brig. Quilliam Will Address Skule Dinner

All the tickets have been sold for the 64th Annual Skule Dinner to be held in Hart House tomorrow night. The guest speaker is Brigadier C. D. Quilliam who will speak on "Personalities in the Near East."

Brigadier Quilliam was chief of military intelligence for the Middle East from 1939-45, and later he was chief of the political intelligence centre of the British Government for the Near East and the Balkans. He then became the Chief Correspondent for the London Times in the Middle East until 1952.

Following his retirement in 1952, he went on a lecture tour throughout Canada and the US.

The dinner, to be held in Great Hall of Hart House, will be attended by 335 Skulemen and guests. At the head table will be the speaker, Dean Tupper, the Warden of Hart House, Joe McCulley, Dean Emeritus Young and 14 other guests.

To obtain two of these tickets all you have to do is ask the right person "Have you your tickets to Dentantics." The show runs at Hart House theatre on November 6 and 7, two performances a night.

Enrolment Is Lower This Year

The enrolment at the University of Toronto has decreased this year—but not by much. There are 10,769 students registered this year, as opposed to 10,959 in 1952-53.

Although there is a drop of 350 in the arts' enrolment, there is still a majority of arts-types, 3,789 to be exact, who can wander around the campus making the life of the poor engineers (there are only 1,672 of them this year, last year there were only 1,658) miserable.

Graduate Studies have grown by leaps and bounds from 942 students to the fourth largest faculty with an enrolment of 1,185. The School of Social Work has also grown from 115 to 154.

There has been a decided drop in the faculty of Pharmacy. This is partly due to the fact that there is no longer the first year of the Bachelor of Pharmacy course. After the second year of this course has vanished there will be no more degrees in Bachelor of Pharmacy. A four-year Bachelor of Pharmacy and Science course will replace it. Thus, this year there are only 332 future pharmacists, instead of the 451 of last year.

Otherwise there has been no decided change in the registration figures.

University College as usual heads the list with 1,147, although its registration has decreased by 127. Victoria College too, has had a decrease of 77, but comes second on the list with 76. Trinity's registration has increased from 416 to 430, although it is the smallest of all the arts colleges. St. Mike's, too, has increased its population by 13 and now stands as the third largest college with 525.

Registration in the various faculties with last year's statistics in brackets; Medicine 969 (996); Physical and Occupational Therapy, 295 (278); Architecture 192 (193); Faculty of Household Science 10 (10); Ontario College of Education 470 (490); Forestry 129 (135); Music 65 (66); Dentistry 422 (425); School of Law 77 (63); School of Physical and Health Education 123 (142).

Wot! No Crumpets?

Tuck Runs Amuck

Another Tuck shop has opened on the campus. It is getting so that the campus has more Tuck shops per capita than Montreal has bars. Victoria CIlege opened a shop yesterday at noon.

This shop is by no means new to the campus but it is the last to start operating this year. Its brothers include a tuck shop in Trinity, one in St. Mike's, another in Hart House, another in the JCR (not to be confused with the KCR, although the habitues may be the same) and the Vic union has what might be termed a Tuck shop.

The Vic Tuck shop is run by the VCU who have given the option for the actual operation of the shop to Stephenson House. This house supplies the attendants who, incidently, are paid. On opening day the attendants were Jim Payton and Allan Shaw.

According to these gentlemen, this shop is nonprofit, but they also confided that last year the shop ran a little in the red. Well, that is nonprofit, isn't it? The shop was opened this year at the request of several students and since the VCU still had some capital Vic decided to keep the Tuck shop going.

The shop will handle chocolate bars and sandwiches, with cigarettes and hot chocolate to come later on. Ice-cream will also be served when a freezer becomes available. Last year the previous freezer got over-heated—or should that be 'burnt out'!

At St. Michael's the Tuck shop is run on a different basis. Here the shop is run on a co-op basis. The student, for five dollars can buy a permanent share in the Tuck shop. Then with all his purchases in the shop he gets receipts which, if he signs them all, will at the end of his term and after all the stock records and market results are in, perhaps net him a profit. On the whole, however this also is a non-profit shop. For two dollars one may purchase a different type of share, but how this fluctuates on the open market I do not know.

Prices around the campus Tuck shops vary a great deal. At the Vic shop a pint can be had for fourteen cents (i.e., a pint of milk, lest there be confusion), a half-pint costs nine cents. At the Hart House Tuck shop a pint is fifteen cents. If people want to start a price war over this they can, but it's too far to walk for a cent. The Vic Tuck shop say that their hot chocolate (with a marshmallow, I hope) will sell for the usual nickel.

Coffee prices on the campus have run amuck, and, believe me, some of it tastes like it. Hart House charges a dime but at St. Mike's it is also a dime with the second cup only a nickel. Whether thie change in price for the second cup is complimentary to the coffee or a challenge to the student is doubtful. In any case it sells and that speaks for itself.

Excavations In Greece Discussed At Museum

Professor Mylonas of the Greek Archeological Service spoke yesterday to the Archaeological Institute of America, Toronto Branch, in the Museum Theatre, on recent Excavations in Greece.

The speaker, who is also a Professor of Archeology at Washington University, and a member of the American School in Athens, outlined the work that he has helped to organize in Greece unearthing many priceless ancient Grecian treasures.

The excavations are being made in Mycenae, the ancient Greek city made famous in the Battle of Troy. Professor Mylonas' lecture was illustrated with many colour slides which showed the method of the work and also the various articles unearthed in the excavations.

Excavations have been going on in the area since 1951, and during this time many very importatnt discoveries have been made. Professor Mylonas had slides illustrating most of the discoveries made since 1951. He pointed out the importance of the discoveries in archeological research and showed the audience many slides of Grecian vases, swords, daggers, and skeletons of the ancient Greeks in the bottoms of graves.

Talk By Prof. On Mid East

Prof. Reynolds, who presides over international politics lectures at the Welsh college in Aberystwyth, is here as a guest of the Department of Political Economy.

Students Ask Beaverbrook To Keep Job

Fredericton, Oct. 21—(CUP)—The Students Representative Council of The University of New Brunswick has no intention of letting Lord Beaverbrook quietly resign as Chancellor of their university.

In what the UNB newspaper calls "an unparalleled act of college spirit on the . . . campus," the Council passed a motion to call for a campus-wide petition to ask the British journalist to resume the post.

The Council minutes contain the statement that "we humbly and respectfully beg that you will reassume the Office of Chancellor . . . in order that the University may benefit from your leadership and inspiration for many years to come."

Lord Beaverbrook, probably the greatest benefactor in the history of the University of New Brunswick, resigned in a surprise move on October 14. He gave "press of duties" as his reason for resigning the appointment.

Soviet Unrest Is In Russian Opposition

Permit me to impose upon your space to set forth a few corrections to the article "Nationalism in Russia" by Don Zarowsky published in your Thursday, October 22, 1953, issue.

Mr. Zarowsky seems to be under the impression that the only anti-communists within the present geographical limits of the Union of Soviet Republics are to be found among the many nationalities outside of the Russians who inhabit this region. He claims that the predominent feeling in the Soviet Union today is nationalism, which in the case of Non-Russian groups in the Soviet Union is identical with anti-communism, whereas Pussian nationalism he identifies with communism,

Actually the communist doctrine of Karl Marx was devised for the highly industrialized countries of the west and its application to the Russian state was the most unfortunate accident of history. Communism being essentially international, it was natural that a great many, if not the majority of the leaders of communism in the revolution in Russia of November 7, 1917, were non-Russians. I would like to mention some of these outside of Lenin, who was a Russian: Trotsky, Zinoviev, Kamenev, Steklov, Lomov, Mogan, Krylenko, Dybenko, and Stalin. These men were all members of the Central Executive Committee of the Bolshevik (Communist) Party and most of them were members of the first communist government in Russia. The international aspect of communism from its very beginning is a matter of history. As to the present contention, such as that of Mr. Zarowsky, that local nationalism in the Soviet Union is the only one which may be accounted for as opposing the present Soviet regime, it is not substantiated by facts.

From the beginning of the Bolshevik revolution to the time of the last war, it was the Russians, much more than any other nationality in the Soviet Union, who fought desperately to free themselves from an imposed regime. The two-and-one-half years of the Civil War were fought by Russians, whilst other nationalities often hindered the anti-communist cause; the uprising of the sailors in Kronstadt in 1921 was an uprising of Russians; the widespread peasant uprising in 1921-22 under Antonov was a Russian uprising; the sporadic uprisings between 1921 nad 1931 all over the territory of the Soviet Union were Russian uprisings; the great armed forceful opposition to collectivization of agriculture in 1932-33 was the work mostly of Russians; the peasant uprisings in the central and north-eastern sections of the European part of the Soviet Union in 1937-38 (during the first period of the great purges) and the unequivocal stand of opposition to communism of the Russian people headed by General Vlasov druing the last war seem to represent a very fair substantiation of my contention.

Furthermore, the fact that of over two million refugees from the Soviet Union during the last war, the vast majority claimed to be Russians and not

Barbaric Nonsense

The Editor,
The Varsity.

In the editorial of Friday's Varsity the writer has cited the decrease in campus spirit, and is at a loss to discover the reason. It seems to me that we need not look too far to find the reason. A great many of the students of this University are too taken up with their own inter-faculty and inter-college feuds to care two hoots about the prosperity of University spirit as a whole. I grant you that some of this rivalry is undoubtedly a good thing, but I submit, that it should be restricted to the playing field.

As to the Inter-college feuds, I refer to the most recent of them. That is, the adolescent vandalism going on between Victoria and Trinity. The juvenile exploits of these two institutions are only over-shadowed by the PUPILS of "the little red skule house" with their vulgar and infamous raids on the residences of the fairer sex. It is all too apparent that if this type of rancid humour continues, the already sour taste that it leaves in the mouths of many students, as well as with those outside the University, will turn from silent sufferage into indignant denunciation.

It is hard to believe that one is attending an institution of higher learning, but rather one of barbaric nonsense!

Journalistic Deceptions

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In your article "The Proper Party" printed in your Thursday edition, there are some faults.

As a product of casual and rather shoddy thinking, it is certainly not an isolated example. Encouraged daily by the host of disguised journalistic deceptions, there has infiltrated into the modern mind a type of lazy thinking which leads to facile over-simplifications especially of difficult political and international problems. Two sources of the disease which immediately spring to the mind are the British Popular Press and "Time" magazine. They specialize in churning out apparently noble, philanthropic judgments, backed up by inadequate, selected and carefully distorted facts, so that the result is a fundamentally misleading impression of the truth.

Considering the, as yet, excellent and uncontaminated sobriety of the Toronto press in reporting important news, is is surprising to find The Varsity contributing to this system of idle thinking and third-rate moralizing in its judgment of the situation in British Guiana. The tragic thing is that the view it expressed is widely held. It is the view which immediately springs to the mind, which is justified by a sloppy set of moral standards, which sounds terribly big-hearted and broad-minded, and which is therefore immediately attractive to someone who is unwilling to think with care and intelligence about a problem so very obviously not all if appears to be.

And to say, as the article did, that Jagan's party was deprived of power by the British Government "which is hundreds of miles away" is to be guilty of a very silly journalistic stunt. This remark was supposed to lend stress to the argument, but is, of course, blatantly irrelevent and, incidentally, unjust.

Mr. Lyttleton may, of course, be wrong, but he is certainly not to be argued against in offhanded, frivolous terms.

The foreseable reply to all this is another mediocre argument commonly used: "Everyone is entitled to his own opinion." Of course he is, up to a point; but he is not if it is the outcome of either a quick, unconsidered, cursory judgment or else of some form of bogus emotionalism.

Need it be said that diplomatic and political decisions of the sort made in the case of British Guiana are not made without immense and careful consideration of the problem. The facts will come to light very shortly and they will, I feel sure, justify Mr. Lyttleton's action and prove him not to be the idiotic hothead suggested in your article.

Who Decides Whose Future?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

The Varsity and the U of T CCF Club are to be commended in raising the issue of British Guiana into the realm of a university controversy. However, it is extremely unfortunate that so many untruths and distortions about the situation are currently in circulation.

One cardinal fact, which has never been denied by the British Colonial Office, is that the People's Progressive Party in no way have exceeded the mandate given them when elected to power. The program which the PPP put for-The PPP, according to the best ward at that time included several demands like recognition of trade unions chosen by the workers, elimination of the governor's veto, and co-operative ownership of Guiana's basic industry, sugar. There were no calls for revolutionary uprisings — The charge that the PPP is Communist inspired is irrelevant and is being used merely to cloud basic issues. information available, was only asking for rights which we, here in Canada already enjoy.

The PPP has stated that Parliament could be abolished under certain conditions, but this raises another issue; judging from the election, the people of Guiana were prepared to take this step. Who is to say that the people of Guiana are less qualified than others to decide their own future? The British? With their economic self-interest dictated to keeping the status quo wherever possible, surely the British government is the worst judge of all. Further, even the British conceded that a certain degree of political maturity existed in Guiana when the new constitution was established — The only trouble is that the people, poor misguided individuals, chose the wrong course.

It all comes down to this: in order to maintain its system of economic exploitation, the British government has seen fit to take a most serious, and unjustified step, the revoking of a legally granted constitution.

CINEMASCOPE

The Robe

For the past few months it has seemed inevitable that one of the many new film processes which have recently appeared on the scene would eventually dominate and perhaps succeed the others. Another judiciously viewing The Robe recently, it is my opinion that the process to do it, if any will, is Twentieth-Century-Fox's cinemascope, on view at the Imperial theatre. The frame, for those interested in technical matters, is approximately two and a half times wider than normal, almost the entire width of the Imperial's huge stage.

Those are the facts about Cinemascope. A critic, however, is permitted to be both emotional and biased about the object of criticism, and my opinion, which I may state is purely personal and not at all typical, is that Cinemascope is the only innovation of any consequence in the cinema since the advent of sound, and that The Robe itself is a very mediocre picture which has been completely transformed by both the novelty and the intrepidity of the new technique.

How much of the former is important in this particular case is obvious. Aside from the stereophonic sound which does far more than you would expect to create the illusion of reality towards which Cinemascope strains, the omnipresent wide-screen is the most remarkable feature. Content aside, the continually astonishing impact of the wide-frame will remain a novelty for some time to come. Probably it will be used to its greatest advantage only rarely, for the average film-maker may have difficulty in thinking in terms of the wide screen with any artistic individuality. Thus, the greatest argument for its importance is a purely perceptual one: when the curtains close at the end of the film and open again to reveal the newsreel the viewer is profoundly dissatisfied by the sudden limitation of vision—far more than he is astonished at the beginning by the very showman-like opening.

As for the picture itself, much care has been lavished on the production, more on the production, more on the stars, and unfortunately not enough on a really imaginative director. Again and again the immense possibilities of situations are missed in sloppy, uncreative film-making of the most oppressive type, that which takes the quickest and least intrepid method of shooting every scene, meanwhile stoutly asking: is it not indeed the greatest and most remarkable film ever made?

The most effective scenes in The Robe are therefore scenes of action and pagentry. And surprisingly enough, the intimate scenes which occur between one or two characters are also quite successful. The scene of the crucifixion is, however, very badly devised. On the other hand, Christ's entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday is excellently staged, as is the sword-fight between Marcellus and the officer.

In such an extravaganza the performances of the actors are not always every thing they should be, and The Robe is no exception. Richard Burton is not up to his usually high standard of performance; in fact, he often merely bellows instead of creating a genuinely crazed figure as Marcellus. Jean Simmons drifts even farther into the limbo of the beautiful but unintelligent actress with her performance, an eventuality which would have horrified us two years ago. Nor is Victor Mature at all impressive as the slace Demetrius.

However, the process is all. And in fairness, it should be remarked that The Robe, as a piece of showmanship, is very impressive, and certainly worthwhile seeing. Only time will tell, though if this film will take a place in film history comparable with The Jazz Singer.

THE OLD MAID AND THE THIEF

Did you ever find a man in your bedroom? The Old Maid and the Thief involves three maids, two old and one young, who were still hoping to have this felicitous experience, and a young beggar who did happen to drop in—but not quite into the bedroom.

This "grotesque Opera" in One Act and fourteen scenes was originally written for Radio-broadcast over NBC in 1939 by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and was performed by members of the Royal Conservatory Opera Company for the opening Concert in the Sunday Evening Hart House series. The word 'grotesque' indicates the spirit of the opera rather than the actual nature of it. If you must esque what it is, it is picturesque, sumouresque. To this delightful situation, viz., a highly respectable old maid and her highly attractive young maid descending to the lowest abysses of sin in order to keep a supposedly criminal but irresistibly virile young man around the house, add a witty commentary, imaginative sets, enchantingly satiric music and book, and a delightful performance; the combination results in a very entertaining evening.

The music alone of Menotti is no more than half of his operas, if that. Since he writes not only the musical score but also the libretto, he creates a very close interrelation between the words and the music. His recitative is really only an inspired heightening of the range of the speaking voice. He makes his words graphic as he does his motions. To name only one of the numerous possible examples, the different characteristic modes of walking for each of the three maids is delineated in the musical accompaniment to this action. Acting then, as well as voice is essential to the success of his Operas.

Fortunately neither was lacking in any of the participants. Joanne Ivey as Miss Tood and Joan Hall as Miss Pinkerton blended vocally very smoothly while rivelling bitterly as the two standard contrasting types of old maids: the tall thin austere tweedy type and the short, dumpy fluttering, twittering type. Jean Edwards, singing and acting Letitia, the classic role of the scheming and triumphant maid, was most adept in switching from the impertinent maid, to the sweet young thing, to the sly but dutiful servant. Her clear warm voice showed to particular advantage in the lyric, Steal me, Sweet Thief. Andrew MacMillan played the magic animal around whom the plot revolved. Although he filled the other requirements admirably, he was not in good voice. His tone was mostly strained and without resonance.

A good deal of the credit must go to Nicholas Goldschmidt who conducted, and with Mario Bernardi, accompanied on the piano. Herman Geiger-Torel also added much in the quick pace, clever staging and succinct comments between the scenes.

All in all this soap opera from the not - quite - so - much - nonsense - as - you - might - think land was almost enough to convince that as Letitia said, it is a far far better thing to be killed by a man than to live without one.

Wendy Michener.

Book Shows Popular UC Presents Comedy

This year there is a new trend in college shows.

Until last year most of the shows on the campus were revues, made up of a number of separate acts. However, this year all the colleges and faculties except Medicine are presenting "book" shows. A book show has a plot to tie together the musical numbers and skits.

University College, following this trend, has replaced the traditional UC Follies with a new musical comedy called Where On Earth? The plot of the show is adapted from a musical comedy "Away We Go" which was produced at Wayne University last year. New music for Where On Earth has been written by Gerry Reading, the student who wrote the music for last year's All-Varsity Revue. Ron Gould is the director of the show.

Where On Earth? will be presented in Hart House Theatre on November 12, 13 and 14. Tickets will go on sale in the UC Rotunda from 12 to 2 p.m., starting Wednesday, Oct. 28.

Bob Revue Will Open Next Week

The Vic Bob Revue will be an original book show again this year, called Tales of the Vienna Wolves. Last year's presentation was The Orphan.

The plot of Tales of the Vienna Wolves revolves around the cold war situation in Vienna. The commandants of the four occupying powers, with their wives and their aides, as well as three brilliant anarchists, and a beautiful woman all get involved in the story. Lilian Petrie plays the beautiful woman.

There will be more than 75 people in the cast, many of whom are experienced performers from last year's Bob Revue. Tickets for the show, which features Viennese music and dancing are on sale at the Vic Coffee Shop, for Nov. 2, 3, and 4.

INTERFACULTY

Skule Beer Barrels Take Lead In Interfaculty Football Standings

Varsity's Interfaculty Football league is already near the halfway mark in its schedule, and it is fast becoming apparent that the remodelled Skule Machine is unlikely to be beaten in its roll to the Mulock Cup.

With its power split between two squads last year the hapless Skuleboys were set upon by such heartless opportunists as Vic and their weakened condition exploited by the ambitious Artsmen in their march to the Mulock. There will be no happenings of that sort this season. Skule is One again and shall so remain. They have girded all their strength in one Super-Squad and dare the campus' coyotes, be they from Vic or anywhere, to do their worst.

The Beer Barrels of Skule barrelled their way past defending Champs Vic in their first season's contest 8-1. But that pace was far too slow for the steaming Skulemen so this week they sped things up by chugging callously over some meek Medsmen 26-0.

These two consecutive victories against no defeats have put the Engineers right up in top spot of Division I. The only contenders who sport a like record are St. Mike's and Trinity of Div. II, but having seen both crews look like a soft touch for the Skule.

Vic, after their early season loss to Skule surged back and bested UC but they have a long way to go before they can match the Engineers' power, and that is what they must do if they are to repeat for the Mulock.

Dents and Forestry, the cellar occupants of Div. II have the frustrating habit of coming painfully close in all their games but always being just edged at the edn. These lads don't have the rosiest of chances but if the leaders ease up and start reading their clippings the Dents and Forestry crews have the power to move right in and take over.

With Batter Up Gals Play Ball

In a rematched softball battle between Vic and Saint Hilda's firsts, the Vicsters outshine their opponents by a wide 13-5.

Vic took to bat in the first of the opener tallying a sturdy 11. Jackie Wickware, Mary Spragg and Mary Foster wended their respective ways home twice while Pat Cowman slammed her usual homer of the day.

The Saints tried in the second half but only managed to get one home, on Wright's whalloping homer at the beginning of the segment. This was the only spectacuoar play of the game for the Saints except when the same tallying on a homer occurred early in the second inning.

This left the Vics gals ahead by a comfortable, if not fascinating 10 point margin. This margin was increased only by one in the second and at the end of this portion, the score card read, 12-2 for the Scarlet and Gold.

Vic seemed to lack the first inning spirit again in the match. Elisha File scored the single in the third as three struck out in a row.

Saint Hilda's were walked through the third to gain three points and at the end of the match, (though not the most specacular it was the most attended), Vic led 13-5.

Tuck Runs

Trinity charges eight cents for coffee and the traditional tea is ten cents a pot. Unfortunately they don't sell crumpets. Trinity can shout 'Crumpets and Tea' all they want but there are no crumpets.

The JCR has also dime coffee but the combination of hot coffee and paper cups results in burnt fingers and spilling with the remainder of the coffee tasting like the paper cup. The Vic union has seven cent coffee and the trip across the campus is worth it.

The Vic Tuck shop has different hours this year. Last year the hours were from 11.00 to 2.00 but the first hour proved to be very unprofitable so that this year the hours are from noon until 2.00.

Harrier Men To Run Today In Jr. Tourney

The back campus will be the spot and 4:30 the time as junior intramural harrier gets under way this afternoon.

A suitable course, slightly over 2 miles, has been set up on the campus for the event and a strong turnout is expected. All undergraduates are eligible except those who have competed in intercollegiate meets or placed in the first ten of a previous junior harrier race. Under these rulings the harrier will provide a wide open race for all the entrants. Won last year by Jim Bathingwaite of Meds, the event offers an excellent opportunity for the colleges or faculties to increase their point totals in the Reed Trophy race. Entries will be accepted up till the starting time and fellows interested should sign up in the intramural office.

The senior intramural harrier meet will take place Nov. 5 at 3:30 in High Park. It will be run on an official cross-country course of just over 5 miles considered by many of the outstanding runners to be one of the best in this area. This event should also prove to be a wide open affair as the intercollegiate distance men are not eligible and it is open to all other undergrads. The individual honours last year were captured by Mal Crawford, who was thrust into the cruel world by graduation last spring, with S.P.S. emerging the team champions.

Soviet Unrest

members of other nationalities now residing in the Soviet Union, is clear confirmation that since the Russian nation is the largest in number among the many other nations which formerly composed the Russian State and now are subjected to an international communist regime, they are the ones who suffer most from it. In the West's present policy toward communism and its stronghold in the Soviet Union, it will be not only foolish but suicidal to identify the Russians with Communisam and all other nationalities in the Soviet Union with anti-Communism.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

RABBLE ROUSER?

Every now and again someone timidly suggests a change and is automatically stamped as a "red" or "pink" depending on how much rabbling he is rousing. One such lad might be Phil Ketchum, the recently appointed President of the Hart House Squash Club. However it is doubtful if Phil will classify as a "red" or even a measly "pink".

The change that our friend from the Crumpets and Tea Society suggests is to put the squash courts located in the cellars of Hart House under the jurisdiction of the Athletic Office. To agree or disagree certain facts have to be covered.

First of all, contrary to what you might think the courts do not come under the jurisdiction of the Athletic Wing except that the Wing provides the locker facilities. Actually the courts come under the control of the House Committee.

Secondly, contrary to public opinion there is an Interfaculty squash playdown. True, last year it took a slight beating due to circumstances beyond the control of all concerned. An improvement in the Interfaculty setup in Squash is the second change that friend Ketch would like to bring about. He is not alone in this respect since he has the backing of John McCutcheon, the Director of Intramural Athletics here at Varsity.

THEN WHAT'S THE BEEF?

The beef seems to be that it is difficult to log time on the squash courts. No one who is at all familiar with the crowded athletic plant will doubt that probably the courts are the busiest single attraction at Hart House. A quick trip at any time of the day will be enough to cure anyone who might think they aren't busy.

Actually it isn't as tough as all that to make a reservation for a court. It only takes a call to the Hall Porter to book some time. If you get up early enough you will have no trouble making a reservation, but if you have to get up at 5 a.m. to phone the Porter for a court, it is not necessarily an argument for putting the court under the control of the Athletic Office but is another good reason why we should have a field house as soon as possible.

THE SAME OLD STORY?

Again we run into that familiar story, "if we had a new field house." Everyone would like to see one, even the University Administration, if only to get rid of the headache of a field house controversy. As far as interfaculty sports is concerned, it would be the best possible shot in the arm. While intramural football, track, soccer, lacrosse, volleyball, would probably manage to struggle on as they are for some time, the indoor activities such as squash,

Vic Remove Riva Kane Takes Over

By FRED GRAY

Anyone who witnessed the first two Scarlet and Gold outings in the intramural football loop can not help but be impressed by the marked difference as they rolled to victory over the UC Tigers compared to the defeat they absorbed at the hands of Skule the previous week.

Vic at present are very fortunate in the fine coaching they are receiving at the hands of Joe Kane and his able assistant Jerry Fitzhenry, but things were not always so rosy in this department. Joe Kane had offered to help the boys at the start of the season but the acquisition of a shining prospect in the form of Stan Riva, steeped in football lore and from down New York way, gave Joe the opportunity to step out and devote more time to his course at Osgoode. Practices started out in fine style but it soon became obvious to such experienced campaigners as Ross Murrey and Johnny Bond that something was amiss. John felt that the widespread dis-satisfaction, even to the point were some of the boys were dropping from the club, could be traced back to the coaching that the club was receiving. The matter received the attention of the Vic Athletic Association and dismissal of the coach was decided to be the only plausible solution to a rather sticky proposition. The unpleasant job fell to the lot of John Bond who as a member of the Athletic associaton and also the football squad seemed to be in the best position to swing the axe. John felt this move justified though as it had become rather obvious to the boys concerned that the acceptance of the job by Stan Riva had been a clear case of misrepresentation as far as his knowledge of football was concerned.

After this rather discouraging start the Vic team is practicing diligently to overcome any shortcomings to date and with last game as an indication of things to come Vic seems to be right back in the thick of the Mulock race. Also the fine running of track star Norm Williams at the half spot in the practices of the last few days gives Vic and coach Joe Kane something else to crow about.

Soccer Divisions Two-Team Races

Soccer on the Intramural front is now narrowed down to a race between two teams in each of Divisions I and II.

Sr. S.P.S. are out to add another Championship to the Skule total in their drive for a repeat in the Reed Trophy race. Thus far the Engineers have won two straight and lead their group.

Sr. Meds are another Div. I crew that have championship ideas. The Medsmen have taken two in a row also but in their group there is another S.P.S. team, the Jrs. this time that have also won two, the difference being that the Engineers recently lost one, while the Medders are unbeaten — as yet.

In Div. II it's Knox and Emmanuel share top spot each having two wins and a tie to their credit. There will undoubtedly be trouble deciding first place here as in their only meeting to date the two squads struggled to a 1-1 deadlock.

Ice Practices Set To Start Next Week

The football schedule is only approaching the halfway mark, and basketball hasn't yet started. But already the Intramural people are thinking about the coming interfaculty hockey season.

The Intramural hockey practices get under way in a little more than a week with the first practice scheduled for Thursday November 5. The actual league schedule gets under way on Monday, November 23. The practice sessions will run for two weeks and a day, from the 5th to the 20th of November. Each team is allowed 6 free practice hours at the arena. So the teams have only a week to get practices organized.

As usual, the Intramural Office thinks of every possibility, particularly Miss Kay Boyd. There is a clinic, practice and demonstration for all who want to make a few bucks for refereeing Interfaculty Hockey. The date of the clinic is Monday, November 16 at 5.30 p.m. All who are interested should see Miss Boyd in the Intramural office immediately. The same applies to would-be basketball officials since there is always more than enough work (and money) for those who want to blow basketball games for the Interfaculty.

Intramural Volleyball Standings

Volleyball is well under way in the Interfaculty league, with nearly all the teams having seen action.

Division One is the largest outfit in the league with 6 groups and about 24 teams — which means that there are about 240 or more players participating.

Group I has Sr. Skule at the head with two wins and no losses.

Group II is led presently by Jr. UC, also with two wins and no losses.

Dents A carry the Faculty banner proudly in Group III.

Two victories and no losses place Meds II yr. at the top in Group IV.

A win apiece have Vic II and UC leading group V.

There is a tie for the leadership in Group VI where Dents B and SPS V are in step with a single win each.

I'ts Forestry A leading Division II and last year's finalists are the pick for the title this year. Their smooth team play and great height will make it hard for any ambitious opposition to come up with them. Thus far they are undefeated in two starts and are tops in their Division.

Group II has another tie with Forestry B and Wycliffe A counting a victory each.

Group III is ruled by Pharmacy B with two wins.

Yet another Wycliffe team, this time the B's are in a tie. Group IV has them in a dead heat with Pharmacy C for the leadership.

Interfaculty Soccer

Jr. Skule started strong in today's match with St. Mike's but faltered in the second period an' ended up on the short end of a 2-1 score.

It was fast and hard soccer all the way with the Engineers striking for an early lead and holding it till the half. But the never say die squad from St. Mike's were conceding nothing and rapped in two quickies in the final period and killed Skule chances.

Montgomery was the Skule sniper, but alas, alack, 'twas all in vain.

UC Leads Boxla

As per usual the UC I's are top dogs in the Interfaculty Lacrosse Loop. Right up there at the peak of Division I the Artsmen have so far scored two wins and have yet to be bested. Meds I have the same standing but when they meet the Arts types they should lose their unbeaten record.

Med's have another strong squad in the tourney this year. Their Third Year are as yet undefeated and rule Group Two in common with St. Mike's A.

Dents are the top squad in Division III with three points apiece.

UC has another powerful team in the first Division.

In Division II it's Pharmacy and Knox with three points apiece.

Churchill Award

Morgantown, West Virginia, Oct. 21 — (Reprinted from the Daily Athenaeum, West Virginia University.) Sir Winston Churchill not only is one of the greatest statesmen of our times. He also is a master of the English language, a brilliant orator and a superb writer.

The award of the Nobel prize for literature to him is richly deserved, and will be praised wherever our English tongue is spoken and read.

His memoirs of World War II, on which the award was based, have been read almost as widely in this country as in Britain.

Americans cannot always agree with this grand old gentleman in political matters, but we agree heartily with the Nobel Committee's decision to confer upon him this high honor.

Montreal, Oct. 20 (CUP) — Reprinted from the Georgian, Sir George Williams University. Annually in November the Swedish Academy announces the winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. This year, owing to the fact that Sir Winston Churchill has been chosen, the announcement has come a month earlier.

In making their choice of Sir Winston as this year's leading literary figure, they have unconsciously aroused a storm of criticism. And not without good cause. The Nobel Prize is usually associated with exceptional artistic success in the field of literature.

Sir Winston, although an exceptional writer in his own field, has not the humanitarian outlook that should be predominant in any great literary work. The great majority of his writings are concerned with the Great Wars and the unofficial attitude of the British Government during these times.

How much better it would be if were showered on some not-so-well this prize, economic and otherwise, known, but promising writer. This would not only aid him economically, but also encourage him in his next effort.

Most of Sir Winston's work is a highly pictorial account of the two World wars, and leaves something to be desired in the imaginative and creative fields. However, it appears that the Swedish Academy was influenced more by the spectacular and fairy-book life of Sir Winston than of any particular motive of encouraging younger and more promising writers.

In the words of Alfred Nobel the prize would be given "in the field of literature to the person who shall have produced the most distinguished work of creative tendency." In the future the Swedish Academy would do well to follow his wish.

Speaking Of Sport

badminton and indoor tennis, to mention ony a few, are taking a beating as long as this University has to do without a field house.

So squash is not the only interfaculty sport that is suffering for lack of facilities. It has company.

SQUASH AS AN INTRAMURAL SPORT

So it looks like the squash people will have to manage as best they can for the present. It is a shame, for squash has always been one of the favourite indoor sports and particularly so in the interfaculty realm.

But here again, the trouble that is involved in arranging an Interfaculty Squash Tournament almost outweighs its usefullness. It took John McCutcheon about sixteen dozen pages of scratch paper to explain the various schedule arrangements. The possible permutations and combinations were fabulous.

That an Interfaculty Squash Tournament would be acceptable to the colleges is demonstrated by the affirmative answers of Marvin Segal, Athletic Director of U.C., to the questions "Does U.C. think that there should be an Interfaculty Squash Tournament and would U.C. participate?" This from one of the most apathetic colleges, athletic-wise, on the campus.

The only problem is to find schedule that would meet with the time limitations. Our Phil Ketchum seems like a good lad to come up with the right answer. It is very encouraging that someone in the Interfaculty sports field has enough spunk to be interested enough to try and correct an existing situation. There aren't many people on the campus in or out of sport who would like him. The majority are too apathetic.

Intramural Scores

First-year Pre Meds lacrosse team continued the long-standing Medicine tradition in the world of interfaculty lacrosse yesterday by taking a narrow victory 5-3 victory over St. Michael's college "B" squad.

Medicine was on top of the intramural lacrosse heap for many seasons until University college broke the spell last season and the freshmen looked like they might be on the verge of bringing back the "good old days" in outlasting the Irish outfit.

Sorokolit fired a brace of goals for the victorious Medsmen with singletons going to Shawinksi, Perkins and Robertson.

McKeown, Shepherd and Ted Rogers were the marksmen for the losers who were never out of range in dropping the decision.

In last evening's interfaculty volleyball activity, St. Michael's "E" defaulted to S.P.S. Sixths. Then, in the second match, the UC team from 5 Grenville St. had to go the limit to take a decision over PreMeds IB. The UC boys won 15-11 and 15-4, with the Medsmen squeezing a 15-12 win in between.

On Having A Cold

What is it about this time of year that gives everyone a cold. The temperature just has to drop a few degrees overnight and the next day everyone is sniffling, coughing or wheezing.

No one is so miserable as the person who has an everyday ordinary cold. Practically no serious illness can put a victim through the tortures of the damned in so short a time as a cold and still leave him on his feet. No illness can call forth such a shocking lack of sympathy from the onlookers for those in misery. It is one of the peculiarities of a cold that the person who has one never considers himself truly ill.

What illness ever calls forth the diversity of medicines, "quack" cures, and home-made remedies as does a cold? People can argue for hours as to the relative merits of their pet injection or anti-histamine tablet only to be told flatly by an onlooker that nothing will help them but steaming out their cold with scalding baths and hot lemonades.

But the final word on colds belongs to a former history teacher of mine who said: "If you take care of a cold it will only last seven days, but if you neglect it, it will last a week."

UC Seconds Fade To Lose 4-3 To Vic

UC II grabbed a fast lead in yesterday's Interfaculty Lacrosse match but slowed and the alert Vic II team drove in to score 4 counters that the UC lads just couldn't match, no matter how hard George Patterson tried and the Vicsters won 4-3.

Patterson was the top man on the court as he rapped in two first period goals for UC In the second and third periods however the men of Vic notched 2 markers in each putting them up 4-2 on the Redmen. Patterson gave his all in the finale but could only score once, and with no supporting counters from the other Redmen it was in vain and the match ended with the Redmen one goal down and victory safe in Vic hands.

Caldwell starred for the Vics as the sure-eyed marksman netted three scores and was assisted by Mason who added the winner.

Oh Say, Can You See . . .

—Varsity Staff Cartoon by Peter Grant.

Not Worth It

One of the reasons we felt that the National Federation of Canadian University Students continually failed to do anything of major significance was because it lacked the funds with which to do it. How sadly we have been disillusioned.

At recent meeting of NFCUS the per capita revenue was increased. A fifty-cent conditional fee was voted on and supported. Nowhere, and we have looked through all the pages of the more than twenty reports and sub-reports, has there appeared a corresponding or even slight increase of NFCUS plans.

Of the twenty universities directly connected with the Federation only eleven will pay the fifty cents. The University of Montreal which came back into NFCUS this year has also agreed to pay the increase. But that still leaves nine universities, at least, who will continue to pay the twenty cents.

What's this mean? It means that any added expenses which NFCUS has adopted in its budget will have to be paid out of the pockets of the students of the twelve universities. And Toronto students are among them.

Now we wonder, are Toronto students any better set up financially than the students of the nine universities? We think not and we don't think they should be asked to pay any more for ther national federation than some of the other student members. If administrative costs have risen, then it is the job of all the NFCUS membership to contribute equally to pay the expenses. Remember, when it comes to voting, each university gets but one vote regardless of the amount of money it has paid.

One thing is clear: NFCUS does not need a raise for an expanding program. There is no such program.

And surely costs haven't risen by two and a half times in one year. Moreover, Toronto and eleven other universities should not carry NFCUS on their collective shoulders alone.

If that means that the Federation cannot "go on" then perhaps we should consider if it is even worth the twenty cents. While the potentialities of NFCUS will always remain it seems just as obvious that they will never materialize so long as the Federation is a one-vote-per-university group and not a reflection of a true cross-section of Canadian student opinion.

Toronto should not pay the hike in fees because there are no expanded projects to warrant it. Toronto must not pay the increase if others don't.

What Next

This American Press dispatch appeared in a downtown daily recently:

"Representative Alvin O'Konski (Rep., Wis.) has urged South Korean President Syngman Rhee to free the remaining anti-Communist prisoners of war. . . . In a letter to Rhee (he) said the South Korean president would win the world's praise if he freed the . . . prisoners who have refused repatriation."

We wonder what American government leaders will think of next to hasten a Korean peace. O'Konski offers the stupidest suggestion to date.

Appeal for the Guianese

A group of people in Jamaica whose homes are in other parts of the West Indies and Britain have drafted this appeal asking other people to co-operate in arousing public opinion on the British Guiana question. In so doing they hope to prevent in some way what they call "the acceptance of a departure from constitutional practice which endangers the representative constitution of other territories."

The recent events in British Guiana have aroused world-wide interest, and have caused great concern, not only here in the West Indies, but abroad also.

THE ACTION OF THE IMPERIAL Government in removing the constitution of British Guiana has come as a profound shock, and reaction to it in official West Indian circles has seemed slow and uncertain. It may be that, in moments of profound crisis such as this, our leaders unconsciously wait upon the expression of their people's wishes. Such pronouncements as have been made, bear the stamp of this hesitancy. We feel that at this moment in our history we cannot shirk the responsibility for expressing our honest convictions, cannot avoid taking a stand on this issue which is of such great importance to us all . . .

If a sound constitutional relationship is to exist between the Imperial Government and a colony, one party to that relationship cannot claim unlimited reserve powers, and the right to exercise them without reference either to the elected government or to the inhabitants of the Colony. The present suspension of the British Guiana constitution, which amounts to its virtual abrogation, represents just such an exercise of absolute powers by the Imperial Government. This action can only weaken the faith of colonial peoples in that evolutionary constitutional advance which is the most valuable safeguard against Communism.

We must be assured of security of tenure in our constitutions.

EARLY IN 1953 A NEW CONSTITUTION was granted to the people of British Guiana. This constitution was brought into force by co-operation between their then representative government and the British Government. It gave them a new representative legislature, and a semi-responsible government, rather like the forms of governments and the constitutions of Barbados and Jamaica.

It is this new constitution, given to the people of British Guiana, which has now been taken away from them because of charges made against certain elected Ministers of the British Guiana Government. These charges have been used to justify hte withdrawal of the constitu-used to justify the withdrawal of the constitu-in an official colonial office statement, allege in brief that the elected Ministers and the People's Progressive Party are completely under the control of a Communist clique, and that therefore a dangerous crisis threatens, that the Ministers have persistently intruded into the sphere of the public service and have among other things sought to undermine the loyalty and discipline of the Police Force, and the influence of the established youth movements, such as the Boy Scouts and the Girl Guides. These are grave charges; they are laid however, against a few named individuals only, and if substantiated according to due processes of law, the legal machinery already in existence can be invoked.

TOO MUCH ATTENTION HAS, we believe, been paid to this aspect of the matter, and for this sensational reporting in the newspapers is partly to blame. Another more important aspect has been overlooked. The people of British Guiana have been deprived of their constitution, the first which allowed them universal adult suffrage. We believe that in this, grave injustice has been done. We recognize dangers in the methods used by the Imperial Government, of deeper significance and of wider impact, than was perhaps envisaged by the British Government and its advisers when first they embarked upon their present course of action.

The faith which Colonial peoples in many countries of the British Empire have placed in their constitutions and in the validity of the constitutional guarantees given to them by the Imperial Government, is shown now to be ill-founded. If we accept that the action in British Guiana has the sanction of constitutional right, then our constitutions become worthless. In this instance the constitution has been withdrawn on the charge of Communism; how can we be sure that in other territories a different charge will not be considered sufficient? On the principle of action which is now adopted a representative constitution can be taken away without warning from any territory which has not yet achieved Dominion status.

FURTHER, WHEN IN THE seventeenth and again in the nineteenth centuries, the Imperial Government attempted to change the Jamaica constitution, it failed in the face of the legislatures concerned. The legal power perhaps was there, but the British Government recognized the unwisdom then of proceeding other than by constitutional means. Indeed, the opinion has been offered, and past practice would seem to support it, that an established representative constitution cannot be taken away by exercise of the prerogative of the Crown. We believe that it cannot constitutionally be taken away without consent, even by Act of Parliament.

This is the argument we wish to advance. On this basis people of all classes, and in all walks of life, in the West Indies and elsewhere, can co-operate to restore trust in constitutional procedure, which alone holds out any hope for the future advance of the colonial peoples, and any prospect of a healthy relationship with the Imperial Government.

BY DEFAULT OF ACTION, by hesitancy, we can do severe hurt to the cause of real freedom. For there are many who see clearly the dangers as we do, and who will welcome our support and co-operation.

For these reasons we have laid before you the issues as we see them. We feel that they are of such importance that they must be brought to the attention of the public. We are communicating with groups and people who cherish the ideals we do, and this statement is an offer of our help and a plea for yours.

Everyone in British Guiana has been deprived of his constitutional rights, and in place of his representative government now has a government which is responsible to no one in British Guiana, but only to the Colonial Office. Such a form of government has been tried before in the West Indies and has been a disastrous failure.

CONSTITUTIONAL LIBERTIES IN THE West Indies are being endangered. The situation in British Guiana is being discussed in Parliament. Now is the time for public opinion in the West Indies to make itself heard. We suggest that West Indians and all others who are interested in the preservation of constitutional liberties should join in a strong protest against the action taken in withdrawing the British Guiana constitution.

Probably this protest will be more effective if groups can be formed all over the West Indies to appeal to public opinion, pointing out that our constitutional rights are being violated.

OUR GROUP IS SENDING THIS statement to the Colonial Office, to members of the British Parliament, to political parties in the West Indies and in Britain, to newspapers, to the West Indian Students' Union and to individuals and small groups who are likely to be interested in voicing their protest.

Club Seeks Caput Okay To Aid Striking Miners

A new student organization has applied to the Caput of the University for recognition. It is "The Student Committee for Aid to Mining Communities."

The new organization will apply at tonight's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council for permission to hold a tag day in the near future.

Those associated with the Labour Progressive Party are excluded from the organization by its constitution. The executive announced yesterday that they will not use the name of the University in its appeal.

"Those who have founded this committee feel that the welfare problem of them mining communities is important enough that other sections of the community outside the trade union movement should b prepared to aid miners and their families on a charitable basis and without necessarily taking sides on the issues of the strike," said Norm Chalmers, III- Law, yesterday.

In its letter to the SAC the Committee says that funds raised by the tag day will be used to back grocery vouchers issued by the United Steelworkers' Welfare Fund and to purchase food consumed in kitchens which the Union has set up.

The tag day will be held if permission is granted, later than the campaigns for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education (SHARE) and the Red Feather. The Committee feels that there is every reason to believe that the strike will still be in effect when the SHARE campaign ends. Any funds left over will be donated to SHARE.

The Committee declares in its constitution that it will wind up by January 31, 1954.

The Strikes in the Northern Ontario mining areas of Timmins and Noranda broke out in July. More mines have been striking ever since as their contracts terminated and the decisions of the Conciliation Board were delivered. A total of 7,000 miners are now on strike, 4,250 in Porcupine Camp in the Timmins area and 2,800 miners in the Noranda area.

The Union is fighting for a reduction in working hours and higher wages, but the real issue of the strike is the voluntary revocable checkoff. "This boils down to the managements' agreement to live with the union," said Chalmers.

Strikers are now losing articles purchased on time; gathering fuel by community purchases of timber rights; eating by means of large community kitchens. They have received no other aid besides that of the Union and local organizations.

Prof. Reynolds To Give Talk On Mid East

"The power vacuum in the Middl. East" will be the subject of an address to be delivered this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in Room 115 in the Economics Building, by Professor P. A. Reynolds. He is on the staff of the University of Wales.

Prof. Reynolds, who presides over international politics, lectures at the Welsh College in Aberystwyth, is here as a guest of the Department of Political Economy.

Two Bits?

Clip Joint

This is a true story. Only the names have been changed to prevent anyone from getting clipped. On the other hand this could have been headed with a few bars of the old familiar 'Shave and a Haircut, Two Bits' routine. However only the shave and haircut is old and familiar, the two bits is unheard of these days.

Whatever the opener, let it be known that Hart House has a barbarshop. Sandwiched between the Art Gallery and the gymnasium facilities, there is a neat, trim door with four chairs where students and staff may slip away for a few minutes to, as the expression goes, 'get their ears lowered.'

Why the situation between these two seemingly incongruent places in Hart House is hard to understand. Culture on one side and sports on the other seems unusual, but barbarshops from time immemorial have been the meeting-places of manly discussions. The officials of Hart House perhaps had this in mind when the shop was innovated. Then again, it may have been the only available space to put it..

Messrs. Morton, Mahood, Huff and Dunleavy make up the staff of the barbar shop. Here, between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 6:00 p.m. during the winter months perform their job of tonsorial artistry but alas! it is done in relative silence.

Gone from this barbarshop are the heated arguments on sports, politics and elections. Not that these men are not prepared to talk or even willing to listen in complete sympathy but they say that nowadays students are too preoccupied to talk about these favourite barbershop topics. Another reason may be that the students are so tired of talk and too intent on that cute little reason for the haircut, to discuss anything.

This shop is also open during the summer months but the hours are different. These hours are from 9:00 to 5:00 and there are only two barbers in attendance. At one time during the summer months the barbers used to take care of the Tuck shop which was moved here.

Approximately one hundred students a day make use of these facilities, but this varies in direct ratio to the number of social events. The shop hits its peak during height of the campus social season; then the students splurge (ah, those cute little reasons that cause us to spruce up) and besides having haircuts they go in for other services such as shampoos, singes and massages.

For some unexplained reason the volume of business has dropped since the DVR students have thinned out. These gentlemen lined up three and four deep for haircuts and the barbers claimed they were never more busy. Also they made more use of shaves, massages, etc., than do the students today.

For the benefit of those 'barenecked, unshaven and unkempt ruffians' (remember us from last year, fellows?) who cannot wait in a large line-up because of classes they must attend, a service was installed some time ago whereby a student may make an appointment for his haircut at an additional charge of fifteen cents.

Therefore girls, don't let your date show up looking scruffy around the ears, and giving excuses about having no time to go to the barber. Tell him to go to (but be careful how you pause here) the Hart House barbershop.

Salsberg, MPP Will Lecture On Gas Pipe

Joseph Salsberg, MPP will speak to the University Labour Progressive Party Club on "The National Gas Line Issue—A National Challenge" today at 1:00 p.m. in Room 4, University College.

The reason the question is being discussed, said the President of the club, Ron Beiderman, I UC, is that the LPP feels that this is one of the many similar issues which demonstrate clearly the betrayal of the national interests of this country by the Liberal Government.

Mr. Salsberg has long been interested in the question of the development of our natural resources, said Biederman.

New Arms Defend US —Thompson

By using Atomic Weapons the West can afford to reduce its armed forces, and rely more fully on new methods of defence, Professor Kenneth W. Thompson told the International Relations Club yesterday. He addressed the IRC yesterday afternoon on "Unsolved Problems in American Foreign Policy."

The first major issue he discussed was the rearmament problem. American policy has been to maintain a sufficiently large force overseas to deter the communists from any further expansion. With atomic bombs the West can reduce its armies throughout the world. However, recent Russian overtures for disarmament have created a very serious problem in that if disarmament came about the West's defences would be ext. ely weak, and troops would have to be recruited once more.

Professor Thompson supported the stand taken by the American government at the United Nations in most of its dealing with the Communists since 1945 with some reservation. He explained the difficult position the USA was in, referring to the fluctuating world situation and the relative immaturity of the US government in International affairs.

He added that "until these problems are dealt with in a realistic way there can be at best a precarious situation, from which a fatal conflict could evolve."

Red Feather Gains $628 At Tag Day

Proceeds from yesterday's Red Feather Tag Day amounted to $627.86. This is compared to last year's $567.81. Architecture and Medicine donated another $167.51.

Bill Baldwin I Theology, Wycliffe, Chairman of the Students' Service Committee said, "Tag Day contributions are up from last year, which indicates the students' interest in the Red Feather Campaign and their desire to help and encourage this extremely valuable community service."

He also expressed thanks to the for a job very well done and also special thanks to the women from Nursing, Victoria College, and Trinity for the valuable assistance they rendered as taggers.

These young ladies, Sheila Cox (L) and Ann Adan were chosen for parts in the forthcoming Vic show on the basis of their singing ability, as any one can perceive.

Vic's Pete Watson Wins Race But Woodchoppers Snatch Title

By MOISHE REITER

Skidding and stumbling over the wet pavement last night Big Pete Watson tripped to a dripping first place in the Junior Harrier meet in twelve minutes and forty five seconds. Watson, the limber-legged Varsity track star, who starred in the Intercollegiate half mile at McGill last week kept ahead from the first lap to the end but there were no other Vic men to support his winning effort and the hard team effort of Forestry ran up the highest point total and took team honours.

Forestry's best was Don Harris who finished sixth. Three other Tree-men drove in for high ranking and gave the Foresters top spot with 42 points.

Emmanuel had no runners in the first five but they too placed enough men in the top 30 to gain second ranking in the final scoring. Even so they were 17 behind the Woodsmen with 59 points.

Dennis Muirhead was the best representative of Dentistry in the Harrier. Muirhead held the winner's pace until the last, finishing fourth. His effort combined with strong finishes by team mates was enough to give Dents third place in the meet and some points toward the Dent drive for the Reed Trophy. Dents ended up with 70 points in the Harrier, 11 behind Emmanuel and 28 under Forestry.

The race was over a two-mile course, leading through the campus and circling it three times. After the first lap it resolved itself into three divisions with Watson, Ian Campbell of Meds, Val Spring of SPS and Muirhead in one. The next group decided the race with the placers from 5-20 competing and the final bunch were the stragglers who found after the meet had begun that the course was far longer than it had seemed to be.

No Winner Shows Up In Soccer

There was much muddy soccer action on the front campus yesterday but of the four teams playing not one lost a game and not one won. All made drowsy by the dismal drizzle of rain on the games, allowed themselves to be tied and were fit to be.

A lunch hour Law and the high ranking Emmanuel squad went through a scoreless first period. When Emmanuel marked up a singleton in the second period it looked for a while as though we might have a winner, but the wily Lawyers managed to find a loophole and notched the equalizer —which was the way hostilities ended . . . a 1-1 deadlock.

Ken Gidan netted the Law score and it was Jim Davies that upheld the honour of Emmanuel.

Despite the valiant efforts of Mani Thaler on the front campus in the late afternoon PreMeds were held to a scoreless tie in both frames by a persistent Dents crew. A lion on defence Thaler led the vicious Meds' scoring sallies on a staunch Dents defence. Hard breaks stopped these thrusts and the Dentsmen were able to hold the title hungry Medsters to the tie.

PHE Gals Score 13-4 Softball Win

Play Ball. PHE I grabbed a fast lead in Tuesday's Interfaculty Softball game against POT. The match was played on Trinity Field and proved to be the second loss of the season for Physots. Despite pitcher Mary Marg O'Neil's dazzling efforts, Physeds knocked in eight runs in the first inning. Eager to tally, the Physots got the shock of their lives when the top three on their batting order were put away before they could leave the plate.

In the second, the story was much the same. POT's just couldn't get the ball rolling—or better still—flying. PHE batted in two more runs to up their tally to ten.

Then in the third, after Phys-eds tallied up three more, it looked as if Physots would finally let loose. Jane Roelefson, Mary Marg O'Neil, Helen Aves, and Marion Current managed to get hits past pitcher Ruth Marshal, who did a great job. She, along with Ann Johnston, Dorothy Hudson, and Van Marshal were responsible for eight of the PHE runs. Final score at the end of three innings—13-4 for PHE I.

Interfaculty

SPS IV started strong, faltered then finished up real fine in the Interfac. volleyball to-day as they beat UC III. The first game was Skule's with the Engineers winning 15-7. They dropped the next

In lacrosse the SPS'ers started slow and spurted too late to catch Vic who won 5-3.

Tweddle was top scorer for the day as the Vicmen notched a pair for the winners.

Soccer Blues Play At Mac

Social note: McMaster University's senior and intermediate soccer teams will be hosts at afternoon tea today. Their guests will be the University of Toronto's two fitba squads.

At least it's expected to be somewhat of a tea party for the Blues anyway. Last week, when the Macmen were guests here, they were unceremoniously trounced in both games. It was 8-0 for Varsity in the senior game and 3-1 in the intermediate fixture.

The Varsity squad will be back to full strength after being deprived of the services of four key players on their trip to Buffalo last Saturday. They won, anyway, over the Buffalo State Teachers' crew.

The Blues swing into action again Saturday when they tackle Royal Military College from Kingston in a noon-hour tilt on the front campus.

From The Other Side

The New Initiative

With reference to the "Changed Policy" of the International Union of Students, The Varsity reprints an excerpt from an editorial in that body's publication, "World Student News". The article appeared immediately prior to the World Student Congress held in Warsaw last summer.

What then is the significance of this Third World Student Congress? What must its greatest achievement be? The answer, we could all agree upon—the bringing together of students in a great representative meeting where outstanding problems are discussed in a rational and friendly way. It must be a Congress which contributes to friendship and co-operation through negotiation and discussion — a working Congress which will chart a way forward, defining students' needs and drafting a programme in accordance.

IUS RECOGNIZES THAT it has no monopoly of truth and welcomes statements of differing opinion and criticisms delivered in a straightforward and constructive way. That there have been weaknesses in its work is without question. More flexible constitutional forms are necessary for relations with different student groups and organizations; more attention is necessary to developing live student contact between countries; much more should have been achieved in the field of faculty work and in general in cultural and sport activities. But more important than the weaknesses is the determination that they will be overcome. IUS is a young organization and is learning. With awareness of the problems our joint efforts can solve them.

Recently, the initiative has been taken again by IUS and other student organizations to improve relations in the international student movement. Discussions were held between IUS and the Italian IUS, which during the last few years had no normal contact with IUS but invited a representative to its National Student Congress this spring. The administrative Council of the French NUS (UNEF) took a decision which permits local university student organizations to attend Congress. This journal has already reported the exchange of letters with several national unions, including that of the United States. The proposal for the XIIth World University Summer Games in 1954, on an Olympic basis, opens up new possibilities for the unity of world student sport.

TO CONCLUDE, CONGRESS will discuss problems facing students and the tasks of IUS and student organizations for unity, for the needs and interests of students. Criticism and proposals for the future as well as the positive work done in the past are assured a fruitful and frank discussion. Congress must make its contribution to the improvement of students' lives, to the breaking down of suspicions and international tension, to the solution of existing differences by negotiations by uniting upon those things about which we can all agree, the desire for peace and a better life.

Far Too Far

Senator Pat McCarran is at it again. And University of Toronto athletes are once more his prey.

The Varsity reported yesterday that five members of the Blues' soccer team had been stopped Saturday from entering the United States to play a game against Buffalo Teachers' College. This is not the first time it has happened. Last year several swimmers were barred from travelling to Niagara University and other members of the International Relations Club were prevented from visiting the United Nations.

We think this has gone a little too far.

Why have these students been barred? Simply because they happened to be born in the "wrong" place at the "wrong" time. But surely they couldn't help it.

The University of Toronto has accepted these students on equal terms. It permits them to play on the intercollegiate teams with no discrimination. Over and over these "alien" students have proved a credit to Toronto both athletically and scholastically.

We condemn McCarran for categorizing them—making them second-class citizens.

They had not intended to live on the "sacred" soil of the United States. They were just going down for an afternoon, to play a game and to return. Was this any reason to have them stopped?

We don't think so and we think that the Senator in question has abused a right granted every national government. McCarran, sir, you have gone too far.

Time To Go

Tonight at the Students' Administrative Council meeting, our student representatives will consider raising the per capita NFCUS fee to fifty cents. It would appear that such a resolution is a little premature. The question which should be on the floor tonight is secession from the National Federation.

Toronto cannot support nine Universities who are not members of NFCUS. Neither is there any reason to be a member of a federation of 11 members, representing nothing. NFCUS has already split, and someone, surely tonight, will have to recognize it.

Guiana, The Last Ward

The Editor,
The Varsity,

Having finally recovered from the editors' devastating attacks in Monday's Varsity, I feel that I should venture some slight defence. Though I could not but be affected by their flashing eloquence, poured down from such Olympian heights, it seems to me that their scurrilous blasts are as empty of reason as they are devoid of politeness. I should also thank them for the epithet of "gentleman", which, unlike some egalitarian fellows, I fail to find a disgrace or an insult. I may say that I have one consolation, one defence from their magniloquent whimperings: I did not refer to "people" in quotation marks, so apparently my guts are not hated.

I am no "Colonel Blimp"; I am no Anglophile nor even a Briton. I simply agree with British colonial policy in general, particularly in British Guiana, and I feel that the threat of a Communist regime there overcomes all other considerations, even those stated so moderately in Tuesday's Varsity by the West Indian students.

My friends defend "the right of all men to make their own mistakes." Evidently this is stated as an abstract philosophical principle; as such, it is utterly false. To abandon semi-civilized people to the mercies of Communist cut-throats would be contemptibly uncharitable. At the same time, to govern a politically mature people against their wishes would be mere tyranny; the difficulty is in judging that state of maturity. Here, however, the British, with their fund of political experience, are fitter than the Guianese themselves, as the latter showed by their choice. However, logic cannot be expected to dent the chimerical resolution of our radical friends. Perhaps these gallant would-be liberators will even leap to the defence of those other oppressed colonials, the simple and unspoiled Mau-Mau of Kenya. The aversion these people have to the British empire and empires in general, is perhaps explained by Burke's famous phrase, "Great empire and little minds go ill together."

As for Mr. Lee's more restrained criticism, it is the most patent sophistry to equate the Eastern European countries, many of whom have enjoyed centuries of independence and in whom the arts of civilization have flourished and which are under the brutal oppression of men lost to all decency, with a strip of jungle inhabited by aborigines with no tradition of civilized autonomy under the fairly enlightened rule of a Christian nation.

I feel that these considerations fully vindicate my position.

Don't Cry

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Your abortive attempt at an editorial in Friday's issue is almost entirely unfounded. True, to-day's spirit on the campus is not up to par and Western's is probably better; but that can hardly be blamed on the Blue and White society. The Society depends upon the students to fill the various committees, and if the turnout is not sufficient to fill these positions, how can it be blamed? The only conclusion that can be reached is that the spirit has reached such a low level that the students don't want any spirit demonstrated.

The policy of your paper is largely at fault in this matter. Any genuine student activity is panned by the paper so that nobody has the interest any more. The attitude is, "Why should I do anything if all I will receive is criticism?" True, Criticism fosters competition and retaliation (such as the recent panty-raids and plaque-plagues), but why adopt the "blase" position that any student effort is strictly "peasant" and below your high-minded standards.

As for the band, we have no direct connection with them. We have no means of taking the financial burden off the shoulders of the bandsmen as it is the Athletic Association who makes a gift of one thousand dollars to the SAC to pay their expenses. How, may I ask, can we assume the extra expenses that they demand if we have no students to run our activities, or even better, no response to our activities? So students, don't show any interest, don't attend activities, but also don't cry about lack of spirit.

Ralph Walsh.
Blue and White Society.

A Funeral Yet

I don't like funerals. I never go to one unless I have to attend as a matter of decency. Last week, dear reader, I was tricked completely.

It all started in the KCR where I was sitting quietly minding everyone else's business. A friend of mine who shall remain nameless, approached my table with a sad look in his eyes.

"Hello Cat," said he.

"Sit down nameless," I answered.

"Cat," he said, drawing my attention away from a blond beauty with a one-inch head, who was perched on the next table, "I have a solemn duty to perform."

"So have I," I answered, eying the next table.

"Cat, will you come along and lend me moral support?" he asked. "I sure can use you help."

Well, when he put it like that, how could I refuse. I left the hallowed halls to the little men with the slide rules and went out into the sunlight. That dear readers, was the worst mistake I ever made in my life.

We made our way to the site where Nameless was to perform his solemn duty. There were a few stones around and a sombre group of people, dressed mostly in black, were there sadly looking on.

"Wait here Cat," said Nameless as he donned a black robe and joined some other similarly robed men on a platform. I could hear bells tolling in the background. A cold shiver ran up and down my spine and I was having my regrets that I had ever let Nameless talk me into coming with him. I don't like funerals at all.

Nameless began to speak. His eulogy was long and his face was sorrowful, a sight to behold. My hands were clammy. A woman beside me started to cry softly to herself.

The friends and relatives present grew restless as my friend's eulogy droned on and on. I made up my mind right then and there that I would never go to another funeral again as long as I lived. As an afterthought I added that I wouldn't go to one afterwards either.

Almost everyone else had gone home and as I watched them wending their way through the stones I could hear Nameless still speaking. It looked as though it was going to run all night.

"Cat," I said to myself, "you can go home and go to sleep and pick him up in tye morning."

That night, I kept recalling one beautiful phrase which he used.

"I hereby declare this stone well and truly laid."

SUGGEST LEAVING NFCUS

Turned Down

—Staff Photo by Ross Dunn

On his feet last night at the SAC meeting, Joe Slogan, II Dents, asked for aid to mining communities issue. The motion to hold a tag day on the campus for the benefit of mining families in the Timmins area failed to pass by a vote of 16-8. Other topics under discussion last night were the 1954-5 Christian Mission, Book Exchange, and Carabin wekeends. SAC meetings are held at Falkner Hall. All students are welcome to attend as spectators.

Motion of Law Rep Raps National Body

Within the next two weeks students at the University of Toronto will be called upon to decide wheher they want to remain in their national student organization or not. A motion presented at last night's SAC meeting by Horace Krever, Law, proposes that this University "withdraw its membership from the National Federation of Canadian Students immediately." Discussions will be held in the various colleges and faculties to discover whether this step should be approved.

Krever's motion followed a report of the recent NFCUS conference by the Toronto delegates, Jennifer Rickard and Scott Symons. In the report Miss Rickard stated that while the Toronto delegation "perhaps more than anyone, realized the weaknesses of this organization (NFCUS), (it) would also like to recognize its potentialities."

The report said that the Federation could never hope to be a pressure group. "Its structure and lack of continuity would never permit this."

But Miss Rickard pointed out that Toronto last year had wholeheartedly supported NFCUS and a one dollar fee raise. This was the result of a campus-wide student referendum held last spring.

At this year's conference Toronto supported a 50-cent fee hike. "By supporting the fee raise this year," the report continued, "the University of Toronto has expressed confidence in NFCUS. Now is not the time to withdraw that confidence. We believe that NFCUS has a concrete program this year, and that there is every justification for the support of that program."

In speaking for his motion Krever said that NFCUS had been a "total failure." He said it was unfair since it did not have voting privileges by student population but was based on a vote per university member. He said he did not want voting to be determined by the amount of money paid to the Federation. Krever at one point referred to NFCUS policy as "namby-pamby".

Defending NFCUS, Toronto delegate Symons said that if Toronto withdrew the Federation would cease to exist. He declared that any decision to secede was very serious and that "a comparable organization would not be set up in the next 20 years."

Symons added that the main function of NFCUS was to provide a link between the Canadian universities for the purpose of exchanging ideas—and this it was doing.

The motion to be discussed in the various student bodies before the next SAC meeting reads: Whereas the SAC is convinced of the need of a national union of students for Canada, and Whereas the experience of the annual conferences in recent years has demonstrated that NFCUS is not an effective national union of students, Be It Resolved that the SAC withdraw its membership from NFCUS immediately." By a vote of 12-10 this was held over to determine student opinion.

Full Time Job

Placement Its Business

The Placement Service of the University of Toronto handles yearly the placement of about 1500 graduates of former graduates of our University. The Service in the charge of Mr. J. K. Bradford is the co-ordinating office for all the employment services on the campus

This means a tremendous volume of business is done by the office each year. Both seniors and alumni take advantage of the service and it is not uncommon to have a graduate of the class 273 applying for a job.

The most important duty of the Placement Service is to bring together the employer and the graduate or alumni, and then make sure the job seeker is fitted to the job available. The great variety of the accomplishments of those seeking jobs further complicate the work of Bradford and his staff.

Last year 3200 positions were made available to the graduates; this figure does not include the Civil Service positions that were available. Of course most of these jobs were made available to students on the other campi of Canada. However, it would be impossible to handle all the interviews and applications in the one office. Therefore the jobs available are posted on the bulletin boards around the campus where the students concerned can look over the offers and sign for an interview with a company representative.

Last year there were 100 corporations interviewing prospects for positions in their companies. This meant approximately 2700 interviews, all without one senior in the Placement Service Office. By June there were only 150 seniors who hadn't found a suitable position.

The Civil Service Commission takes the largest single group of graduates. The two most important positions it has to offer are the Junior Administrative Officers and the foreign Service Officers. These two positions amount almost to post-graduate courses in the invaluable training they offer to graduates. The Placement Service takes care of all applicants for these positions. Other Civil Service openings appear on bulletin boards around the campus.

Each year the Placement Service mails to about 1000 corporations, a folder, explaining to these prospective employer what the University has to offer in the way of graduates, their approximate time of finishing, and the date of the beginning of exeminations.

Bradford also has to keep in touch with the trends in the employment business. This year companies are coming in earlier than ever. He thinks they will be asking for fewer graduates than last year, but will be paying slightly higher wages. This means they will probaly be more selective. However in the long run Bradford feels the number of graduates placed will be very similar to last year's total.

Bradford is a graduate of the class of 3T2 from SPS. In 1950 he took his Master's Degree in Business Administration, Engineering Business, and Psychology. For 5 years he has been in charge of the Placement Service and he feels his education has provided him with a very good background for his work, as he is acquainted with the needs of large corporations.

Pep Dance Next Week In Drill Hall

It was announced at the SAC meeting last night that Blue and White Society will hold a pep dance the night before the Western game November 6th. The rally will be held in the Drill Hall at 119 St. George Street.

Another Rally will be held if the Blues make the playoffs. The next rally will be held indoors to reduce costs. Outdoor rallies cost at least $300 said Paul Lorch, Chairman of the Blue and White.

The Council hoped that Pep rallies would become a regular feature of home games. John Stalker, SAC President expressed the hope that the Society would be able to meet the trains bringing football fans to Toronto games.

Don Lowe, SPS, announced that his faculty had decided to hold a pep rally the night before the Western game whether the Blue and White Society wanted to hold one or not. "We have the spirit now" he said.

Orie Loucks, The Varsity, said that he felt the street dance was the most successful feature of the last rally. Lowe said that he felt a bite in a remark by Earl Berger, UC, that students are immature because the remark had contained a reference to "painted fences."

Vic Debate

The topic, "Resolved that this University needs more characters," will be debated at the second meeting for the 95th session of the Victoria College Debating Parliament tonight at eight p.m. in Alumni Hall.

Students Say Polite No To Miners' Aid Tagging

Political implications last night prevented the Students' Administrative Council from taking definite action on a request to hold a tag day on the campus for the aid of the strikers in Northern Ontario mining communities.

By a vote of 16 to 8, the council passed the motion, "That this council expresses its sympathy to the mine strikers, for any unmerited suffering by the strikers, but feels that the endorsation of a tag day is beyond its power.

"If we say no to the request we put ourselves on the side of the management, and if we say yes we put ourselves on the side of labor," said Jim MacLachlan, OCE. He felt the matter was beyond the scope of the SAC.

Orie Louks, The Varsity said the strike was a disaster and deserved the support that the SAC gave to the Holland Flood victims last year.

The opinion was expressed by both Joe Slogan, II Dents, and Bruce Wilson, Forestry that since the strikers had voted themselves out of work it was not the responsibility of the students on the campus to come to their aid.

Dick Davies, Pharm, felt that the tag day should not be fostered by the SAC. He agreed that it was sponsored by a group of students with worthy intentions but felt that the money would plainly be supporting the United Steelworkers of America, the union that is striking.

"We re getting nothing from the government for our student problems." Davies said. He cited the Massey report and the NFCUS lobbying. "This is plainly a matter for government aid" he said.

Eric Reed, Emmanuel, said that the strikers could not be held responsible for their actions as far as the strikes are concerned. He felt union leaders would sway them at voting time.

Horace Krever, Law, said he was ashamed of some of the opinions expressed. He said these had shown 'A horrible ignorance."

SAC Chooses Conductors And New Record Curator

Mr. Campbell Trowsdale, 3rd year Music, was appointed Curator of the Carnegie Record Connection last night.

The council also confirmed the appointments of the Assistant Conductor of the Symphony Orchestra and the University of Toronto Chorus.

Jim Coles, 3rd year Music education course, was accepted as Assistant Conductor of the Orchestra.

Mr. Coles has been a member of the University Orchestra for 4 years and played in the Royal Conservatory Orchestra for three years. For 4 years he had been conductor of the Montague string orchestra and acquired two first place certificates while acting as conductor of this group, competing in the Kiwanis Music Festival.

Mr. J. S. McIntosh was appointed assistant conductor of the Chorus. Mr. McIntosh has had a year and a half's experience as conductor of a church choir and has been both a singer and organist in his church's choir.

Two concerts are planned for both the Chorus and orchestra. The first will be held in Convocation Hall on the 10th of December. Special guests will be former conductors of the orchestra and chorus.

SADLER'S WELLS

Praise Unstinted

WENDY MICHENER

As I watched Margot Fonteyn dance I became more ond more tempted to write only: I am supposed to criticise the Sadler's Wells production. How?

For me it was an evening of unmarred aesthetic pleasure such as one does not expect to have often in a lifetime. Something to send everybody home to try out in secret fouettes or tours jetes, only to find out that the ease and the grace are the cruelest of illusions.

"The incomparable Fonteyn" critics have called her. She merits every letter of it. As well as a flawless technique and supreme linear beauty, as well as a beautiful body for expression and precise musical timing, she has that indefinable X of presence which distinguishes the great from the interesting or the attractive. No matter how grandiose the music and how simple the steps her presence matched it in intensity and scope.

She develops a role down to the minute details of interpretation, but maintains the simplicity over the whole She does not indulge in unnecessary gestures. But as the song says "every little movement has a meaning all its own." Her head movements in particular are apt. For example in her last dance of the third act, the finger variation, she simplified the usual hand movements with a porcilain grace. We are lucky to be alive in an age when we can see such a distinguished dancer.

No dancer alone can make a good performance. Like a jewel in a poor setting her brillance would be obscured. The Sadler's Wells Company has not only the beautiful setting in well-designed costumes, suitably romantic and impressive scenery and a beautifully precise, uniform chorus but also several other jewels of unusual brilliance. Unfortunately it is impossible to do justice to the many excellent performances of the numerous characters. Frederick Ashton made a most detestable wicked fairy in a black gown with a train and with long bony clutching hands. Whenever she appeared, Svetlana Beriosova as the Lilac Fairy inspired awe by her dignity.

Outstanding in the variation of the final act were the Blue Birds and Puss in Boots and the white cat.

Brian Shaw dancing the male part of the Blue Bird variation stole the show even from Michael Somes. He really did seem to fly around the state so great is his 'ballon'. Margaret Dale and Antony Manning were completely charming. Here was the 'pas de chat' in its literal connotation executed with feline agility. The only variation which jarred was the three Ivans. It seemed out of context.

It really was amazing to see how so many people and such huge sets could be juggled around the stage without some catastrophe. Amazing though it may be to see, etc., it is questionable whether the Sleeping Beauty becomes a better ballet in four acts than it could be in the condensed version. I'm inclined to think not. The dances of the peasants and the courtiers and the magnificence of the several scenes are all very pleasant, but the long stretches of obscure mime required to tell the story exactly do not add anything to its general significance.

Les Carabins Ici Dec 3-6

Carabin Weekend application forms are now available in the SAC office. This annual exchange weekend, to be held in Toronto on December 3rd to the 6th, will include seminar groups, discussions, a banquet in the Great Hall of Hart House, and parties.

Because of the large number of applications received in former years for the forty positions in the Toronto host group, applications will be restricted to students in graduating and junior years.

FOUR-POWER COMEDY

Amorous Brass Hats

THE LOVE OF FOUR COLONELS

The Love of Four Colonels is a comedy, fantasy, satire, and skit. It glides swiftly from one to another and herein lies part of its charm and most of its weakness. It begins on a satiric note with four colonels, a Russian, American, Frenchman, and Englishman, in charge of an occupied zone, having a number of fierce and very funny arguments over trivialities, arriving at no conclusions, and illustrating perfectly the talk-ridden stalemate of the world. Fantasy then arrives with Rex Harrison as the Bad Fairy, a casual good-humoured rake. He leads them after much back-chat and indignation to a neighboring castle where they are introduced in a beautiful and child-like scene to the Sleeping Beauty.

Fantasy vanishes and the skit element enters, or rather a mixture of fantasy and skit, which doesn't quite succeed as either. The four colonels each endeavor to win over or seduce (according to their characters) the Sleeping Beauty who wakens for a short period as the ideal woman of each man in whatever period he desires. They in turn become the person they would wish to be or the person they really are according to the author's whim.

Now in these scenes which take up the latter half of the play something goes wrong, the comedy loses its color. Part of the trouble is in the writing which is a combination of gags and fantasy that do not mix well; the scenes do not build as a skit must towards a sharp climax and the humor of some of those scenes depends, as it shouldn't on an acquaintance with the theatre of Moliere and Chekhov. In other words, the focus and point of view of the humor keep varying from fantasy, to satire, to gag lines, to take-offs on theatrical conventions, all of which weakens the comedy considerably. However, there is one comic character, the Bad Fairy, who, recurring in each scene, does create a comic point of view, but not sufficiently. Rex Harrison as the Bad Fairy is miscast. He cannot play character parts. He hasn't the range. Even as the Bad Fairy he was sorely disappointing because he could not point up a humorous line with a significant and comic gesture. The body is of equal importance on the stage as the voice.

Lilli Palmer played the Sleeping Beauty and was delightful. For each of the four characters she played she created a number of stylized gestures, a way of moving, a voice, that fitted perfectly into the tongue-in-cheek fantasy of the scene. Here was crystallized precision acting at its best.

The four colonels played by Stefan Schanbel, Robert Coote, Edward Andrews and Robert Claborne were excellent. Schnabel played the Russian with all the grandeur of a man with the firm and absolute rock of dialectical materialistic reality behind him. Coote was a nice mixture of English diffidence and sudden English wrath before that which is unseemly. Andrews as the American was a hearty, romantic mess of psychoanalytic lore and progressional platitudes.

Claborne had the French realism but lacked some of the typical French suavity. The four of them working beautifully in conjunction worked up to some wonderful verbal battles in the first half and in the latter half made the happenings in the castle quite believable by their own childish acceptance of, and delight in, the happenings that took place there.

This is a play with much that is amusing but which fails as a complete work of art because the central idea becomes in some way confused and side-tracked, and which fails as a consistently amusing comedy because Rex Harrison is slightly out of his depth.

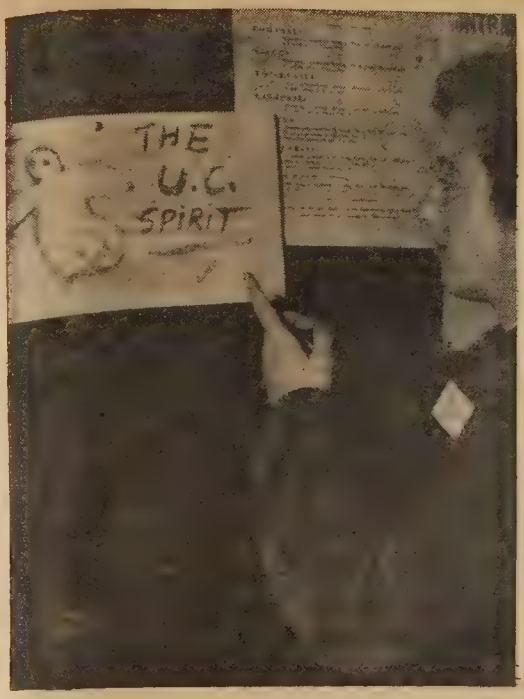
Ricky Arnold

Cesare Siepi

Cesare Siepi, basso opened the concert series of the Women's musical club on Monday in Eaton Auditorium. It was a good beginning.

It is not often that one hears a voice so completely of bass quality as Mr. Siepi's. Being a rich voice and a heavy one it is mere in its own element in powerful than in lyric songs. This factor is largely the reason why some numbers proved less effective than others, as the basso never failed to catch in spirit the feeling of a piece, and as he has a very interesting voice to work with.

Nervousness was probably the reason for a somewhat ragged start. The pitch was not quite true and the voice production not always controlled. In the second group, however, he displayed more justly his capabilities. In Richard Strauss's Traum durch die Dammerung he maintained the visionary mood. The tone was rounded on the top of the note without falling into the pitfall of hollow growing in the lower register.



Ella Giammai m'ame from Verdi's Don Carlo was another really piece such as this gives scope for commandable performance. A versatile bass voice within its own character. Controlled yet seemingly spontaneous emotion, one of the requirements of theatre, presents no difficulty for Siepi. This is a distinct advantage which singers who have profited from their experience in an opera have over the strictly concert singers. Action and emotion to equal that of the song made Cesare Siepi's performance satisfying visibly as well as aurally. It was a wondrous thing to see how that composed face could be transported beyond recognition by rage, sorrow, sardonic humor and joy. He carried the audience by his own interest and created on the bare platform a whole world of objects for a frame of reference.

In the second half, Ravel's songs from Don Quichotte la Dulcinee, especially the Chanson a boire, the cryptic Weather Forecast by Daniel Wolf and Rossini's la Calunnia from Il Barbiere de Sivigila, were impressive. But in his treatment of Debussy's Romance and the two Old English folk songs, he resembled the well-meaning mother bear who undertook to bring up a baby sparrow. In spite of her tender care she nearly killed the delicate creature.

Leo Taubmann as accompanist was uneven in support but Cesare Siepi, the showman, ended with his voice still as consistently powerful and agreeable in four encores to the shouts of bravos from the audience.

PHE Has New Director As Dr. Ebbs Appointed

The appointment of Dr. J. Harry Ebbs as director of the School of Physical and Health Education was announced last night by Dr. Sidney Smith, President of the University of Toronto. He succeeds the late Dr. H. A. Cates.

The School of Physical and Health Education was started in 1950. Warren Stevens, the Athletic Director of Hart House, was responsible for the establishment of the School as the first degree School in Canada in Physical and Health Education. Now the Universities of McGill, Queen's, Western, University of British Columbia, and Alberta offer degrees in Physical and Health Education.

Dr. Ebbs will remain as staff physician at the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto, where he will continue his present appointments and consulting practice. He will also carry on his work as assistant professor of pediatrics at the University.

The first director of the School was Dr. Stanley Ryerson in 1950. He was also Assistant Dean of Medicine. He was followed by Dr. H. A. Cates, who was Professor of Anatomy in the Faculty of Medicine.

Dr. Ebbs was born in England and came to Canada with his parents at the age of six. He studied at Peterboro Collegiate Institute and the University of Toronto where he won his M.D. degree in 1931. Then followed two years' internship at the Hospotal for Sick Children, a year as resident physician at Babies' Hospital in New York, and four years on the staff of the Children's Hospital in Birmingham. While in England, he also did post-graduate work at the University of Birmingham and was awarded the M.D. degree by that institution in 1938. The following year he joined the University of Toronto as a clinical teacher.

A member of the Royal College of Physicians of England, and a fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Canada, Dr. Ebbs has carried on extensive research in nutrition problems of women during pregnancy.

One of his responsibilities at the Hospital for Sick Children is organizing and conducting study projects for post-graduate students.

Frank Anderson is the present Canadian Chess Cahmpion.

Will Show India View

Two of the students who visited India this summer, Elizabeth Scroggie (IV UC) and Dr. John Hastings (Grad Studies) will discuss "Student Views of Modern India" at the second meeting of the Modern History Club today. The discussion will be illustrated with coloured slides and movies, and will be held at Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's.

Harry Truman Soloist Says Singing Daughter

"He is not an accompanist, he is a soloist," quipped Miss Margaret Truman at a press conference yesterday, to a question about her father's accompanying her on the piano.

Miss Truman is appearing this evening in Massey Hall in a program of songs as part of her tour through Canada and the States.

In her opinion the difference between the American and Canadian audiences is neglible. She finds them equally receptive. Also equal are Canadian and American men — "equally charming," she said. However, she has confessed to no romance.

Miss Truman likes to be on her own. She has no desire to appear with her father on television either. She thinks her father is very good on television, but is satisfied to watch him as they are in two different fields.

Asked if she read her reviews, scrapbook of them for ten years, but that she never looked at them until after the tour was completed.

Her plans for the future include concerts until December, then regular TV work with the National Broadcasting Company with whom she has a network contract. Unlike Miss Helen Traubel she does not aspire to sing in night clubs, but is very fond of the Met.

Her dramatic training dates from George Washington University where she was a member of the Pi Beta Phi fraternity.

She learned singing from several masters, including Miss Vera McIntyre, who somes from Toronto.

SAC At A Glance

—Seen knitting at a Students' Administrative Council meeting last night was Miss Elizabeth Scroggie, attractive, well-known Carabin Student.

— The meeting was chaired by the President, Mr. John Stalker, who, during the discussion on Northern Ontario miners, became slightly confused.

— Saw the regular chairman, Mr Gordon Gwynne Timothy, enter later in the evening in dinner clothes.

— Heard President Stalker ask the Medical and Engineering representatives to draw the attention of their respective faculties to several missing brass plaques and a wandering awning.

— Heard Bill Chalmers of the "Student Committe for Aid to Mining Communities" ask for permission of his group to tag on the Campus.

— The motion caused heated discussion and several motions from various members present. Mr. Berger, III UC, had a heyday with motions.

— Decided that SAC did not have the power to grant this group permission to tag and voted to go on record as extending their sympathies to the strikers for any unmerited suffering they may have been occasioned by the strike.

— Heard Don Lowe, Engineering Rep. ask "What happened?" after this discussion and decision.

— Appointed Bill Deekes, III Engineering, as SAC representative to the University Christian Mission which will be held in Toronto during the 54-55 session.

— Heard Horace Kreever, School of Law, report that sale to date on the handbooks had been $410.75 and that there are abut 350 handbooks still unsold.

— Heard report of the finance committee and accepted the decision that Torontoensis sell at $5.00 this year.

— Expressed appreciation to Bill Baldwin, I theology, Wycliffe, for his work on the Red Feather Campaign. Appreciation was also extended to the taggers.

— Introduced Jim MacLachlin, OCE.

—Heard plans for the discussion weekend to be held at Cornell from November 12-15. Several other Canadian and American university groups will be in attendance.

—Heard plans for the Discussion weekend to be held in Toronto from November 20-22. Groups from McGill, Skidmore and Cornell will participate in a series of discussions on the topic "The Problems of World Leadership."

Six No Brahms

The Record Room

"Six No Trump," "Doubled!" used to be the cry in what is now the Hart House Record Room. Now as you open the door you are greeted by strains of Brahms or Beethoven, and choked by the smell of leather and stale tobacco.

In 1947 the Hart House Music committee wanted to have a record player and collection in the House, so they applied for the Carnegie collection. Their request was refused since, in Hart House, women would not be able to listen to the records. The committee then realized they would have to build up their own collection.

At this time, the House committee was tired of the filthy state of the card room and they turned over the room for the use of the Music Committee. The committee then arranged for Mr. A. K. Turner, a graduate electrical engineer, to build the amplifier and the loudspeaker.

The Hart House Record room was officially opened on April 7th 1948. It contained a good Turntable made by the Micro-engineering company, a high fidelity amplifier, and a speaker cabinet containing two loudspeakers. The cabinet was made by Mr. Charles Haley of the University carpentry shop, who did much of the woodwork in the Great Hall, Music Room, and Library.

Records were bought using special funds set aside by the Music committee, and a part of the proceeds of the 1947 All Varsity Fall dance, donated by the House Committee. The number of records has since greatly increased, and many of the original collection have been replaced. Now the collection contains a complete standard repertoire of symphonic, operatic, and chamber music.

The Record room is run by the Music committee, which is one of the five major Hart House committees. The committee sets aside money for the purchase of new records, and for the replacement of old 78 rpm sets. It also pays a curator to look after the filing of the records.

Douglas Penny IV Vic, is the curator this year. He gives instructions every Thursday at 5:15 p.m. on the use of the player and the room. Anyone who has received the instructions may use the player after signing for the key at the Hall Porter's desk.

One question is very often raised about the record room. Why are there no jazz, or popular records? This has been discussed in many Music committees and several reasons have been given.

The secretary of the Music committee, Jim Hall IV Meds, said that committee members felt that jazz and the classics were so completely different, that a person could appreciate one or the other but not both. He said if both types were available, many people would be driven away from the room from fear that they would only hear music they disliked. He also pointed out that at present the room was in use from early in the morning till late at night.

So if you are interested in music, walk through the door into the haze of the record room, sit down and relax. The programs, some arranged by the committee, others by private individuals, are many and varied. Anyway, they all make for pleasant listening.

OCE Forum On Teaching

A teaching forum is to be held tomorrow at three p.m., in room 234 of OCE. Three papers covering topics in the field of education will be presented under the following topics: "What is the aim of Ontario Education?" by Pauline McDonaugh; "Teaching is not a profession" by James McLaughlin; and "The Humanities are scorned Ontario education" by Timothy Roebuck.

Salt of the Earth

Flying Pies

If the Red and Black live up to old tradition today at 5:00 p.m., the archway in the east wing of Trinity College will again be the watery, greasy scene of the Trinity College annual Cake Fight.

Already, the freshmen (better known as 'worms' around Trinity) have held both formal and informal meetings to devise ways and means to get the cake through the archway which will be heavily guarded by the sophomores; and the sophomores, too, have had informal gatherings to decide how they will crush the efforts of the worms.

The Cake Fight was first inaugurated about twenty-five years ago when the freshies at Saint Hilda's made a cake for the worms to consume at the Athletic Dinner. During the repast, the sophomores made a valiant effort to gain possession of the cake, but the worms formed a flying wedge, and fought their way out of the hall taking the cake with them, well wrapped up in one of the worm's gowns. For the next few years the fight was commemorated on the rugby field. Little information is available concerning the fights out in the open air, but the recent publication, "Trinity 1852-1952," passes the following comment concerning one of the fights. " . . . Several spectators at a cake fight on the playing field were kidnapped, taken to . . . residences and painted with shoe blackening."

In more recent years, the fight has been staged underneath Henderson Tower. 1950 was an exception, however, and the source quoted above has this to say about it. " . . . Combatants so encumbered the annual struggle with semi-lethal weapons — duck's eggs, dead skunks, and stink bombs, which according to large but erroneous streamers in the Toronto Star dyed freshmen orange — that in 1950 the fight was replaced by a muddy but comparatively innocuous pastime named Murderball."

Nevertheless, in the past two years the Cake Fight has resumed its true former style with the worms losing on both occasions. What may happen this year is one again in the laps of the gods.

Capital Punishment — Is It Outmoded

These Say Yes

Clear Words

The unstudied belief of men is that criminal activity must be punished and furthermore that the punishment be in the nature of retribution, i.e., strictly proportionel in intensity to the crime committed. Kant affirmed that retribution is itself justice and no other consideration is relevant. The Biblical "eye for an eye" criteria manifests the same reasoning and it logically follows that if one man willfully or wrongfully kills another he shall himself deserve death. The theory of retributive punishment seems to presume an intuitive necessity that evil be repaid in kind and that the universe be ordered on a basis of rewards and corresponding sanctions. If we engage in a little honest self-inspection it will be seen that this feeling of fitness is absolute and unconditional only in the case of our neighbours and that then it is really only disguised vengeance. Our demand for justice mirrors an inarticulate demand for revenge and is as equally irrational, although more vicious, as the act of kicking the unoffending chair on which we have stubbed a toe.

Punishment itself is evil because it inflicts pain and can only be justified, on a balancing of values, if it injures to some greater good. It must therefore be utilitarian in nature and not and end in itself. It serves a useful purpose only if it acts by way of a deterrent and (or) reformation and on no other grounds can it be justified in reason. The worth of the death penalty stands or falls therefore on its value or futility as a deterrent as compared with other modes of punishment (e.g. incarceration). To be "eligible" for the death penalty one must commit some heinous offense, e.g., murder. People faced with the laternative of committing murder of not, (thus presupposing rational people) fall into three general classes:

a) those who are so morally constituted as to be incapable of committing the crime under any circumstances.

b) those who committ the crime only under pressure of external circumstances which so condition the act as to render them incapable of fully appreciating or caring about the consequences (e.g., the doctor who commits euthanasia, the solid citizen who kills his vicious blackmailer, the starving unemployed who in desperation kills for food, the hunted fugitive who kills to avoid capture, lawful or not).

c) those who commit the crime in cold blood, in the course of the business of crime, knowing full well the consequences, but treating them as any other hazard of business by adopting protective measures.

In neither of the last two cases does the death penalty act as an effective deterrent (or at least as a more effective deterrent) and I believe these cases are exhaustive. Functionally, therefore, I see little or no value in the death penalty and functionally is the only rational way of assessing it.

Ethics

The basic problems of capital punishment are pretty much the same as they have always been. There are two major aspects of the problem: The ethical and the practical. That it is unethical for society to take a man's life, however heinous his crime, is perhaps a weak point at a time when nations contemplate dence shows that in England, dur- nor decreased substantially. There mutual extinction with relative equanimity. In many ways, capital punishment is perhaps less harsh or less cruel than life-long imprisonment, which effectively eliminates a person from society but keeps him alive. To me the practical aspect, namely the question of an irretrievable error of justice, is the more important. The recent case of Christie, the English sex murderer, showed the danger of execution on dubious evidence. It is at least doubtful whether a man previously executed for the murder of his wife and child was not wrongly convicted of a crime which was indeed committed by Christie. Statistical evidence shows that in England, during the period when capital punishment was suspended, though not abolished, criminality in the offences punishable by the death penalty neither increased

Prof. W. Friedmann,
School of Law.

Brave New . . .

Yes. The example of several prominent countries in the world shows that it can be abandoned with no ill effects. Ethically speaking, I feel that since no man can give life to another, no man has the right to condemn another to death. War, self-defence, and other such emergencies are in a different category, of course. Our modern aim should be to promote a society and a way of thinking in which crime and punishment can both cease to exist even as concepts.

Semantics

In the absence of a Judge who might direct me to answer "Yes" or "No" (and no nonsense), I can say that in my opinion your question makes neither good sense nor good English.

Without raising the issue whether "outmoded" is or is not outlawed in remedial English, your question may possibly mean "Is capital punishment today out of style of out of favour?" Even so, I doubt whether an intelligible answer is possible. Was it ever "inmoded"? And with whom? To a person on the receiving end, it was always not merely "outmoded" but "out of this world." Do you mean "outmoded" to bystanders at the spectacle? To readers of the more lurid news accounts? To the husband of a murdered bride?

If you mean to ask whether I believe capital punishment is today no longer justifiable, you immediately suggest that it was once justiviable. As a lawyer, I do not like people other than lawyers asking two-pronged questions. If you mean, was it ever justifiable, you have not said so, and in any event, "ever" covers a great deal of time, people, and territory. If you mean, do people today believe in it as a punishment for murderers, the answer is that a great many do or we would not hang murderers. If you want to know whether a great many people do not like the idea of capital punishment, the answer is equally obvious. Your would not have asked the question you did if there were not such people.

If, by any chance, you meant to ask what I thought of capital punishment as a method of dealing with persons found guilty of murder, I can say quite simply, "Not much"—which, after all, is just as unintelligible and just as bad English as the original question.

Cecil A. Wright,
Dean, School of Law.

FORUM

A La Mode

No! This is the only possible conclusion that one can state when asked this specific question. The word outmoded means "not in current style," "out of fashion," perhaps "not in use" or "not in existence." Therefore, as capital punishment is still a form of penalty for the transgression of certain laws in this country, it cannot be classified as outmoded.

If the problem was as follows: "Do you think capital punishment should be abolished in Canada," as I think was the intent of the Forum Editor, then a different question is in evidence.

To this I would say no. The basic purpose of this penalty is to act as a deterrent. True, for the man who has been convicted at the bar, it has not had this effect, but how many have been deterred from committing certain acts, in the realization that death is the penalty? The answer to this may be hundreds. If this is so, why abolish capital punishment! If this is not so, then the onus is on the affirmative supporters to prove their case.

R.A.F. Montgomery,
III Law.

No Purpose

In my personal opinion capital punishment serves little useful purpose. It does not restore the victim to life and I doubt if the death of the guilty party is very much satisfaction to the friends or relatives of the victim. Human life is the most sacred thing we know; I fail to see any ethical justification in the old law "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." Two wrongs do not make a right. From a practical point of view I doui very much the deterrent value since the great bulk of murders tend to be crimes of passion or of violence. Whether or not society is yet ready to accept this point of view is another matter, but I believe the day will come when we will endeavour to find other answers to this very controversial question.

Joseph McCulley.
Warden of Hart House.

These Say No

In Mode

It is always easy to condemn something old as being outmoded. But I am not sure that capital punishment belongs in the outmoded category.

However much professional radicals and humanistic sociologists want to reiterate to the contrary, hanging does act as a deterrent when other felonies are being committed. When a professional crook commits robbery, the presence of the hanging penalty does deter the man from adding murder to the robbery. Abolishing the death penalty would remove this fortunate truth. In fact when hanging was abolished several years back in Great Britain, it had to be re-established when a rash of violent crime involving murder broke out.

Perhaps the MacNaughton Rules covering the legal definition of insanity could be amended. Amendments, however, should not be made merely because psychiatry has advanced since the 1840's. The rules are the legal, not the medical, definition, and are only to be amended if our legal experience has led us to believe they are inadequate.

Alex Langford,
IV History.

Again, Fees!

Certainly not. Capital punishment is the only suitable method of dealing with those soulless wretches who refuse to pay their lawyers' bills.

G. L. Morris,
II Law.

No Pity?

I am in favour of capital punishment because of its deterrent effects on prospective criminals. I cannot see how a term of imprisonment can possibly compare with the death sentence in keeping such crimes as murder under control.

The main argument used against capital punishment is the one of humanitarianism. The safety which the threat of capital punishment gives to the law-abiding members of society far outweighs, in my opinion, any feelings of sympathy felt for the criminal. There is, of course, always the possiblity of sentencing an innocent man, which is irremediable in the case of capital punishment. The possibility of such an error, however, weighs little in the balance against the safety of society. I consider the solution to this question to be in the balancing of benefits and harms which result from it. Because of this I can come to no other conclusion than of the benefit of capital punishment.

G. R. Gough,
IV Vic.

Practical?

My impression is that in the absence of the innovation the old practise can hardly be termed "outmoded". The chief consideration here seems to be one of alternatives to the death penalty. Capital punishment may, given the climate of modern thought, be outmoded indeed, but outmoded by what? That is the practical and perplexing question. Yes, we feel it's immoral and barbarous, but what choice have we? Though capital punishment may be outmoded in the minds of thinking people, crime is certainly not outmoded in the minds and acts of criminals. According to the F.B.I. there are capital crimes committed every five seconds in the U.S.

Perhaps modern methods of penology coupled with psychiatric treatment will in time outmode capital punishment. I sin cerely hope it will, but until such time as a practical substitute is devised, I feel that capital punishment is, unfortunately, far from outmoded.

Lou Tepper,
II Law.

Feminine

No, but I would hate to pull the switch.

Diana Hillier,
IV Vic.

Firm Stand

I do not think capital punishment is outmoded and I am in favour of public executions and the re-institution of drawing and quartering.

Tommy Daly,
III UC.

Dissension

Of course capital punishment is outmoded — in the sense that there is widespread general agreement that the vengeance element is uncivilized and the deterrent effect is highly overrated. But the sad fact is that agreement is neither widespread nor general on the matter of substitutes. That some offenders ly solves a difficult and very could doubtless profit from psychiatric treatment and brain-washing is perhaps acceptable in the relatively clearly defined crime of murder, but that hardly solves a difficult and brain-washing is perhaps acceptable in the relatively clearly defined crime of murder, but that hardly solves a difficult and very real social problem.

J. B. Milner,
School of Law.

Tradition

I do not agree with the principle of capital punishment. There are many reasons for this unconditional stand. Here are four. They may be trite, but that doesn't invalidate them. 1) no man or group of men (e.g., a judge and jury) has the right to take another's life, even though the accused has committed a capital offence. Two wrongs don't make a right, and what, after all, constitutes a capital offence but the force of tradition based on ignorance of human nature. A more modern working principle is a belief in the dignity and worth of the individual. 2) Murderers, for example, are not beyond redemption: why destroy a man who has a great potential contribution for mankind? A penalty is necessary for a crime against humanity. But after that should come rehabilitation and teaching. 3) To the argument that capital punishment deters men from crime it might be wise to add the consideration that a capital offence is usually committed when the criminal is in a state of mind which blinds him to the possible repercussions of his action. One needs only to look at the record in Britain to see how the "deterent" worked. 4) Man is the product of h environment to a very large extent, and therefore a murderer should not shoulder all the blame for his offence.

Allan Millard,
II UC.

Speaking Of Sport

By JIM PROUDFOOT

It has come to our attention that there is another student publication in Toronto besides The Varsity. The other campus daily is The Ryersonian, a rather attractive little four-page effort published four times a week by the students of the Ryerson Institute of Technology, where students learn how to do things, instead of how to think and talk about them.

Of course, we knew that such a journal existed but its only claim to a Varsity student's interest so far has been the odd snazzy cheesecake layout (one department where they leave The Varsity miles behind). However, last Thursday's issue contained an article by the Ryersonian sports editor, a Mr. Gerry Hall, who commits the cardinal sin of a sports-writer — seeking to excuse and justify his team's loss. Even people who have never seen the inside of a school of journalism know that nobody's interested in half-hearted excuses.

The case in point is Mr. Hall's treatise exposing the reasons why Varsity's intermediate team was able to shade the Ryerson Rams by a close 57-0 score. What really irks any one who follows college sports to any extent is the following: "Moreover, with colleges offering scholarships and other inducements to prospective football stars, the quality of the raw material is bound to be higher in university camps than at Ryerson. Thus we have Harry Wilson, the Riverdale grid star, who received more ink than any other Toronto player last year, in there pitching for the Baby Blues."

Now there's the kind of statement you don't make and then just leave it at that. It's the kind of statement that one would like to hear more about. Does it imply that we're paying Harry Wilson to play for the intermediate team? Does it mean that if the market on high school players were wide open Ryerson would have an intercollegiate calibre football club?

Guess again. All it means is that Mr. Hall didn't have his thinking cap on at the time he was writing. Otherwise he would have given Varsity credit for more business sense than that. We'd be hardly likely to pay an athlete to play for a team that doesn't draw more than a handful of fans for its games—and even those few free of admission. And if Harry Wilson were playing football for anything more than the game's sake, he'd hardly have come to Varsity where he has to battle at least four top candidates for the job. And if we had been shopping for a quarterback last year, wouldn't we have hired Gerry Doucette, the high school all-star? For that matter, we'd be scarcely likely to "offer scholarships" when we're getting by without doing so.

Varsity teams rather enjoy a workout like that 57-0 schemozzle and they'd be definitely injured by Mr. Hall's remarks. After all, everybody up here felt we were giving the Rams a break by entertaining them at Varsity Stadium. They get little enough chance to play anywhere at all. And when it became a runaway, coach John McManus sent in his subs but even that didn't make any difference.

Mr. Hall has a point, though. He wonders what chance Ryerson, with an enrollment of 1,520 students has playing a school whose enrollment surpasses 10,000. He's right, of course. But they knew what they were getting into when they scheduled the game. So why the grumble?

Last Friday, the Rams scuttled University college of the interfaculty league 35-2. Give the Redmen the three touchdowns they should have had and you have the score only 35-18. Then remember that U.C. isn't one of the stronger teams in the intramural circuit. There's your answer—Ryerson should try the interfaculty league. There they'd find competition at their own level.

And then Mr. Hall could rationalize and speculate and weep to his heart's content without looking ridiculous.

Skule Are Best On Campus Beat UC For Third Straight

By MOISHE REITER

U.C. Redmen rebounded from last week's defeat at the hands of Vic to give Skule their tough game of the season but the steady Skulemen slithered to a squeaky 5-0 victory in Interfaculty football yesterday.

Striking in the first three minutes the Engineers gained possession on their own 40 and strode the full distance to the Red goal on brilliant quartebacking by diminutive Don Hart. A handoff to Crandall was good for the final 6 yards and the Skule major.

This fast move seemed to omen a landslide for the Engineers and a terrible defeat for the Arts types. But the Redmen, the shame of the Vic debacle still heavy on their hearts, warmed to the game and from there on in it was a case of powerful Skule squad stoutly staving off an inspired and desperate UC bunch.

The Redmen turned up a real find in Jerry Hugo who came in from the half-line to work at quarter when quarter John Whyte pass as we've seen in the back campus activity and when it came to carrying the ball proved himself one of the best in the league. The contest boiled down to a duel between Don Hart and Hugo with both men preforming valiantly. It as a stand-off. The edge for Skule was their early touchdown, but after that it was all even.

Individual star of the game along with Hugo was Hart, who would seem to be better fitted for higher company. The former Riverside star picked at the stiff Arts line, holding the burly Skule of perfect passes, line smashes and running plays that sent Skule for repeated long gains, but the UC's came around in time to stop any

Saints In First Spot Thunder Over Trinity

Intermural football action on the back campus yesterday afternoon saw St. Mike's take sole possession of top place in the second division as they thundered over Trinity 23-5.

St. Mike's took a lead early in the contest when Danny Driscol intercepted a Trinity pass attempted on the first play of the game and raced goalward. The touchdown was called back when Danny was ruled out just short of the goal line, but Russell made sure of the score as he raced around the right end for the T.D. on the next play. The convert was plunged across center by Jerry Fusco. Trinity, although held in check for most of the half, broke loose for their touchdown in the second quarter when quarter John Whyte hit Dave Smith with a fine pass at center field and Dave eluded three tacklers as he ran 45 yards for the major. The convert was blocked by the St. Mike's line.

In the second half St. Mike's took complette control as they carried for three touchdowns. Fusco recovered a Trinity fumble at center field and St. Mike's never looked back until Babirad snagged a Russel pass in the end zone for the T.D. The convert attempted was no good. Danny Driscol stepped in to intercept another Trinity pass and evaded tacklers for a touchdown early in the 4th quarter. Kosterski carried for this as well as the convert for St. Mike's final score Jim King. Bill Saunderson, Jim Shoemaker, and Don Drynan played well in a losing cause but were unable to stop the hard running of such men as Bill Priestner, Frank Cleary and Phil. Wood.

Baz, the Blues' Doorman

The ball carriers of the other four teams in the Intercollegiate Football League have found from brutal experience that the right side of the Varsity Blues' wingline is like a one-way door — it swings out smoothly enough but it never opens in. This is a very convenient arrangement for the Blues' runners as they usually find their way clear for gains but the opposition just keeps butting its collective head on a "sesame" that will not open.

One of the "hinges" on this door is Baz Mackie who himself has trouble passing through doorwars unless he turns sideways. This broad specimen stands 5' 11", weighs in at 198 and spends his spare time away from the Blues in second year Phys. Eds.

Coming out of Weston Collegiate two years back Mackie left behind him a rather bright athletic record having flashed in just about every sport open to him. Weston's football teams, with Mackie at the fore swept through to their league finals for three years running and then lost. Baz explains the losses as being all a matter of timing — Weston just happened to get into the finals at the same time that the great East York Goliaths did.

Baz still holds his High School record for the Shot Put, in which he starred, but he has shown no interest in field events since he's come to Varsity, preferring to concentrate on football.

In his second year at the U of T Baz Mackie is also in his second season with the Varsity Blues. This is a most uncommon thing as most High School players require at least a year of work with the Intermediates to ready them for the big jump to Senior Intercollegiate. Mackie needed no such preparation but moved right into Blue company and grabbed up a first string spot at right guard. This almost makes him a case for Ripley for not only was he a freshman but the line had never been Baz's specialty. But he made himself felt along the Big Blue line and earned his name on a regular slot in it.

No one-way specialist Baz goes at linebacker on defence. Also he has proved himself rather a rugged lad by playing nearly the full 60 minutes, when the Blues were stuck with only one reserve. That loss to Western, feels Baz, was real tough luck, but "We'll take 'em easily down here. We've improved that much." Thus saith right guard Baz Mackie.

Appoint Kennedy To Coach Hockey

When Bill Wade, coach of Varsity's hockey Blues for the last two season, decided to call it quits last spring, a bit of a problem was created for the Athletic Association. For a while, it looked as though they might persuade Wade's predecessor, Wally Halder, to return to the job but Halder, like Wade, decided his business would not permit him to take over. Then, at Tuesday night's Athletic Directorate meeting, it was discovered that a logical and suitable candidate was to be found right in their own backyard in the person of Jack Kennedy, coach of the hockey Seconds the last two years.

In announcing Kennedy's appointment yesterday, U of T athletic director Warren Stevens revealed that Joe Primeau, former Maple Leafs this spring. He has lectured on hockey to the Physical practices from time to time and at home games. Primeau, who led teams to Memorial Cup, Allan Cup and Stanley Cup victories, is considered one of the leading hockey authorities in Toronto but retired from the game when he left the Maple Leaf this spring. He has lectured on hockey to the Physical Education course here for the last ten years.

Kennedy is a P.H.E. graduate of Varsity and now a member of the staff. He has coached the intermediate hockey team for the last two years. At present, he is assistant to football coach Bob Masterson. Until the football season is over, the team will be coached by Harry Griffiths, manager of Varsity Arena and a former amateur hockey star, along with Jack Wheldrake, captain of last year's team, who is now a student at Osgoode Hall.

Mr. Stevens also announced that there would be an intermediate team again this season. It will not operate in a league but will play a full schedule of exhibition games.

First practice for the senior squad is next Wednesday at 5:30 in Varsity Arena, slightly more than three weeks before the opening game, which is slated for Nov. 27 here against the champion Montreal Carabins.

The Varsity squad has been hard hit by graduation, and academic ineligibility. Only Red Stephen will be left of the high-scoring first line of Stephen, Jack Wheldrake and Johnny Adams. John Addison, Jim Machin and Gerry Fitzhenry will be missing from the defence brigade. Those returning include goalie Jack Ross and forwards Ken Lawson, Dave Kent, Bob Primeau, Ernie Bodnar, Jim Wiles and Dan Tevey.

PHE Wins Again

Meds came close but just missed their chance to beat PHE eonds in the daily noon-hour softball battle yesterday, which finished 4-3 for the physedders.

Meds racked up a three point lead in the opening inning against PHE's no-score debut. Sally Searles slammed one sending team-mate Norman to home plate and sliding across herself. Kerr whacked one past the outfield later in the inning to reach home for the third tally. PHE retaliated with a short but uneventful showing. Pat Craig reached third while Ann Kieth hit second. Marg Krby and Ann Newman failed to tally on their hits to end the opener 3-0 for the Meds gals.

Three hit and three failed to chalk up a single for Meds in the second. It was short but not a sweet showing. PHE teamed up to match the Med's three point lead on hits from Gwen Miller, Jackie Cohoon and Grace Palunia.

It was up to PHE to break the tie and they did it on a homer off the bat of Ann Kieth to end the meet 4-3 for PHE.

All Intermediate football fans are hereby notified that the game scheduled for this evening at Ryerson I. T. will be played on Friday at 2:30 in Varsity Stadium—admission gratis.

Interfaculty

In the Intramural soccer action yesterday, Ian McHaffie scored a goal in the first half that gave Trinity A a 1-0 shutout over Sr. SPS. In the second half the two goalies held the opposition scoreless.

UC I scored a convincing win over Med I to the tune of 11-2. Nobber Watson was the big scorer for UC with five goals while Jack Rogers scored two. Al Eagleson, Dan Carroll, Bob Larnson and Red Stephen all scored one. John Kilty and Bill Urquart each scored for Med I.

Jr. Vic won two of three from Jr. SPS B's, 15-4, 15-8 and 15-17. Sr. Vic defaulted their game with Meds III.

Forestry beat Pharmecy 3-1 in soccer thanks to goals by Bob Briggs and Dick DeJong.

Nationalize Gas Pipline To Prevent US Control Salsberg Tells Students

Nationalization of Canada's natural gas pipeline was called for by J. B. Salsberg, MPP for St. Andrew's riding, in a meeting yesterday sponsored by the campus LPP club. He proposed "that the natural gas be handled as a public owned utility to be sold at cost."

He said that it is everyone's problem, stating "The natural gas issue is a national issue to all of us, regardless of politics, race or religion." He deplored the plan which would give control to the US because the gas reaching us via the States would be liable to Presidential suspension.

Salsberg explained how the action of Consumers Gas Co., which proposed to pipe gas in from the States to the Toronto area, would make Canadian action impossible because of the large area of users who would be blocked off. He said, "Consumers are consciously allowing themselves to be used as a torpedo to explode the Canadian interests."

"No government, either at Ottawa or Toronto has given necessary leadership that will guarantee the building of a Canadian pipeline," said Salsberg. He also said, in outlining the benefits of his plan, that natural gas of our own, "would enable us to stop purchasing millions of dollars of US coal, for which we need US dollars."

He called on the governments concerned "to refuse licenses or authorities for any other scheme that would prevent an all-Canadian pipeline." He further accused the government of allowing too much exploitation of Canadian resources by American industrial interests. In demonstration, he said, "The Aluminum Company of Canada is only a subsidiary Co. of the US."

He said greater awareness of the problem was needed, calling it to the special attention of the students. He said, "It's too bad that students aren't alerted to it now, so that they can take action," adding, "I'd like to see the student body adopt resolutions on this question."

The talk was a second in the series sponsored by the LLP club.

further scoring.

Mike Nimchuk was good on the Art's line, holding the burly Skulemen to low gains when they came his way.

A strong UC surge in the final minutes was held by the Engineers and Hart finished things by holding the ball on the game's last play.

The Redmen showed great power, going both ways, and it was unfortunate that they had to meet Skule yesterday. The men from the South end of the campus proved beyond a doubt that they are the best in the league as they extended their victory string to three straight. Thus far they have piled up a total of 39 points while their opponents have managed to score only a single on them. With such a strong team, both offensively and defensively, the Engineers are just about unbeatable. The finals in Varsity stadium should see Skule square off against St. Mike's, on the basis of present performances and in such a contest we are safe in predicting a Skule triumph.

Still there is half a schedule yet to be played and there may be surprises for us. Vic is still a dark horse contender and could break into the finals if they keep winning while in Division II Trinity may come back.

The race is still on and the fight to decide the Mulock Cup should prove thrilling.

International Politics Prof. Predicts

Israel To Absorb Arabs

The only long-range solution of the conflict between Israel and the Arab world would be the absorption of one culture by the other, with Israel more likely coming out on top, predicted Prof. P. A. Reynolds yesterday afternoon, in a public address on "The Power Vacuum in the Middle East".

He said that Russia's present long-range prospects in the Middle East appear very good, while those of the Western democracies are poor. "The problems of the Middle East would be considerably eased if Russia and the United States could reach a peaceful agreement on world problems, but present conditions in the Islamic world provide no encouragement for Russia to do so." Prof. Reynolds is professor of International Politics at the University of Wales, and is in Toronto as a guest of the Department of Political Economy.

The government of almost all of the Islamic nations in the area is in the hands of a small group of rich absentee land-owners who have little understanding of the problems of their countries and less desire to solve them. There is almost no middle class in most of these nations, and the vast majority of the population are desperately poor. Prof. Reynolds said that little progress had been made towards solving the land problem. Even the sweeping reform efforts of Naguib have affected less than 10 percent of the land in Egypt.

Prof. Reynolds declared that national pride is one of the largest stumbling blocks towards progress. Previous imperialistic efforts by almost all of the great powers, fear and hatred of Israel, and a growing sense of national consciousness have combined to produce an intense form of nationalism.

This national pride, particularly in Iran, refuses to admit that there is a need for advice and assistance in their counties, he said. Yet without Western technical help the economic problems of the Middle East will never be solved.

Professor Reynolds, graduate of Oxford and London Universities, is staying in Toronto for three months and is giving some lectures in the Political Economy Department.

UC Lit Undemocratic Call Special Meeting

Special open meetings, to be held simultaneously by the UC Lit and WUA, have been called on the petition of 20 Lit members. They strongly objected to domination by the executive and demanded increased democratization.

John H. R. Lee, II Psych, one of the members signing the petition, said that the Lit budget was passed at a meeting attended by only 21 of the 721 members. Calling this the "height of undemocratic activity" he demanded increased and more varied publicity for meetings. He said that a motion would be introduced deploring executive indifference and insisting on action to increase membership participation.

In order to make possible joint discussion of the mutual problem of student indifference, the Lit and WUA executives decided to hold simultaneous meetings. The executives hope that, since all UC students finance the organizations, a sizable number will be interested enough to attend a discussion of their problems, and to offer constructive suggestions for future improvements.

Commenting on charges that the executives were inactive and uninterested in the students' wishes, Lit Director David Gauthier said: "We have our ears to the ground, but the ground is very quiet."

No gone ghost, he

Not Dead Yet

A general review of the student dailies, weeklies, and other periodicals in this office from across Canada and the United States would seem to give a good comparison of Toronto with colleges across the country.

Adding them up, we find Toronto showing more activity than most. We are the only ones still toying around with panty-raids. We are the only ones with any number of interfaculty and inter-college feuds burning. We seem to be the only ones with real character.

Let's face it, there is campus spirit. We're breaking at the seams. But the students want to do something now. A little coaching from the right body would direct this spirit to the point where a few more of the student body would get out to our all-Varsity enterprises.

Bt the coaching cannot be a rehash of time-honored tea parties. The Blue and White football dances are a fine evening's entertainment. Bloops were a bright idea, and we couldn't do without them now. The Pep Rally was not new, and it appears that street dances would do well every Friday night.

Credit must be given our Varsity organization for ability to play host. We have seen a letter from a student in McMaster University, thanking the powers that be at Toronto for an appropriate reception into the Intercollegiate Football Union. But his didn't answer the question for our own students.

Now at last, with the McGill weekend coming up, we are seeing the first real punch. The campus has been dared to go to McGill. A bright gimmick. We could still use more of the same. With the Western weekend still to come, we hope the Blue and White, or any students through the Blue and White, will hit us again. We love it.

CCF Rejects Even 'Good' Capitalists

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Last Thursday, Leslie Morris speaking to the LPP club on the campus called for a "peoples' coalition" of the LPP, CCF, and Socred supporters to achieve "national independence." What is the nature of this coalition that the LPP is proposing?

Such a coalition, far from being in the interests of the working class, would submerge it in a coalition of antagonistic forces which would block its path to independent political action. Around a slogan of petty nationalism, the LPP is appealing to a section of the capitalist class whose interests are anti-American. Are these capitalists not anti-labor? Can these antagonistic forces enjoy "peaceful coexistence" in the same movement for any constructive purpose? It is time that the "communists" in the LPP learned that it is the capitalist system that is opposed to the interests of the Canadian workers, not just those capitalists whom the LPP considers morally "bad" because of their pro-American opinions.

The CCF is a party based on the farmer and labor movements. The Program of the CCF reflects the interests of these movements at their present level of understanding. The CCF party does not compromise the workingclass by including within its program the program of so-called "good" capitalists. Neither does the CCF appeal to Quebec nationalists and the demoralized unstable elements which are congregated around the fascist-like Social Credit party.

During the election campaign the LPP ran [illegible] Candidates where they had no chance of winning, thus dividing the labor vote and aiding the capitalist parties. Lenin assailed this tactic, in "Left-wing Communism —An Infantile Disorder." Both the program and the tactics of the LPP can be seen to be anti-labor. They oppose labor political action and attempt to paralyse its development by a "peoples' coalition" which would in all likelyhood be capitalist in its program.

Blind and Starry-Eyed

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In Monday's issue of The Varsity John H. Lee is fiercely defending British Guiana's right of self-determination. It would have been quite fit to brush this letter aside as the naive prattling of a starry-eyed socialist, were it not for the following:

Carried away by his heavy blasts dripping with anglophobia, Mr. Lee inappropriately drags in the Eastern European satellites in an unfortunate attempt at a parallel with Guiana. It takes great audacity indeed to compare: (a) the struggle for independence of 110 million non-Russians in the USSR and of the Eastern European nations suppressed by the worst political despotism and economic exploitation known to human history, to (b) a short-lived "putsch" in a colony which is part ofg the world's most enlightened and advanced colonial system. It takes even greater audacity to call this immense struggle for the survival of Christian civilization in a patronizing and condescending way — ". . . this sort of thing"; but to mention European nations with a cultural heritage of many centuries in the same breath with the Guianese, while discussing their ability for self-rule, is simply a glaring insult.

Though blind to the aspirations of millions and to their plight, Mr. Lee tries to make a global issue from a miniature disturbance. What is more, he would hand the whole affair over to the UN, a body surpassed in its "ostrich attitude" maybe only by Mr. Lee himself.

In short, to liken British Guiana to Eastern Europe in any way, to compare the British system with Soviet world-expansionism, to compound a propagandistic coup d'etat engineered by foreign agents with self determination, to advocate blind mother UN to show the way to the young child, is a sign of either complete political blindness or deliberate ill-will.

W. Burghardt Klen,
I Mod. Languages.

Everywhere

The Editor,
The Varsity:

In recent issues of The Varsity we have seen two somewhat different viewpoints on the existence of anti-communist feelings inside the Soviet sphere. Don Zarowsky insists that in non-Russian republics, nationalism works hand-in-hand with anti-communism, while in the Russian Soviet-Republic it tends rather to give additional strength to the regime. He suspects that even the anti-communist Russians would not allow the non-Russian peoples, which are presently under Soviet rule, to regain their independence.

Prof. Strakhovsky, on the other hand, insists that it would be foolish to identify the Russians with communism and all others with anti-communism. In his opinion the main force of opposition to the regime comes from the Russians themselves.

It seems to this writer that the truth is a synthesis of these two viewpoints, if these are elaborated just a little further. Although the nationalistic feelings of the suppressed people are an important source of opposition to the Soviet regime, there certainly are other sources. Nobody doubts that there are anti-communists among Russians just as anywhere else. However, lately the manifestations of oppostion have been more visible in the non-Russian countries, most of which have been recentiy conquered. Thus it would be hardly justified to mention the anti-communism of Russians, but not that of the Ukrainians, Germans, Poles, Balts, etc.

It is in the interest of all parties that the front against communism should be a united one, and the fear of Russian imperialism, unfortunately not quite baseless, is somewhat of an obstacle in achieving this goal.

Many Still

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Many fellow-students reject the over-simplified political analysis of the current British Guiana crisis, as advanced by Messrs. Spencer and Potter. They do this because of the recognition of economic oppression and political tyranny underlying many of the colonial conflicts.

Onward

One hundred stalwart engineers, marching bravely through the night,
One hundred pairs of ladies' drawers are the only end in sight;
Little do they know or care
Of the cost of underwear.
A little matter is it to them if those stockings — sheer and fine
Were up for sale in Morgan's for a dollar ninety-nine.
Do they know that four brassieres
Are worth the price of forty beers?
Social workers in the area
Know these signs of mass hysteria;
Individually, they say, these boys are harmless little joes.
Only pushed by one another would they shout for women's hose.
Wild and woolly! Strong and tough!
Will they ever use the stuff?
Really, fellows! Must we lack?
Can't we have our panties back?

TO VIC CHEERLEADERS

As Engineers, we invite you to join SPS, the faculty, with "its sleeves rolled up," already. We would be pleased to arrange new blue skirts to go with your present gold sweaters. If 6ou distlike the thought of leaving your college and all its "spirit", we might mention that our spirit is such that we would rescue you in case of capture.

Please suggest to Mr. Ken Cork that Vic "men" are not above "inane childishness". For instance, the Bob Apple Battle, of Vic tradition, does not uphold the high standard of maturity held to by Mr. Cork. Nor could the driving of a decorated milkcart around the Campus be called particularly mature. As we recall, you cheerleaders were returned, undamaged and "unlost", after an interesting afternoon. Also suggest that the mature Mr. Ken Cork might deem it time to return our LGMB UNIFORMS, "undamaged" and "unlost" even after two years.

Mandated To Art Competition

NFCUS Report Repudiates Increased Per Capita Fee

The proposed 50 cent per capita fee supported by Toronto delegates at the National Federation of Canadian University Students conference in Montreal will have to be repudiated.

A report presented by Scott Symons and Jennifer Rickard said the Toronto mandate would not cover an increase this year since the fees are already collected and the budget drawn up.

Although the fee raise cannot be paid this year, the delegation suggests that because they received a mandate from the SAC to support the original proposed 50 cent raise, the fee raise must be supported next year. "By supporting the mandate for a raise in ...s, I think that the University of Toronto is honor bound to pay the 50 cent raise next year," Miss Rickard said. "The only alternative to my mind would be secession," she added.

This year Toronto has accepted a mandate for a national art competition to be held here after Christmas. The purpose of this competition is to promote exchange of ideas on a cultural level. "We felt that by accepting this mandate we would be taking positive action in our support of NFCUS." Miss Rickard said. The University of Toronto is well suited for such a competition as it has a Faculty of Fine Arts which would be extremely helpful in an advisory capacity, the report said.

The NFCUS inter-regional scholarships will be continued under the new title of Inter-regional Study Exchange Plan. The report said, "it is felt that the omission of the word scholarship would make the exchanges more popular with the students.

"The Toronto delegation realized that such exchanges are in most cases of little value to Toronto on an academic basis, and as a result we stipulate that only a limited number of students could be accommodated here," Miss Rickard said.

However, the delegation feels the contacts made through meeting exchange students and through living in a different part of the country are extremely valuable. The report called the plan one of the most successful NFCUS achievements.

"NFCUS can never hope to be a pressure group," Miss Rickard said. "Its structure and lack of continuity would never permit this." She added that the Toronto delegation feels the main function of NFCUS is to provide a link between the Canadian universities for the purpose of exchanging ideas.

Beer and Scholarship A Good Combination?

Hart House Warden Joe McCulley yesterday came out in defence of a decision made earlier this week by Toronto's Board of Education to accept scholarships offered by Breweries. Provost Seeley, Principal Jeanneret, and President Moore all refused to comment on the issue.

McCulley issued the following statement: "From conversations with a large number of students, I am aware of the tremendous need that exists for financial aid to assist in defraying the ever increasing costs of university education. The number of bursaries and scholarships available at any university in Canada is still pitifully small.

"If business, commerce and industry is to benefit from a continuing supply of grads, it is in their own interests to assist deserving students.

"Rather than decrying a single source of such assistance I would prefer to encourage business and industrial leaders to multiply their university gifts, not in terms of buildings or facilities, but in terms of financial assistance to students.

"I personally am not much impressed by arguments of those who are worried by sources: at least one great university in this country has not been averse to accepting such donations and using them in a highly positive and constructive way."

McGill may have a Molson Stadium but Toronto has four O'Keefe awards the Registrar's Office reported. It is difficult to tell how many breweries have contributed awards as these donors frequently remain anonymous. There are two O'Keefe awards in grad studies, one in Arts and one in Engineering. The Canadian Bruwers' Association also has an award at SPS.

Vic Debaters Decide

Fewer Characters Save Dollars

The abolition of the History Department would naturally follow if their were no characters in the world, claimed Mike Callaghan III St. Mike's in the debate last night at Wymilwood. St. Michael's College defended unsuccessfully, the motion, "Resolved that this University Needs More Characters."

Opposing the St. Mike's team of Mike Challaghan, III St. Mike's, and Harold Miller I St. Mike's, was the Vic team of Frank Machary II Vic and Carl Anderson II Vic. The speaker was Alex Langford IV Vic.

The first speaker for the government, Mike Callaghan, stressed the need for "characters" basing his argument on the great world leaders and the supposition that they were necessarily all characters. "Characters are memorable," said Callaghan "they stir our admiration, and they become natural leaders." He sited the examples of Mackenzie ing and Winston Churchill. He also attributed the recent defeat of Clement Atlee's government to the lack to colour of Atlee himself.

The first speaker for the opposition Carl Anderson, claimed that the recent increase of 13 percent in our fees was due to the characters on the campus. Delving into higher economics he said 200,000 dollars could be saved if there were no characters on the campus. White sheets hanging from flag poles cost 2.98 each; plaques, chairs, are very expensive articles to replace. If there were more characters on campus the cost of replacing plaques, chairs, etc., would greatly increase the cost of our fees.

"The Character who suggested wearing bathing suits in Hart House is another example of the attempt of characters to increase the cost of education." Anderson figured that it would cost $20,000 to outfit all the Hart House swimmers with bathing suits. As for "Panty Raids" he said the the "working girls were being deprived of their last foundations."

Despite the interruption of an alarm clock Howard Miller second speaker for the Gorernment, finally stated his views. He said "Every day individualism becomes more and more a lost conception." "Everybody conforms to the ideas of a few." He also thought that "individualism must be allowed the greatest possible maturity."

Frank Machary, who closed off the debate claimed that 98.2 percent of students on the campus were characters, the rest being graduate students. "Never let it be said this university lacks characters. "Never let it be said acters, the rest being graduate this university lacks characters acters. There are far too many," he said.

The motion was defeated by the vote of 18-16.

Mining Tag Day Request To Be Referred To Caput

The Student Committee for Aid to Mining Communities will request the University Caput to allow a tag day on the campus in December. Al Borovoy, I Law, secretary of the Committee is sending a letter direct to the University's governing body after the Students' Administrative Council Wednesday night decided to keep hands off the entire affair.

Spokesman for the Committee, Norm Chalmers, II Law, said: "It is regrettable that the SAC could not see its way clear to taking a more favorable stand than it did in response to our request for a strike welfare tag day."

But he said he appreciated "the seriousness with which our request was taken, the time devoted to it by the Council, and the support given it by some Council members."

Chalmers emphasized that the Committee would continue efforts to obtain permission to stage a tag day "with or without SAC support." If the Committee failed in this attempt to raise funds, he said it would seek other means of getting money to contribute to the welfare problems in Timmins and Noranda.

The SAC felt it was not in its power to grant the permission for a tag day. But, when asked to express some opinion that could be taken to the Caput Liaison committee the Council said, 16-8, it would rather stay clear of a miners' tag.

Absence Of Interested Students Discussed In Lit-WUA Meeting

A motion deploring the lack of enthusiasm and publicity given its meetings was upheld by the UC Literary and Athletic Society yesterday afternoon at a special meeting. The meeting was held as the result of a petition by 20 students. It met jointly with the UC Women's Undergraduate Society.

John Lee, II Psych who made the motion, pointed out the apparent disinterest among the men of the College. Only 21 members (one over the quorum) of 721 eligible, came to the Lit's budget meeting earlier this month Lee felt this apathy was the result of bad publicity. He urged more imaginative publicity even if it meant amending the Lit's Constitution. He suggested a monthly newsletter, no restriction on Lit advertising, and perhaps films at meetings as remedies for the poor attendance. There was barely a quorum at the special meeting. A rol call was held and only five of the 20 petitioners were present.

In the reply to the question the residence problem at UC was given as a reason for the lack of interest. It was also held that the Lit functions with as much efficiency as possible and that there is a campus wide wave of apathy.

In return John Lee remarked that freshmen interest in their introductory meeting to the Lit. was strong and that interest fell off because of bad publicity.

In a lengthy protestation one member stated that his presence at the meeting was unwitting. It seems someone moved his easy chair when preparations for the meeting were going on, and lo and behold he was in attendance. He said he typified the average Lit member in that he would probably end up taking an MA in Psych in a desperate attempt to figure him--self out if his attention was called to the deep problems of the Lit.

There were two amendments to the motion. The first was the reinstatment of last year's committee to investigate the lack of interest in the Lit; a further amendment provided that Lit meetings be held at 4 p.m. instead of 7 p.m. when they're usually held.

A motion that a committee by instituted to investigate a proposed amalgamation of the Lit and the WUA failed to receive a seconder. There was general laughter.

David Gauthier, IV UC moved that the Lit and the WUA oppose the proposed U ot T withdrawal from the National Federation of Canadian University Students. It was unanimously carried.

Correction

The Varsity wishes to correct the cutline under the picture of the SAC meeting in Thursday's paper. Joe Slogan was not in that picture, nor did he speak in favor of help for the striking miners.

Workshop

Those who have submitted news stories in The Varsity this week are urged to attend a workshop in the News Office at one o'clock today. This week's paper will be thoroughly discussed.

Women Dine In HH Again

Women, accompanied by Hart House members, have two chances next weekend to enjoy meals in Great Hall.

The second invitation dinner in the 34-year history of the House will be held Friday night, Nov. 6. Members of the House may bring their wife or lady-friend to the dinner, to be served between 6:15 and 6:45 p.m.

The following day, Sat., Nov. 7, a pre-Western football luncheon is being held in Great Hall when Hart House members may again bring women. With game-time at 2:00 at Varsity Stadium, lunch hours will be from 11:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. The meal will be served cafeteria style, and no tickets are required for the luncheon.

The special invitation dinner next Friday night will also be cafeteria style. Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden, plans to have a fire in both East Common and Great Hall fireplaces, coffee will be served in the East Common Room following the dinner.

Reservation tickets for the Friday dinner for members and guests are available at the Hall Porter's Desk in Hart House every day from 9:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. In order that the number of diners may be anticipated, ducats to the meals are obtainable six days ending Thursday, Nov. 5 at 5:00 p.m. Hart House members are asked to show their membership cards when obtaining the specially-printed reservation tickets.

Mock Gov't To Mirror Parliament

A Model Parliament which is patterned on the legislation of the Federal government in Ottawa, and composed of victorious members of the recognized campus parties, will be sitting in the Ontario Legislative chambers in Queen's Park, December third, eighth and tenth. The date of this year's campus elections has been set as Thursday, November 19th. The results of the election will determine the standing and representation of the parties in the parliament.

In order to acquaint students, members of the parties and onlookers more thoroughly with parliamentary procedures, the short opening ceremonies of Parliament will precede the Governor-General's speech from the throne on the first night's sitting.

Chairman of the Model Parliament Committee Joe Slogan, has stated that "this year's parliament shall attempt to reflect the Parliament in Ottawa as closely as we can under the adverse conditions faced on campus in methods of election! The contentious issue has been the problem of the independents. It is not our intention to suppress them."

The independents this year will, as decided by the committee, be allotted five seats in the house. The party of independents under the name of the Independent Progressive Association which applied last year for membership in the parliament has again been refused party status, and will therefore not compete in the elections as a party. Representing that party, John Roberts said that it was formed with the idea of representing the portion of campus political opinion which is not contained in any part of the existent parties, and would be an outlet as such.

"We felt," Slogan said, "that the method adopted for their representation is most equitable, in respect to carrying out a Model Parliament that would mirror the Canadian Federal situation.

ISO To Hold Coffee Hour

For years, Sunday evening Coffee Hours were regular feature of ISO activities. The aim of the ISO to create a common ground for all people regardless of creed or race and to help foreign and Canadian students understand each other, is best accomplished through informal meetings like these Coffee Hours. Friendships made through these contacts prove to be a valuable contribution to general University Education.

This Sunday, Nov. 1, Coffee Hour is being held at 403 Huron St. at 8.15 p.m. and Prof. Friedmann of the School of Law will give an informal talk on International understanding.

SHARE Will Have Dinner November 9

Pete Russel, Chairman of the Campus Student Help for Asian Relief and Education (SHARE) campaign announced last night that the SHARE dinner this year will be held on Monday, November 9. The speaker will be the High Commission for India, R. R. Saksena.

This year SHARE is contributing to the new health centre at the University of Delhi. Tickets for the dinner go on sale in the SAC office and through faculty representatives Monday.

"YOU CAN CHANGE YOUR MIND"

Worms Eat Cake

And Have It Too

Tradition was broken at Trinity yesterday afternoon when the freshmen "Worms" succeeded in getting a crumby morsel past the defending sophomores under Henderson Tower in the Annual Cake Fight. Only once before have the worms had such success.

Provided they can convey a small piece of cake through the tower on the East side of Trinity within one minute of the starting whistle they may eat their own cake with the rest of the College at the annual Athletic Dinner. If they fail, the cake is forfeited to second year.

However there are certain deterring factors. The sophomores, eager for the cake fill the tower, and other hindrances in the form of entrails, eggs, flour, soap, curdled milk, ancient tomatoes and other undistinguishable amorphous materials rain down on the unfortunate freshmen, emptied from the upper windows and roof of the tower. A win by the freshmen is considered an almost impossible feat. Only once before, as far back as we can trace, have the frosh won, and that was when the vets were in first year, facing those unfit for service.

The frosh lined up in a loose phalanx on Philosophers' Walk and at a given signal charged shrieking up the path and throwing everything in sight at the time. From the roof of the tower and every window within range there rained the most odious mixture imaginable of water and garbage. By the time the attackers had reached the tower the phalanx was non-existent and a few seconds later the only visible evidence of the fight was a high cloud of flour and other debris.

The wind quickly blew the flour away and again the fight was visible. A t the halfway mark the defending team was sagging badly since half of their numbers were at the upper windows. One after another the freshmen climbed on to the backs of the rearguard and crossed the cherished path through the tower on a higher plane.

Suddenly, the defending line just gave out and the freshmen, a gory and evil-smelling bunch, poured through the breach into the quad howling with glee to the accompaniment of an ear-splitting cannon blast and, shortly after, the final whistle.

After the fight the 3rd and 4th years lined up inside the quad for the annual boat-race. Each crew was equipped with 21 crewmen, cox, stroke oar, (twice as important as the others), and one "vessel". After their seamen's papers were inspected and the teams lined up by the judge's "launch" a cannon sounded, the cox lifted his bottle to his lips, drained it, slammed it on the table and the second man commenced. An estimated crowd of 200 cheered on the crews. Fourth year, with one more year of experience carried the event.

The sun went down on eight or ten sophomores washing the floor of the tower.

Worms in the process of fighting their way through the recently installed garbage dump under Henderson Tower, amid a hail of assorted missiles, much too numerous to mention. The worms were underdogs according to a local bookmaker, but nevertheless they were successful in defeating their oppressors, the sophomores, and will partake of a cake, over which the battle was waged.

Torontonensis Price Upped Will Cost $5 This Year As Overhead Is Increased

An increase from three dollars and fifty cents to five dollars for the price of the Torontonensis was proposed at the last Students' Administrative Council meeting. This was necessitated by the loss that the magazine has been carrying for the past couple of years.

"I do not feel that we should raise the price of the magazine without giving the students something extra for their money," said Reggie Mori, editor of Torontonensis, yesterday. He suggested that paper of a higher quality be used as one improvement in the Magazine's appearence.

The Old McGill is printed on a high grade manilla paper and this is the magazine with which the finance committee compared prices when deciding on the hike. The Old McGill costs $6.50 now and has cost $5.00 for some time.

The committee decided that while sales might be reduced by the new price, an effective sales campaign should realize at least $2,500. more in this manner. It agreed that the book in its present form was worth $5.00.

No increase in the size of the magazine is anticipated this year. Faculties will be charged $16 instead of $15 for a page in Torontonensis in future; this will bring in a approximately $400.00 extra.

The staff of the magazine was also announced at the meeting: Abrahm Goldberg (II UC) — Makeup Editor; Kay Goodwin (III UC) — Student Government; Pat Brennan (III SMC) — Publications; Ralph Berrin (II Pharm.) — Activities; Dave Wood (II Vic) — Athletics; Martin Eisen (II UC) — Clubs and Organizations; June Leslie (IV UC) — Fraternities, Adele Rostocky (II UC) — Residences, Fraser McIntosh (III SPS) — Photo Editor.

Anyone who wishes to gain year book experience in layout, copy-fitting and proof-reading is offered. The Torontonensis office this year is located in the basement of the SAC building.

Humanities Still Upheld: OCE Forum

"It is unfair to say that the humanities are neglected now more than in the past," said Timothy Roebuck in his paper on "Neglect of The Humanities in Education," was one of three presented at Ontario College of Education yesterday.

"It is necessary for money to go into scientific equipment in the schools, into nuclear physics plants at the universities, even when such expenditure impinges upon the library allotments of the department of English and history. It is necessary because if our young men and women are not given the highest degree of specialized training in these fields, we cannot survive economically," Roebuck said.

If we as teachers are prepared and enthusiastic we can do more in seven English periods in a week than a man who seeks only a Pontiac and a pension can do in forty," he claimed.

The second paper on the "Aims of Education" delivered by Pauline McDonaugh was presented from a philosophical viewpoint. "The aim of education taken in its most general sense can be said to be the shaping and leading of man to his fulfillment and thus each activity in the schools, whether it be physical training, reading, or writing, should go beyond the mere practical value by appealing to the inteligence and free will of the pupil," said Miss McDonaugh.

In the last paper presented, James MacLachlan in discussing "The Professional Status of Teachers," stated, that "teachers are anxious to be classed as professionals because of a desire for increased prestige; a desire for a greater appreciation of our worth by the community."

"With a professional standing the teacher would be better able to do his proper job, but as it is there are too many teachers who are hedged in by unenlightened prudish restrictions on their freedom," he said.

Quoting from an article in Macleans MacLachlan cited that 7,000 teachers leave the profession every year. Of 66,000 teachers trained from 1933-1947, less than half remained in 1948.

Pat Daniels, speaking from the floor, favoured non-comformism (not simply for eccentricity). He felt that there were too many pressures working on teachers making them conform in an effort to maintain Public opinion. Daniels felt that teachers should have the freedom to express their political opinions.

BC Reject Hate Clause On Campus

Vancouver, Sept. 25—(CUP)—Any club or organization of the University of British Columbia which has clauses in its constitution which are discriminatory will be expelled from the Alma Mater Society.

This ultimatum allows the organizations until March 1954 to remove the offending clauses.

The AMS has asked the University Faculty Council to mete out regulations to govern fraternities and sororities which are guilty of discrimination.

Ratify Toronto Mandate To Sponsor Art Contest

The External Affairs Committee at its meeting last night ratified the NFCUS proposal to sponsor a Canadian National University Art Competition. It is hoped that this project, important for the promotion of unity among Canadian universities, will become an annual affair. This year the competition will be held at the University of Toronto. Barbara Backus was chosen temporary chairman of a for the displays and awards.

Jane Farquharson and Peter Martin were elected co-chairmen of NFCUS for the EAC. It was agreed that a dual chairmanship would be advantageous, due to the heavy volume of work in this section of External Affairs.

The Handicrafts of India Sale is due to be in Toronto on December 7, 8 and 9. This year, as there will probably be no seminar next summer, the profits will contribute to the support of the total WUS programme.

Students Riot For Holiday

Berkely Calif. Oct. 21—(CUP)—Students at Iowa State University have rioted for two nights in order to gain a day of celebration for a football victory. The homecoming football game on Oct. 17 was won by Iowa State in an upset victory 13-6 over U. of Missouri.

When the college administrative board would not allow a day's freedom from classes, several thousand students rioted on the following Sunday and Monday.

The student governing body has sent a resolution to the college administrative board asking that if the college "wins its homecoming football game, students will be given the following morning off from classes."

See No Profit On Handbooks

The handbook will not realize a profit this year, it was stated by the SAC Finance Commissioner. A total of 1643 handbooks have been sold but no results have been received from the faculties and colleges, who received books to sell themselves. This means that $410.75 has been realized so far.

It is expected that the Handbook will break even but will not give the SAC the $385.00 profit it had expected.

The Handbook will not sustain a loss as the number ordered was reduced from 4,000 to 3,000 when the printer broke his contract by late delivery.

Plaques Cost $75 Ask Their Return

Only one of the three missing Engineering plaques have been returned, Mr. A. Russell, Superintendent of the University, said. A Med's awning is also missing.

The plaques cost between $75-$80 each, Russell added, and the awning will cost another $25 if it is to be replaced. E. A. MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the SAC, urged the students who have these missing items to return them to the SAC office and "no questions will be asked."

One has been returned in that manner so far, MacDonald said. But there are still two more.

International Co-operation

Program Of Action For WUS

Whether you delight in the abstract or the concrete the achievements of the World University Service should make you a happier individual. Words like unity, co-operation and assistance have found real expression in this organization.

The WUS of Canada (WUSC) brought sixty carefully chosen Displaced Persons to this country for permanent residence. Here they were entered in universities and enabled to proceed to graduational through a special scholarship programme. Another part of the WUS educational programme is to arrange for Canadian students to take study tours of Europe, and for European students to come to Canada. Indian Summer means more than a warm haze and coloured leaves to the Canadian students who participated in the WUSC seminar held in India and Pakistan last summer.

By discussing international problems with students and faculty members of India, one delegate mentions that she felt they were promoting unity in that country which will perhaps find expression in a national Indian seminar in the future.

Through its relief programme the WUS is supplying clothing, textbooks, drugs and other supplies to spots on the globe where they are in urgent demand. Back as far as 1939 WUS was providing helpful relief services to prisoners of war. A big housing project in the Near East is now in progress.

As a national organization which is part of an international organization, WUSC serves Canadian unity. One example of this is the yearly visit of the WUS secretaries to all Canadian Universities.

Twenty-two colleges and universities in Canada (a sugar-coated cookie if you can name them!) can and do mean twenty-two local committees of the World University Service. For example, in Toronto the WUS operates as a section of the External Affairs Committee of the SAC. These are among the smallest cogs in a wheel working for understanding, integration, and assistance in the world university community. Headquarters of WUS are in Geneve. Half of its strength lies in the Asian committees and the whole of its strength lies in the committees of 32 countries.

In Canada WUS is the strongest student-faculty group. The national organization is an Annual Assembly and an Administrative Committee which carries out its decisions.

The University of Toronto has played a major role in the Committee. It was begun on the initiative of the Warden of Hart House in 1939: J. B. Bickersteth. Its present chairman is a Professor of the Mathematics Department of this University: Dr. A. J. Coleman. He is the third professor from this campus to hold the distinction of being chairman. One student and one faculty rep are delegated from each local committee to the Assembly meetings, but Varsity managed to send three people to the session in Montreal, October 9th-11th.

SECRET

Because the WUS has friends it does not have to stand completely on its own national or international feet. A booklet put out by WUS attributes its strength in Canada to "close and productive co-operation with student councils, university administrations, the provincial Departments of Education, NFCUS and service organizations." A most impressive array of initials represents the bodies invited to send delegates to WUSC Assembly meetings: SCM, NCCU, etc., and the Hillel Foundation in Canada (not that HFC wouldn't be welcome!). On the international level Pax Romana, the World's Student Christian Federation and the World Federation of Jewish Students actively support WUS.

DOLDRUMS

Financial Blues have descended on WUS in recent years. This has affected its program of relief and education. In 1952 the WUSC arranged a travelling seminar for 20 Canadian students in Yugoslavia, since they lacked sufficient funds to sponsor an international seminar.

The WUS booklet states the case in these words: "Our chief source of revenue has been funds raised for relief among students and faculty in the universities." (Remember SHARE?) "Now that the most vivid post-war needs have passed, the problem of raising funds in this way has become very great. Officers of WUSC have determined to present to selected individuals, corporations and foundations some of the opportunities which confront us in the hope of engaging their participation in this significant work."

Perhaps this is as good a place as any to mention that SHARE begins its campaign a week from Friday (Nov. 6).

LOOKING AHEAD

How about spending the summer of '55 in Africa? It could happen. The WUSC is looking thataar ahead and away to plan an ernational Seminar. Great on is the destination for WUSC representatives next summer. A seminar and a study tour of Europe in order to study international organizations are also on the agenda.

The building of a health centre at the University of Delhi is a major project of WUSC commencing this year. The U of D is an affiliated institution with twelve colleges and eight thousand students. Its health facilities have long been grossly inadequate. The Delhi committee of WUS has gained government support for building a health centre which will include complete examination rooms, inoculation and vaccination facilities, x-ray equipment when available, a laboratory, a ward for non-infectious cases and sanitary arrangements for minor surgery.

This is part of what WUS terms it "Program of Action".

Baha'i Group Hear Speech First Lecture

"Man's faith today must go beyond belief to deeds," said Mrs. Audrey Westheuser in an address to the Baha'i Student Group on Wednesday. Her topic introduced a series of seven talks to be given by members of the group.

The spiritual "laws for living" as prescribed by the prophets form the essential foundation of religion, said Mrs. Westhauser. These laws, renewed from time to time, she explained, according to man's needs, "constitute the means for the highest order in the universe."

SUZANNE BLOCH

Lutenist Featured Thursday

Suzanne Bloch, an authority on music from the 13th to the 17th century will be the artist at the Conservatory concert on Thursday, Nov. 5, at 8.30.

Miss Bloch will play the lute, recorder, virginals, and sing to the lute. This is the second concert in the special series sponsored by Dr. Johnson. The next program will be Gold and Fizdale, a two piano team, on January 26.

Corrections

this I would like to remind Mr. S. about the behaviour of the biggest White Russian (Tsarist) army that existed then under Gen. Denikin in South Russia. In his biggest and final drive against Moscow he failed to reach his objective because halfways he split his troops to attack the Ukranian Nationalist army from behind while it was fighting the Reds. This action caused the defeat of both Denikin's and the Ukraine army.

3. Mr. S's statement about the two million "Russian" refugees is also incorrect so far as the vast majority of those refugees were Ukrainians, Rutheenians, Cauacasians and Cossacks. Actually the percentage of Russians was very small . . . This brings forth a difference in definition of "a Russian". Great Russian supporters of Pan slavic imperialism quite habitually call all those above nations as "Russian" in spite of the protests from the people concerned.

4. I would like to repeat here the essence of the last statement of Mr. S. . . "since the Russian nation is the largest in number among many other nationalities . . ., they are the ones that suffer most . . ." This shows a not so clear demagoguery or a gross ignorance in statistics. Who suffers more: the guy who has 90 percent of his family liquidated, or the one who has only 33.3 percent. The suffering of a nation has nothing to do with the number of its population, Mr. S!

Besides that, even the absolute numbers of Great Russians in slave camps is smaller than that for the other nations. Out of every ten slave workers is one Great Russian; in order to be persecuted as much as the other nations in Russia the porportions should be 4 or 5 to 10. Also the most reliable police troops, used for suppression of revolts in other nations, are composed exclusively of Great Russians.

So, conclusively, in a showdown between Communism and Democracy the Western world has its best allies in the enslaved, non-Great Russian nations, since they have two enemies to fight against — Russian imperialism and Communism. What have the Great Russians to fight for? The overthrow of the Empire in which they are a master race? From both 1st and 2nd World Wars we have seen that Great Russians of any political opinion have joined forces when their Empire was at stake? Are they likely to do differently this time?

Will the unrest end in East Europe when Communism is overthrown? NO, it will only decrease, but not end until Russia has disclaimed its imperialistic aspirations.

K. Meipoom.

Elijah

1. For they sang unto the Lord in Massey Hall; they lifted up their voices unto Him with great praises. And the critic was pleased with them that made such joyous sound and clapped out aloud.

2. At that time the multitude, being come also to see Elijah and hear his works are mightily moved by one who stood up among them, and whose name was Irene Byatt.

3. And she sang unto them a sweet song and strained not. And her voice was heard in all the lands around, even unto the second gallery. So that the people rejoiced to hear such wondrous tone.

4. When she had left off singing, there rose another woman, a widow who was called Louise Roy. And this woman did cry out to Elijah in great sorrow; and the multitude were sad to see her thus afflicted that she could hardly recount her troubles to Elijah.

6. But Donald Garrard, coming nigh unto her with many followers, both male and female, did comfort her nobly in the name of God. With dignity and clarity did he deliver the word of the Lord, but without much noise.

7. And those that were round about him did raise a great shout and sing with increasing might to Him who laveth the thirsty land.

8. But James Lamond with tenor voice did warn Elijah of the people's intent to kill him. And with great eloquence persuaded him to betake himself to the wilderness.

9. And when Elijah was troubled Rae Reilly did sing to him from out of the heavens. And his heart was thereupon made glad.

10. And the people were rejoiced to see the Lord come to him and exulted in mighty tones so that the multitude who had come round about Elijah were uplifted.

11. And the people that were there did pray in their hearts: May Mendelssohn's music be played through the ages. Amen.

FOLLOWING THE TRAIL-BLAZERS

As Canadians push back the frontier — developing new areas, building new enterprises — banking service still follows the pioneer. Today, there are more bank branches to meet the needs of changing, growing Canada... they are being used more... they are doing more for more people... than ever before.

Since 1900, branches of the chartered banks have increased from 700 to 3,800. In the past ten years alone, 3,750,000 bank accounts have been opened.

Speaking of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

THE READERS WRITE, TOO

Now and again, the sports-minded readers of this fair morning journal write a letter to the editor. It doesn't happen very often. You would have to presume, wrongly that they were in complete agreement with all that they find in The Varsity since they don't write very often. That probably isn't the case.

But when the readers do write, they seem to have something worthwhile to write about. Take, for example, the letter to the editor that is on page 7 under the heading, Mural Refs.

HATE THAT REF

Apparently the writer happened on a recent Intramural lacrosse game between Meds and U.C. One of the players, who also happened to be an Intramural football official, was ejected for "ungentlemanly conduct". The writer goes on to point out that it is a pretty poor show when you have to play under the eye of a person who doesn't know how to act in a game himself.

It's hard to go along with that kind of reasoning. After all, you don't necessarily judge a referee as good just because he knows how to play the particular game. A man is a referee because he can referee.

MURAL REFS

It brings up the old topic about the lousy refs you get in interfaculty sport. Well, sure they are not the best in the sport. You won't get the best officials by paying cigarette money. You would have to pay them half the national mint on weekly instalments.

Of course a man that undertakes to handle a game ought to know a little about the rules. Even a very little would be good. Some of the boys that have worked games for the Intramural Office have called some real bonehead plays. But then they have also called some good plays.

Under the circumstances you have to go along with them for trying to do the right thing. It's interesting to note that some of the pro refs got their start in the Interfaculty league. People like Bob Strom, Stu Scott and Fred Sgambatti (that's no recommendation for mural refs).

ON THE SIDELINES

It's a lot easier to call a game from the stands than it is from the field. But usually the people can pretty well tell whether or not a ref has something on the ball. That's particularly true about some of the Intercollegiate games. And nothing can kill a game for the fans as fast as an official that doesn't know what he is doing. The display of nearsighted officials in the Queen's-Toronto game a few weeks ago will be remembered for a long, long time.

THE READER IS RIGHT

So you have to go along with the reader who wrote the editor to say "one of the most effective improvements would be in the better selection of officials."

It applies to Intercollegiate as well as Interfaculty referees. A couple of years ago the Intercollegiate started a staff of officials. The idea was that they would have some men who were good refs. The calibre of officials would improve. At least that's the story that Warren Stevens tells. He also says "the calibre of the officials hasn't improved much yet." You are so right.

Weather Important To Blues Change May Mean Victory

By JIM PROUDFOOT

Surprisingly enough, much of the outcome of tomorrow's intercollegiate gridiron clash at Montreal between Varsity Blues and McGill Redmen will depend on the weather. Which means that the weatherman is a pretty important fellow because the game is an important one since the Blues and Indians are tied for second place although Toronto has a game in hand.

At least, coach Bob Masterson figures the weather conditions can play an important part. "They're a big, strong team," Bob explained yesterday, "and, if the field is muddy, they could push us around. And it usually snows of rains when we play in Montreal." If it's a good day, though, we've got the edge on them in running and passing."

The Blues' hospital list is as long as usual. Guards Don Mattason and Frank Palermo won't play tomorrow as the result of injuries sustained in the McMaster game—Mattason a slight concussion and Palermo a sprained ankle. That leaves Bob Waugh and Baz Mackie in the inside position, along with two intermediates; who are being promoted: Jim Keffer and Jack Meaker. Then centre John Wismer and tackle Jack Strapp picked up bruised hips in preactices this week and are doubtful starters.

Wismer will probably have to play, though—he's the only offensive centre. Bob Leeming, a wingback is being shifted to the centre secondary position on defence. Likewise, end Bruce Johnston will play tackle of defence and Roy McMurtry will take a turn as linebacker.

If these changes work out, we'll be stronger than ever defensively," Masterson pointed out. The Blues' at present have the best defensive record in the league, having allowed only 20 points in three games. Next best are the first-place Western Mustangs who have had 38 points racked up against them in four starts.

Ed Skrzypek and Ollie Mandryk will be the quaterbacks for tomorrow's game. At the halfback positions, Pete Maik will likely got on the left side. "We're putting him in for his defensive ability—he'll be an outside linebacker on defence," Masterson said.

Playing his first game for Varsity this year will be Gene Chorotecki, the former Balmy Beacher. The veteran end sprained his ankle before the opening of the schedule and, although it's still bothering him, will be able to play tomorrow. The other ends are Don Smith, Fred Smale and Ted Kennedy. A former end, Bill Horton, is now a regular wingback, along with Al Haig, the team's kicker.

Blue Notes—While the Tribe is playing host to the Blues, a crippled McMaster team invades Queen's bailiwick in Kingston in quest of their first win. Among the many players on the sidelines are John McPhee, Max Woolley, Wimp Crawford, and Ed Parente.

Two of last year's Blues, Bill Bewley and Joe Harris, are assisting Jack Life with the coaching of the UTS team in the TDIAA. They're having nothing but success . . . McGill's biggest threat is in their backfield where speedy George Klein has averaged a touchdown a game. Other threats are Hal Blewald, Bob Shaw, Fred Wilmot and a powerful lineman, Lionel Whitman, who holds the college shot put record.

Benny Says-

Last week One-eyed Benny again picked the Intercollegiate winners correctly although they didn't appear in The Varsity because Benny was in New York attending to his many business interests. He's back now and has submitted the following prognostications:

Toronto 14 ..... McGill 4
Queen's 18 ... McMaster 7

Dents—Forestry Fight to 1-1 Tie

In a rough, tough intramural game yesterday the celler dwelling teams of the second division clashed in a do or die contest for both squads. The battering line play featured a game that saw Forestry and Dents leave the field with a one point tie.

Dents opened the first half with a roaring drive that seemed destined to open the scoring for them with a major. This was not to be so though as a hard playing Forestry team stiffened to hold them off within their 10 yard line. A fine run by Forestry's Eddy Marcus set the Green and White in scoring position on the Dents 15, but they also were to be denied and failed to collect even a single as speedy Jack Wall carried the ball out of danger for Dents. The remainder of the half saw few outstanding plays as both lines played solid defensive ball.

The second half also developed into a defensive struggle and neither team were able to move into a scoring position although some fine running by Don Harrett plus pass receiving by Forestry offensive ends Jim "Twink" Waddell and John McClelland gave them a slight territorial edge. Dents collected their single in the third quarter on a long kick by Reed Currie that enabled the Dent's tacklers to drop the ball carrier behind the goal line. Forestry's single point came on a similar play with Don "Hungry" Lowman doing the kicking in the last quarter. Jim Gaida at right guard, and ends Danny Nelson and Al Vaichulis played an outstanding game for Dents, along with Don Gilbert who was the pick of the backs. The Forestry effort was led by lineman Bob Burger, Don Baird and Bill Hall, while backs Ed Marcus, Don Harrett, and Bill "Woody" McBride turned in a fine game.

Vic Gals Win 14-3 In Softball

Trinity Field saw action yesterday in a women's softball match between Vic and St. Hilda's first teams. The game started evenly enough, but in the final inning, Vic rockted ahead to trounce St. Hilda's by a decisive 14-3 score.

The Saints opened the game with Kelly getting the only run of the inning against Vic pitcher Marg Ann Gemmell. In the bottom of the first, after two were put away at the plate Pat Cowman bagged the homer of the game to make a one-all score.

In the second, Anita Pochon and Marilyn Bevis delivered runs for St. Hilda's despite the sure fielding of the Vic team. Vic then tallied four more runs to bring that inning to a 5-3 close.

Marg Ann Gemmell's pitching, together with the talents of first baseman Mary Foster, paid real dividends when they put away three runless Saints in the third inning. Vic cut loose and chalked up in the last half to end the dame with a blazing 14-3 for the Vic—torious ones.

An upset was suffered in Varsity Stadium yesterday when the Medswomen downed P.H.E. II's in a close 2-1 battle.

Today, Meds play St. Hilda's II in a rematch on Trinity Field.

'Subsidized' JV's Set For Rams

Ryerson Lambs are flocking up to Varsity Stadium this afternoon to shake their frizzy locks at those "subsidized" Baby Blues footballers. What we expect to be the second shearing of the lambs in as many weeks will begin at 2.30 in the Blue Bowl.

This is not a league game but, going into the match with the Seconds will be their undefeated record, and from John McManus' pessimism, it could be a rough day for the Varsitys. Even the Ryerson Rams, whom, the Varsity feels, should be in the Inter-faculty loop, may have just enough power to upset the Intermediates, for in the past week the Baby Blues have been drained of a great part of their power.

A concussion, suffered at the hands of those rough Aggies, puts Al Wong out for this week. Bill Miller and Bill McDonald picked up injuries in the first game of the season and are still out.

The opposition could do little to dent the thick hides of most of the Varsity linemen but this invulnerability was cracked by the Blues as they laid out Iglar and Watt in practice this week then hit Norm Levine, shelving all three for the coming game. Then to add further injury the Blues gaily snatched Jim Keffer, Meaker and John Prendergast for their own line-up on Saturday. A thin ray of sun breaks through the dark with the possibility that the return of John Chisholm may send one of these back to the desperate Intermediates.

Bob Smart is limping somewhat and will not be at top form against the Rams, but speedy Ross Woods is back in the fold and will likely handle the kicking to-day.

Murray Hadlow, who turned in some excellent kicking last week and some fine defensive play, injured his right leg against the Aggies and will be out for this week.

A hope for strengthening the Baby Blue front wall is Ray Yakasovitch, who may play to-day and if he does will likely plug a hole that is very big now.

The Ryerson Rams are somewhat worked up about the defeat given them last time out and no doubt were impressed with the Varsity editorial regarding "subsidized players" that appeared yesterday. They will be out to show their power and would love to revenge themselves on the Baby Blues by snapping the Varsity win string.

RMC Here Saturday To Play Soccer Blues

Did someone say they weren't going to Montreal this weekend? Well yo're really in luck. The Senior Soccer Blues start the last lap of their march to the Blackwood Trophy when they encounter the R.M.C. Soccerites this Saturday afternoon on the front campus.

You might say that the Blues are getting into the habit of winning, they have not lost a game this season. Last Wednesday they beat McMaster 3-0. Jose Atucha played a marvelous game both defensively and offensively, scoring two goals. The third was added by defenseman Wally Eze. Half-backs Leach, Williams and Johnson kept the Blues on the run.

B-Ball Blues Prep — Season's Here Already Yet

By LEO MADDEN

The Varsity basketball team is swinging into its second week of tryouts. There are about sixty-five boys out with more on the way as soon as the gridiron wars are over. In order to get a better look at the candidates, Dalt White has divided them into two groups. One works on Monday and Wednesday, the other on Tuesday and Thursday.

There are several promising ballplayers among the new material, boys good enough to give the returning members of last year's senior and intermediate teams something to worry about. In Tuesday night's workout John Sheppard appeared to be the best of the newcomers. A product of Niagara Falls High School, John represents what Varsity was lacking last season, a good big man. This six-foot plus left-hander will give Lou Lukenda a battle for the center spot this year.

Another boy who has caught our eye is "Red" Vachulis, Parkdale's contribution to Varsity basketball. A big strong lad who can get off his feet, he will be valuable in the rebound department.

Returning to his third season with Varsity is George Stulac. This year George says that he is going all-out for the court game. We hope so. George possesses the easy moves and the soft touch that mark a natural.

Jim Russell, the ever-dangerous small man, is racing veterans and newcomers alike up and down the Hart House court. Possessor of a fine set shot, Jim would just as soon run around his check if the latter comes too close.

Lou Lukenda the "old man" of the squad, was team captain and Varsity's representative on the intercollegiate all-star team last year. Lou, noted for his one-handed jump shot, is starting his fourth and final year in blue and white. However he will get the full test this season with the fine crop of big men trying for a place on the squad.

Bill Corcoran is still working as assistant trainer of the football team. He will be out with the basketballers come November. Marv Tile, Mike Baida, Doug Scott and Dave McCuaig are among the returning players of last season. Scott, an aggressive ballplayer, shows signs of improvement over last year.

Dalt White expects to make a cut sometime next week. This will give the team a full month of practice before the first game. Dalt, by the way, does a commendable job getting the team in shape for Bob Masterson who is busy trying to bring the Yates Cup back to Varsity.

Has McMaster been given a fair trial? — NO.

Can we base our judgement on the basis of four regular league games? It seems a little premature on the part of Mr. Ellis to query their presence, especially at this time. After all, on the unanimous vote of the Intercollegiate Union, after a trial period last fall, the august body felt that McMaster's presence in the league was warranted. True, McMaster has lost four games this season, but so have Queen's and McGill in former seasons, i.e., since the war. Thus we contend that the Marauders should be given two or three years in the league, before any consideration of this matter should come to the fore. Presumably by that time, if not before, McMaster will have determined their own status, financially and otherwise, re this league.

Further, Mr. Ellis, it is rather presumptuous of you to slam McMaster on the grounds that "the turnstiles haven't been clicking very well." McMaster have fielded a team and played the game. What else do you expect in amateur sport? Your attitude in this matter only exemplifies the apparent attitude of many in intercollegiate sport today—make it a business; sell it to the fans; if a team can't pull its weight financially, drop them, or they will do so of their own accord (e.g. many teams in the U.S.). Here is a problem for you to examine Mr. Ellis in light of the purposes and aims of a University — "Intercollegiate Sport, Big Business or Otherwise — Professional or Amateur?".

Mr. Ellis, we feel you have no case at this time; have shown a definite lack of tact in depreciating McMaster's existence in the league, but then we realize you may be representative of the general attitude of many University students today — sportsmanship; what's that?—smear the other team.

Being an interested participant and observer in Interfaculty Athletics, I am One, of the many, who would like to see the calibre of interfaculty sports improved. Could I possibly suggest that one of the most effective improvements would be in the better selection of officials in these games.

Very recently, I watched a lacrosse game between Meds and University College which was marred by the ungentlemanly conduct of one of the participants to the extent that the player was ejected from the game by the officials. It is ironical that this player is himself a referee in some games in this same sport.

How can we expect to raise the calibre of university sports when we have to play under the eye of such boors who cannot play the game in a sportsmanlike manner themselves. If the committee could only select more officials of the type who quickly banished this fellow and less hot-headed vulgar so-called officials, I think that the fun and class of our games could be improved immensely.

On the Sideline

By JO RATCLIFFE

It's all very well and good to follow the same old routine of sports on this campus but when something new breaks the routine, it's sensational. That's just what has happened this Fall and the new big gate crasher is none other than archery!

For years and years, the girls around here have been toying with the idea of interfaculty competition in this field and at last the dream has become a reality. As long as inter-collegiate meets have been held, the Toronto Robin Hoods have entered a team. It has usually been a mediocre team and this year was no exception to the rule.

We were always under the impression that it didn't matter much to anybody but what a shock hit home when we found that archery was becoming one of the biggest things in women's sports. More people are flinging arrows about today than ever before and though it sounds like an ad for tooth paste or some such article, it's true.

This is the first year an intramural archery meet will be held and it has not turned out this way without a lot of pushing from the PHEheads. Miss Slack has been working hard to bring the meet about and has even condescended to remain in town this weekend to attend it. Shoots are being slated with Mac and OAC as well as with the Eatons Girls' Club. This meet will be held on November the 10th, with four of this weekend's competitors battling for the glory of old U of T.

The idea behind the big push is to eventually make up a top ranking team for inter-collegiate meets with the result that much encouragement has been given to the Frosh. We've seen enough mediocrity in archery and the new idea goes over very well. It has gone over so well, in fact that teams from Vic, Saint Hilda's, Saint Mike's, Nursing and . . . egads! Skule. That's the female members of the South End.

The new era in archery opens today at noon at the Stadium and continues at 9 a.m. Saturday morning. In the event of rain, the local will be switched to the sheltering enclosure called the Drill Hall.

End notes: Your challenge, Dear Members of the Blue and White was most commendable. Why don't you do this for our home games?

Interfaculty Lacrosse

Pharmacy 'A' soundly whipped Pharmacy 'B' in yesterday's game in the Interfaculty Lacrosse loop. It was a special victory for Bill Gould who played a great game for the 'A's, and came up with a shut-out in the end. Bud Gillap starred with three goals, Ron Anco came next best with two.

The score at half-time was 5-0 for Pharmacy 'A'. Other scorers were Don Watson and Clide Keene. Final score 7-0 for Pharmacy 'A's.

Ethical Infants

It's no wonder that the study of psychology and psychiatry has expanded in leaps and bounds since the war. What with the feeling of frustration almost stretched to the limit by increased stresses and turmoils, it is hardly impossible not to look to psychology for the answers.

But a look at our post-war moral development may throw some light on the problem. General Omar Bradley once said of our modern age: "Man is stumbling blindly through a spiritual darkness while toying with the precarious secrets of life and death. The world has achieved brilliance without wisdom, power without conscience. . . . We know more about war than about peace, more about killing than we know about living. This is our twentieth century's claim to distinction and to progress."

With this in mind we have definite cause to wonder whether mankind has the capacity for its own salvation. We could feel proud that our post-war society has produced something of distinction. But we're not.

We're not proud to declare that we know more about killing than about living. We're not happy to say that our scientific wisdom has gone to far beyond our ethical that it is almost out of sight. We're not encouraged by the fact that we have failed to learn the lessons of history.

But it's true.

Governor-General Vincent Massey described this as a scientific or technical age. We have concentrated on machines rather than on man with the result that our humanities and our general morals have been left to drag in the dust. Far be it from us to say that man has understood history, for the tragedies of the past still rest, and more menacingly, on our very doorsteps.

These are the problems and tasks which face university students today. Still deeper, these are the tasks which confront education.

We must seek and provide an understanding of history. We must seek and provide an atmosphere of free inquiry in which prejudice, suspicion and hatred are smothered. We must seek and provide a striving for order and decency within nations and among nations.

And above all this, we must make clear—more than our elders have—that our plight and frustration is not due to man's machines but rather to man's morals. Indeed this is "a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants," but it need not, and cannot, forever remain such.

Herein is the task of education. To nourish the failing infant. Herein is the main challenge of the University. To fire that infant with a mission.

Perhaps it is too late already. But if not, the spirited youth and revitalized university are our hope.

Unprepared

Namby-Pamby Delegates

The third in a series of articles analyzing developments and issues at the recent NFCUS Conference. Here, the writer discusses the relative unpreparedness of the NFCUS delegates to handle the important issues at the Montreal meeting.

By RICH ANCO

One didn't have to sit in on the NFCUS Conference very long to realize that many of the delegates present were definitely not prepared to discuss certain questions. The International Union of Students, the fee raise, the Spanish student issue: all these were problems that vary few of those present understood or knew anything about.

HOWEVER, THE MAJOR PART of the blame in this case rested with the Federation itself. Information on the important questions was not given out to the various delegations until they reached the Conference. Such information and reports could have been sent to the respective universities a month ahead of the meeting so that some manner of local opinion could have been ascertained. This was not done and it was not completely the delegates fault that he did not come prepared.

On the other hand, the conference was a new experience to many. It moved along swiftly; within two days it was in commission discussing very important issues; the delegates were obviously unprepared to crash in on these problems without some background and detailed discussion.

AS A RESULT THE "old hands" took control of these issues and manoeuvred them along their lines. And there were plenty of "old hands" around.

This, I feel, is a serious weakness. This is the part of the blame which can be put on the delegatioss themselves—or rather on the student councils of the universities that elect their representatives to NFCUS. There is little or no attempt to get continuity in the delegations. Each year delegates are, in most cases, new and inexperienced to the politics of the Conference. Toronto was in the exceptional position this year of having Scott Symons who had attended last year's meet. But there weren't many other universities in a similar position. It is to Toronto's credit that they were able to have someone like Symons who knew "what was going on."

EVERY EFFORT SHOULD be made to have repeating delegates attend these NFCUS Conferences.

Unpreparedness showed up on almost all questions but never so clearly as on the Spanish student one. If the members of the Students' Administrative Council were confused about the NFCUS decisions on relations with the Spanish University Syndicate, (SEU), they can well imagine what it was like for the NFCUS delegates to discuss and make those decisions.

Two resolutions were passed in commission stage: to have a bilateral NFCUS-SEU relationship and to have NFCUS support any move to get SEU into the western international student organization, CoSec. The first was conditionally accepted when it was stipulated that if any substantial contact was made with the Spanish students it would have to be through the recognized national union, SEU. It emphasized that NFCUS in no way approved of the structure or policies of SEU.

BUT THE POLITICAL IMPLICATIONS in Europe of the second were almost completely overlooked. Certain delegates were willing to sacrifice the principles on which CoSec was founded to bring the SEU into the international body as a full member. Bill Hoyt's report on Spain pointed out that Franco appointed the leader of SEU, that the policies of SEU were controlled by the state, that SEU had no constitution other than certain clauses written into the laws of the state. Yet these were pushed aside in a frantic effort to pass a motion which, in effect, put NFCUS approval internationally behind the Franco-controlled national union.

It must be understood that NFCUS could support any bilateral exchange of information, or even students, with SEU if it desired such contact. That was no reason to back SEU in its attempts to get into international groups.

Fortunately, this second motion was withdrawn, but only after two days of backstairs discussion on the serious implications it would have on European National Unions of Students. The mover, Western, realizing the "wrong" meaning that many organizations might read into such a motion had it struck from the Commission Report when it reached the full (plenary) assembly.

THIS IS AN INDICATION, perhaps the most glaring, of the relative ease with which important questions appear at NFCUS Conferences and of how unprepared the delegates can be. If there is anything that can be recommended, it is that more continuity be established between the NFCUS delegations of one year and those of the next. Furthermore, NFCUS should — and it can — have its reports and recommendtaion delivered earlier than they did this year. They are important; they should be discussed on each campus.

I AM CONVINCED that if there had been more discussion on the IUS, the SEU, and the fee raise, the bunglings that developed at the Montreal Conference could have been avoided. Toronto did discuss all but SEU. Nevertheless, the fees question has erupted into misunderstandings whose repercussions will be greatly felt in NFCUS. This is simply the result of too little discussion and preparedness by the University of Toronto on the issue.

This could be a first step in improving the National Federation.

List Of Corrections For Mr. S.

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Reading Mr. Leonid Strakhovsky's explanation about unrest in Russia, I was happy to discover one correct statement, namely, that all great Russians are not Communists. To his other statements I am glad to add a few corrections.

1. Mr. Strakhovsky seemed to to try confusing Mr. Zarowsky's point about nationalism in Russia by referring to Communism from 1920 and by naming a few non-Russian Communist leaders from that time. That only shows that Communism was international in character in 1920 and in no way a Russian invention. But, probably it has escaped Mr. Strakhovsky's attention that Communism of today is altogether different from that in 1920. Communism of today still pays lip service to internationalism but only so long as it serves its imperialist ends. It might be noted also that all those Communist leaders Mr. Strakhovsky so conscientiously listed, have all been liquidated years ago. Among the Communist leaders in Russia of today a far greater percentage are Great Russian than would be justified by the number of Great Russians of the total population in Russia.

2. Like many others I do not understand in what way Great Russians fought more desperately to free themselves from Communism than any other nationality. How can a total war for freedom be fought more desperately or less so? Or does Mr. Strakhovsky imply that many nations gained their independance in the struggle. Finland, the Baltic States, Poland were not all so eager to win their freedom as the Russians were? Yet it is time, as Mr. S. states that most of the two and one-half year long Civil War was fought mainly by the Russians. After all, it was a Russian civil war, so who was supposed to fight it for them?

Mr. S. also claims that the other nations (non-Russians in the Empire) often hindered the anti-Communist cause. They did it as is generally known by fighting for their own independence, which meant a fight against Russians of any political coloration. In connection with

Whose 'Little Minds'?

The Editor,
The Varsity.

For some time I have been reading with mixed humour and incredulity the contributions of one Mr. J. W. Daly to The Varsity's "Letters to the Editor" column. Until now, my sense of humour has held sway and I have been able to greet each of his contributions with the mild burst of laughter that has been its sole merit. Upon reading his latest "gem," however, my sense of incredulity has taken over, and I feel constrained to make a reply.

Mr. Daly is, I know, a Liberal with a capital "L". Will he now repudiate the great principles of liberalism upon which the modern British Empire has been built — the reservoir from which he, as a Liberal, has supposedly drawn his inspiration? Will he now join the mass of book-burning reactionaries who believe that we can only preserve our way of life by compromising the ideals for which it stands, and by closing the doors of our mind to any ideas that run contrary to it! I would suggest, Mr. Daly, that we are NOT the weaker team on the field, that we need not simply strive to keep the enemy from our own goal-line, that we are strong enough in ourselves to command the intellectual respect of our foe. Ours is not a negative philosophy — it is a positive set of ideals, whose appeal we should never underestimate. Mr. Daly seems fond of quotations. How about this one of Franklin Delano Roosevelt: "We have nothing to fear but fear itself."

Over the years Great Britain has built up a great Commonwealth and Empire based on liberal principles of responsible government and free association. Its present action in British Guiana makes mockery of those principles, which they, and we have so long cherished. The people of the West Indies realized this and wisely petitioned. That the people of Guiana, not so enlightened as Mr. Daly, are not mature enough to make their own decisions, and if in so doing it repudiates the ideals of its teacher, the fault lies not in its own immaturity, but in the failure of the teacher to make those ideals sufficiently attractive to it. Obviously in Guiana, Britain has failed to do this, and if the stories of the squalor under which the Guianese live are true, then there is no need to look further to find the reason. Britain has failed in her duty in Guiana, and the solution is not to repudiate the little that she has done, but to do more, to come up with constructive offers of aid to the Guianese people.

The conduct of Britain on the whole Guiana affair has been a sorry commentary on the narrow and unimaginative colonialism that still, at times, pervades the minds of British officialdom. Mr. Daly quoted Burke's famous phrase, "Great Empires and little minds go ill together." I agree, Mr. Daly. It seems that we simply disagree as to who have the "little minds."

BLUES SCALP REDMEN

Boom

One of the Toronto cheerleaders celebrates the Blues 34-0 win over McGill in Montreal on Saturday, by doing some beating on the Bass drum.

Steve Gets 20 Of 34-0 Obeck To Quit As Coach

By JOHN ELLIS

Montreal, Oct. 31 (Staff)—The University of Toronto Blues played their best two-way game of the season today before about 13,000 chilled fans to completely scalp a mediocre band of McGill Redmen, 34-0. There never was much question of the outcome as the men of Vic Obeck only threatened once and that was early in the first quarter.

Steve Oneshuk was the star of the game while playing his best game in the uniform of the Blues. Honest Steve piled up twenty points in his race to catch Gino Fracas of Western, including three TD's of his own which he converted himself while completing a perfect afternoon by converting the other two Varsity touchdowns. Time and again he smashed for long gains.

Oneschuk set the first TD up himself. With the clock reading three minutes played in the first quarter, Al Haig's kick to Jack McMullen was fumbled with Phil Muntz recovering for Varsity on the McGill 36. After three short gains, Oneschuk ran right through the Redmen for a gain of 25 yards putting the ball on the Redmen one. Steve ploughed over for the first of his three touchdowns. His convert went right through the middle.

The Blues made it 7-0 when Al Haig kicked to Ken Wright in the Montreal end zone. Ted Kennedy, who played a great game for the Blues by completing an eight yard pass play in the second quarter for a TD, rouged Wright.

The Redmen took over at this point by recovering Bill McFarlane's fumble of Ken Wright's kick. Lorne Quinn, who was one of the few MCGill stars, carried three times to take play to the Varsity 23. With a first down, Ken Wright threw three straight passes, all of which were incomplete thanks to stellar work of a strong Blue defensive platoon. The Blues took over the ball and the Redmen never threatened seriously again.

After the game, Vic Obeck, the popular coach of the McGill Redmen announced that "McGill would be looking for a new coach next season." Obeck, who never did coach a McGill Yates team, will be missed on the Intercollegiate scene. Many football fans credit the Montreal coach with bringing Geof Crain along as a T formation quarterback. Crain is now playing with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the Western Interprovincial.

That the Blues completely outplayed the Redmen is illustrated by the game statistics. Offensively, Varsity just couldn't seem to do anything wrong. The completed thirteen of 19 passes thrown by Olie Mandryk, Big Ed Scryzpek and Bill McFarlane. They gained 346 yards rushing and compiled a total yardage of 541. They made 31 first downs. The Toronto defense was very bit as good as the offense. McGill could only complete three of 15 passes, one by illegal interference. On the ground they managed to gain only 59 yards rushing and only a total yardage of 76. The Blues held the Redmen down to a negligible 7 first downs.

Of the five converted Toronto touchdowns Steve Oneschuk scored three and the other two were scored by Ted Kennedy and Don Cheeseman. Cheeseman's TD came in the fourth quarter when "The Cheese" broke through a sleepy Redman line to run 44 yards to the goal line. Al Haig kicked for a rouge while Gene Chorestecki playing his first league game of the season, tackled a McGill Redman behind the goal line after Steve Oneschuk's quick kick put play on the McGill two. Olie Mandryk's attempted field goal in the

VICMEN BURN MCCARTHY

'Klan' Calls US Senator Foe, Shmoe

Senator Joseph McCarthy was burned in effigy last Saturday night.

Between the hours of midnight and one a.m., students clad in bedsheets and pillowcases collected on the Little Vic field, strung a stuffed likeness of the senator to a scaffold and burned it. Throughout the entire ceremony they chanted "Joe's our foe! Joe's a shmoe!"

Before the burning, the anti-McCarthy demonstrators, dressed to resemble the Ku Klux Klan, paraded around the block wheeling the senator on a tumbril. On the field a fiery cross of candles was set up, while the Grand Master, in black robe with white cross, delivered a speech to the applause of the "Klan" and the heckling of pro-McCarthy elements among the spectators. In the speech reference was made to "fighting fire with fire".

The students then sent telegrams to President Eisenhower, Senator McCarthy, and the US Embassy in Ottawa. The text of the telegrams read:

"Senator McCarthy is denounced by students of Victoria College, Toronto, Canada, on All-Hallow's Eve as the symbol of North American fear. We join in condemning the political Hallowe'en which threatens to destroy the vitality of North American democracy and demonstrate, not against the man, but against the foeus point, the boggyman of McCarthyism, witch hunts and fear tactics."

Other hooded figures rode to condemn the methods used by the US Government in combatting communism in the United States. They emphasized that something had to be done or "Canada would be consumed with the fear of communism — a fate worse than communism itself."

Over 65 students turned out clad in the sheets, but were later joined by scores of others, both male and female.

Grads At A Glance

Click! And another smiling or grimacing Toronto "grad" has his features recorded for posterity. "Grad" should be in quotation marks, because the people who are peering out from under the motor-boards and over the ermine are still a good eight months away from finding out if they are actually going to graduate.

This autumn, just as in previous years, many would-be Varsity grads are marching over to various local photographers to have their faces photographed for Torontonensis and the girl friend. No one has yet done a statistical survey on the feelings of the already-photographed final year student who fails to receive his sheepskin. One would imagine that this unhappy fellow has been so thrilled by wearing a graduate's robe even for an instant that he would come back again the next year to earn the right to have permanent possession of the honour.

Varsity students having their pictures taken evidently act like Varsity students usually act—differently. Jimmy Campbell, photographer for Ashley and Crippen, said that some students (SPS types, no doubt) want to pose in their bare chests. Others come wearing such brilliant cravats that they have to exchange them for less flashy models before they can be photographed without seering the film. Others come unshaven and must have their faces powdered. After a big football week-end, still others must need a complete face-lifting before being fit enough to face a camera!

However, in other ways Toronto students having their photos taken seem to respond to the herd instinct. Campbell stated that students "come in bunches and complain in bunches." If one person finds something amiss with his photo (he doesn't look like the Adonis he thinks he is) others in his group are quick to complain.

Campbell also said that women would-be-grads are quicker to complain about their pictures than men. It seems that they are very fussy about the way their hair looks.

And how much does it cost? Well, at Ashely and Crippen, the cost of three 5 inches x 7 inches glossy prints, together with a composite class photo and prints for Torontonensis comes to roughly

MY END IS RUN

A bell woke me. I smashed the alarm clock and put three slugs in the front door before I realized it was the phone.

I lit a cigarette and made my way to the next room, cursing every ring that shot through my thro' g head in rhythmic reminder of the night before. I picked up the receiver.

"It's 10 a.m. Good morning," a feminine voice purred.

- cursed her and hung up. A cat meowed. I picked it up by the tail, walked to the window, and watched it spiral to the ground eight floors below. A rat behind me sighed with relief, and I crushed it with my heel. Then I put my shoes and socks on.

Just like the cluttered streets outside, rancid with the smell of too many people, this room too was stinking jungle. It was — ask no quarter, give none.

"What are you gonna do with me?" she said.

I spun around. She was smiling, her unpainted lips full and moist, parted just enough to reveal the even pearls beneath. Her eyes weren't eyes at all as they grabbed my soul and begged me to become a wild panting beast, an animal to shout to all the forest that here was my mate, and he that doubted would soon be roasting over a spit. Her flawless hips, her ankles and her throat! If she had any less on she'd have been under ether.

I rolled my lips back over my teeth. Most people shuddered when I did that. I was ugly. There were no mirrors in the room. I hated the sight of me.

"You're cute," she said.

I took a swig from the offiee bottle. It was flat. I cursed and brushed the ink from my teeth, still looking at her.

"Barry de Korpses, detective, aren't you?" she cooed.

I slapped her across the face and threw my coat around her. She laughed and lit up a Spud, then blew smoke in my face. I coughed and spit blood on the floor, still looking at her.

"Someone's following me," she said. "I want you to kill him."

I slapped her again and she giggled.

I wasn't a murderer, I told myself. But I knew I'd do it. I knew that once I saw the guy I'd get the urge and then . . . I told her to beat it, but she knew she had me. She gave me a check.

There was a sound in the hall. The door opened.

He was slimy from head to foot, fat and sneering. He had a gun and he had the look on his face that said it was too bad an innocent sucker like me had to die along with her, but he'd enjoy it anyhow. He laughed.

Before he realized I'd ever seen a gun, my .38 was in my hand. His trigger finger moved, but it was ten feet away from him and heavy. He looked down at it. I shot off his kneecaps so he could ha a better look, gave him just enough time to know he'd figured me wrong and blew his face off.

The woman took a long drag on her Spud.

"You slob," she chided.

"Shut up," I told her. "You walk in and I kill a guy." I grabbed her by the throat.

"Who was he?" I demanded. "What did he want?"

"Don't think too harshly of my brother Phil. He's really quite mild. It's just that he found out I murdered mother and stole his share of the inheritance."

I crushed the shot glass in my fist.

"My name's Laura Morris," she said in a suddenly small voice.

She was too fine a woman for me. Defending a scheming rat who'd just as soon see her dead just because he was her brother.

"That mess on the floor has a twin," she said. "He's the brains. I have a date with him tonight. It was the only way I could think of to put him where you could take care of things."

"At your apartment?" I asked, taking down her address and sensing the kill.

"Yes," she sighed, knowing I'd be there and it would soon be over. Then she left.

It was my last 50 cents, but I threw it on the bar and gulped down the jigger of Scotch. I threw the glass through the bar mirror and left. I was loaded and I loved it. I wanted to kill him. I wanted to bare his guts and play a tune on them with a knife. I leaned against a street lamp and threw up.

Right now he was probably running his filthy fat hands all over Laura. I wanted to cut holes in his soles with a can opener and put hookworm larvae in the wounds. A blind woman sang "Rock of Ages" as she waved her tin cup. I slapped her across the face and pocketed the coins.

I couldn't stand it. I had no business letting Laura go through with it. I hailed a cab, told the driver an address a block from her apartment, and threw up again in the cab.

"Let ya go with 5 bucks, cleaning and all," the hack said when we stopped.

I grabbed him by the throat and, swaying to the irregular sound of the idling motor, I dragged him outside, opened the hood and fed him into the fan until his shoes crashed through a nearby window.

I went up the fire escape to the roof of her apartment building. The skylight led to her kitchen. I quietly lowered myself in. Through the crack in the closed door I could see him slobbering his greasy lips all over her as she calmly puffed a Spud, waiting for me.

I took a Thompson sub from the broom closet and walked in behind them. He heard me throw up and spun around. I took his head off just above the collar.

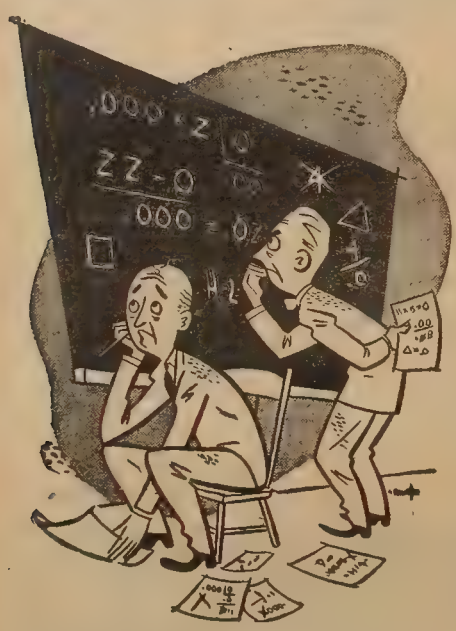
She blew a smoke ring.

"Must you always be so sloppy?" she laughed. "C'mere."

I threw the Thompson down and pulled her to me. There was a scream. It was me. The Spud was in her mouth when I kissed her.

Then a guy walked in. It was her kid brother from Apesite U. He was young and big and had a small strip of tape on one cheek. He was wearing a dark blue sport coat, grey pants, white shirt and maroon bow tie, a Tartan jerkin and white bucks. Around his neck he wore a yellow ribbon.

"Who are you?" I asked him anyway.



"Zeto Beta Tau," he said with a sneer as he chewed his pipe and ran a hand casually along his blond crew cut.

"So what?" I snarled, uninterested in the gambling feats of his ancestors. But not wishing to disturb the already messy floor, I restrained myself.

"See that tower over there, bud?" I said pointing to the window.

He walked over and leaned out. One swift kick did it.

Before I went home I gave Laura back the check and promised myself to see more of her.

UC Lit Loses Debating Forms; Now At A Loss For Interests

The current wave of 'losses' has hit University College. Instead of objects of purely sentimental and traditional value—such as plaques, chairs and cheerleaders, UC has been robbed of one of its most useful possessions—the Freshmen Interest Forms.

These forms were filled out by the new UC Lit members at the beginning of the year, and contained invaluable information on the activities in which they were interested.

In order to recruit new members, the Liberal Club borrowed the forms and ostensibly returned them to someone impersonating an officer of the UC Literary and Athletic Soceity. Since then, the forms have not been seen. Not even one clue as to their whereabouts has been unearthed, thus leaving the Lit without a suspect on whom to retatilate.

After two weeks of intense thought, Lit detectives have concluded that the theft might have been committed by a frustrated debater. The forms indicated freshmen interest in debating, and were to be used by the Literary Director in contacting possible entrants in the annual Robinette Debates competition.

By stealing the forms, the thief undoubtedly expected to remvo ea large number of competitors, and pave his way to winning the beer mug donated to each member of the winning team.

The Literary Directorate's detective force has reported complete failure in tracking down any frustrated debater, but there is still hope that his work will not be in vain.

Freshmen interested in a fine pewter beer mug should contact the Literary Director, David Gauthier IV UC, or the First Year Literary Director, Bill Whitla, I UC, to enter the debates competition.

The debates are for two-man teams, completely impromptu, and are held during the noon hour. Students in other years, who consider freshmen too young to have beer mugs, may attempt to forestall their attempts to win the competition by entering themselves. Deadline for entries is Monday, November 9.

Kruger Discusses Keynes In Lecture on Capitalism Socialist, Economic Plans

A sort of Keynsian-Fascist state is the logical outcome of the evolution of our present capitalistic society, Art Kruger, III UC, said Thursday. He was speaking on 'Keynsian Economics and Socialist Planning' in the fifth of the series of lecture and discussion groups entitled 'Socialism' held on Thursdays in Rm. 4 UC.

Kruger said Nazi Germany was the most successful of all attempts to implement Keynsian Policies, theory that provision must be made for re-investment of surplus capital, if depressions are to be avoided. In the Keynsian society, the state allocates all resources, determines wage and interest rates, and directs the economy as a whole.

'In such a society, the capitalist would become a useless parasite—living in luxury yet serving no useful function. The Russian Communist State resembles the logical result of Keynsian Capitalism, with the party bureaucrats corresponding to the useless Capitalists.' Kruger said that in both societies authority is derived from a minority of the population.

Kruger declared that British economist Keynes had recognized that the surplus that workers produced over what they deceived resulted in a fundamental weakness in the Capitalist System. If provision is not made for the reinvestment of this surplus, depression will inevitably follow. In attempting to find outlets for this investment, capitalists from established countries pursue an imperialistic policy in the underdeveloped nations of the world.

'We must all strive harder for a Socialist state to avoid the inevitable Fascist end of Capitalism,' Kruger concluded. In the discussion period that followed, Norm Chalmers, II Law, president of the U of T CCF club, said that socialists must nevertheless make use of many Keynsian tools in transforming the economy to a socialist one.

Eat Up!

Only 10 percent of Hart House members make use of the facilities of the Great Hall, it was announced by Warden McCulley this weekend. Most of the others either bring their own lunch, or buy sandwiches in the Tuck Shop. Here students sit on benches in the downstairs hall of Hart House eating lunch.

Hart House Meals Now Up In Price

The 'a la carte' system adopted this fall in the Great Hall in Hart House, is permitting greater flexibility, both for those buying meals, and for the dieticians, Warden McCulley of Hart House announced this weekend.

"Though certain combinations of meat and vegetables are less expensive than last year, most meals will cost more if the same number of items are taken," he said.

McCulley said that despite most careful management, the Great Hall has been operated at a considerable deficit for the last several years. This, he said, has been the result of an increasing number of commuter students carrying lunches, a short operating year with uneven daily and weekly volumes, and increased labor costs, which more than offset any decrease in food costs.

"Faced with certain loss in the Great Hall again this year," McCulley said, "it was decided that prices would have to be raised to reduce the deficit." Some items being served at a loss would have to be considerably increased. An 'a la carte' system, it was thought, would allow the greatest flexibility, he said. McCulley emphasized that no attempt is made to do anything more than cover the cost of each meal.

The new system means that beverage, bread, and dessert are each extra. Other years, all of these were included in the price of the meal, he said. "We are maintaining choices, and are always trying to have one low cost item" said McCulley. "We have tried to keep the increase on a minimum possible basis."

At the present time, McCulley pointed out, students have the choice of two large hot courses, a salad, and a sandwich service, if asked for at both lunch and dinner. "Not more than 10 per cent of the members eat more or less regularly in the Great Hall," he said. "All of the Great Hall, the Faculty Union, the Graduate Dining Room, and the Tuck Shop, it is hoped, will come close to meeting costs on overall food services."

McCulley also noted that this summer was the first year the House had undertaken summer operations. "Here we had 900 dollars less loss, still no profit, and are in slightly better position because of it," he said.

The Buttery

Day And Night

The Buttery in the basement of Trinity is the only campus tuckshop open during the evening. This scene of Trinity revels is open from eight-thirty to ten-thirty every evening and until twelve noon on Saturdays. It is also run during the daytime, by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, but from twelve to two, no non-college members are supposed to be there. At other times, the Buttery is open to all.

It is run by the students during the evening, who receive a certain commission on everything they they sell.

The Buttery has a long and fascinating history predating that of the current buildings of Trinity itself. There was a Buttery in the old Trinity, and later on at Trinity there was a little cupboard, where chocolate bars, etc. were sold. In the good old days, even beer was sold in the Buttery. Time passed, however, and when the Saint Hildians invaded the sacred precincts of Trinity, it became necessary for it to be a co-educational tuckshop, for the non-resident students, as well as the residents at St. Hilda's.

Thus by student request in 1947-48, what used to be the Rounthwaite Room, a place furnished in memory of an undergraduate who died, as a non-resident common room became the renowned Buttery.

Nowadays, it rings to the clink of the cueball and the pang of the ping-pong ball, while students grope their weary way through the smoke and fumes of cigarettes to the lunch booth.

No crumpets are sold in the Buttery.

Corpuscles, White Cells And Kisses

Toronto—(CUP)—Each student at Ryerson Institute of Technology who donates a pint of blood will receive one PT credit. The Red Cross blood campaign will start Thursday, Oct. 22.

Montreal—(CUP)—The McGill blood donor clinic will open Nov. 2. The drive will last five days during which an objective of 15 pints of blood will have to be realized.

Last year 24.5 percent of the student body gave blood. Mitch Klein, one of the directors of the campaign said "We are very enthusiastic about this year's campaign. In fact, it should be one bloody week at McGill"

Sackville N.B.—(CUP)—Mount Allison University last year's winner of the "Corpuscle Cup" for blood donations is making preparations to defend it this year. The cup which was donated by the faculty of Forestery at UBC given to the winner of the Inter University contest. Mount Allison's campaign will be held Oct. 20.

Vancouver B.C.—(CUP)—Ubyssey campus quota of 1500 for 5 days was oversubscribed in 4 days 1,611. Nurses traded a kiss for a pint.

American Students Arrive In W. Germany For Studies With Fulbright Plan Funds

Federal Republic and West Berlin, Germany, 30 Sept. (CUP)—The first Group of 200 American students who will study one year at German Universities arrived in Germany about the middle of September.

The students are in Germany week course at Bad Honnef to acquaint them with conditions in West Germany. After the course the students enrol in universities of their choice. Most of the students have selected Heidelberg.

The students are in Germany under the Fulbright Programme which is financed from funds derived from the sale of surplus goods of the American Army in the Federal Republic. Each student receives a monthly living allowance of $100.

One-third of the students are married and some have brought their wives and children to Germany.

Special Jobs For Athletes Results of California Poll

Berkeley Calif. Oct. 23—(CUP)—Seventy-one percent of students at the University of California believe athletes deserve a preference in obtaining a campus job.

A recent poll of slightly over one hundred students decided that athletes' crowded schedule and hours of practice should give them first call on student jobs.

Some of the more outstanding comments were "An athlete is doing a little more for the Universi than anyone else and deserves special attention," and "If we could do it any other way I'd be in favour of it, but I think a good football team is more important."

The "No's" all agreed with the co-ed who said "There are lots of other students here who need the jobs just as badly and will eventually do more for the world."

Annual Mag Is Abolished At Alberta U.

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 15 (CUP)—The literary annual of the University of Alberta has been abolished by a vote of the Students Council. The magazine called Stet was abolished due to dropping circulation, decreased revenue from advertising and student apathy which resulted in the publication being written almost entirely by staff members.

An editorial in the campus newspaper The Gateway made no objection to the abolition but took exception to the way it was done. Its comment was "We wish the death had been somewhat more merciful."

The Gateway is planning a future literary supplement to accommodate students who wish to write the type of material formerly found in Stet.

Korean Student Spends 2 Years To Get M.A. As Difficulties Resolved

Korean student, Keihying Lee, is now satisfactorily engaged in background work at the Graduate School of Chemistry. "His difficulties have been pretty much resolved now and he's on course," says Rev. Roy DeMarsh, General Secretary of the Student Christian Movement.

Due to differences in laboratory equipment, Keihying must spend an extra year in preparation for his Master's degree in Chemical Engineering. "They felt he wasn't experienced enough to do what he wanted to do" said Mrs. J. F. Molloy, his "Canadian Mother" who is providing him with free room and board during his stay.

KEIHYING LEE

"There was a very real problem of communication for a while" said Rev. De Marsh. He also said that it is working out very satisfactorily, calling it a "sound investment".

Keihying was at a loss for a while as to what lectures and labs he was to take. The situation was complicated due to the fact that he is the holder of a degree in Chemical Engineering from the University of Seoul.

He is quite modest about the seven thousand English words which he learned as a basic vocabulary. Lee would not let the wartime destruction of his university stop him from getting his education and it is to his credit that the difficult language barrier which he encountered isn't being allowed to stop him either.

"It is my hope that there will be a good many similar projects" said Rev. De Marsh. His wish was shared by Bob Sutherland, last year's SAC President, who is one of the men responsible for Lee being here.

So far there has been no discussion in SAC about a similar project for next year. There was a good deal amount of red tape to be cleared away to make this project possible as well as a large volume of correspondence to and from South Korea.

After completing his M.A. in Chemical Engineering, Lee will return to his homeland to aid in its reconstruction working in his chosen field.

Great Hall Open To Girls For Fri. and Sat. Meals

The Great Hall, Hart House will be open to members and the ladies of their choice for dinner on the Friday evening before the Western game. On Saturday, the Great Hall will also be open to women for a pre-game luncheon, to be served cafeteria style. "On Saturday, the Hall will be open to all university personnel," said Joseph McCulley, Warden of Hart House.

The Friday dinner will be served between 6.15 and 6.45 p.m. and Saturday's lunch hours are from 11.45 a.m. to 1.30 p.m. The dinner on Friday marks the second invitation Dinner in the 34-year history of Hart House.

No tickets will be required for the Saturday luncheon. Tickets for Friday evening may be obtained from the Hall Porter every day up to Thursday at 5.00 p.m. between the hours of 9.00 a.m. and 10.00 p.m. Memberships must be shown.

Friday evening there will be fires in both the East Common Room and Great Hall fireplaces, according to Garth McDowell, assistant to the Warden. Coffee will be served in the East Common Room following the meal.

Reservations must be made before Thursday at 5.00 p.m. as the number of persons who will attend must be known well in advance.

The first Invitation Dinner at the Hart House was held last March.

Globe Writer Begins Series

The first in a series of lectures on newspaper writing will be given by the City Editor of The Globe and Mail, Mr. Robert Turnbull. "News and News Writing" will be the topic of his lecture on Thursday, November 8, University College.

After coming to Canada from Scotland in his 'teens, Turnbull joined the Toronto Daily Star in 1931 as copy boy. During his career he has done all types of reporting, from obituaries, features and general news, to police reporting. Turnbull also wrote women's news and social notes for the women's pages. He even wrote the article for his own wedding. Turnbull also spent several years with the Star Weekly as news editor and art director. In 1946 Turnbull joined the staff of The Globe and Mail as Assistant City Editor and later became City Editor.

He was educated in Glasgow, Scotland, and Malvern Collegiate in Toronto. He later married, and now has 12-year-old twin daughters. Aside from writing, Turnbull's hobbies include color photography and fishing. He also writes the column "Outdoor Trail" for the Globe and Mail.

"Israel-Social Welfare and Administration" will be the topic of a speech to be given by Dr. M. Ross, associate professor in Social Work, at 4:00 p.m. today, Room 316, Economics building.

Dr. Ross spent four months in Israel this past wummer on a UNESCO fellowship. His research there was in the field of community organization, and the social tensions arising out of the cooperative agriculture communities.

In the past, Dr. Ross has participated in, and given leadership to, various research projects. In 1945, he directed a study of the Canadian YMCA. In 1949 he conducted research resulting in the publishing of Religious Beliefs In Youth.

Dr. Ross has also served as Chairman of the Recreation Committee of the Canadian Youth Commission, and has published several books.

His talk today is sponsored by the School of Social Work Student Association and is open to all interested.

Grads Meet Monday PM Pres. Dooley

The annual meeting of the Graduate Student's Union will be held today at the Graduate Lounge 44 Hoskin Ave., at 5:15 p.m.

An outline of the year's activities will be presented at this meeting announced Union president Thomas Dooley. A financial statement from last year, and a tentative budget for this year, will also be presented to the members.

"In compliance with the constitution of the Union a general meeting is held once a year to give all graduate students an opportunity to voice their opinions on the administration of the Union," said Dooley.

All members of the Union are requested to attend.

Grad School To Hold Teas On Mondays

Traditional Monday afternoon teas are now being conducted every week at the Graduate Student's Lounge, 44 Hoskin Ave., Thomas W. Dooley, president of the Graduate Student's Union, has announced. Members of the School of Graduate Studies and allied faculties and their friends are invited to attend.

Miss Lethem Roden, vice-president of the Union, is hostess for the teas which begin at four o'clock and continue until six p.m.

"Every graduate student should avail himself of the opportunity of attending the teas," Dooley said, "as they are the only place where students from various faculties can regularly meet one another in an informal and leisurely manner."

Men Complain Of Girls, Girls Gripe Back Again In Ryerson Tech Talk

Toronto, Oct. 29—(CUP)—"Girls just interest me at all". . . "With all the fellows on this campus we can afford to be aloof." A Ryerson Institute student survey has received these comments from members of the male and female sex, in order of quote.

The survey which was taken by one women student contained other opinions on the eternal battle of the sexes. The men said "Girls are much worse than last year as far as associating with fellows". . . "Gals do not come to dances and when they do they are always escorted." The women students seemed to feel they were in a enviable position, "A girl can say 'no' once or twice without hurting her dating chances."

Some men students feel that the girl's outward display of friendship is "right friendly", but that when women go out on dates they give the "cold shoulder".

SADLER'S WELLS

Le Lac Des Cygnes

The Sadler's Wells presented on Thursday night another full length version of a ballet which is generally staged only in part. This time it was the four acts of Le Lac des Cygnes. Interest is more consistently retained throughout this ballet than in The Sleeping Beauty. There is more action and actual dancing and less pacing of the stage with symbolic gestures. But it still could not be said to be a tightly packed, unified ballet in this form. The first act which consists of the festivities attendant upon Prince Siegfried's twenty-first birthday has colour and incidental humour, but really is only connected with the other three by the Queen's reminder that he is to choose a wife in the ball scene which makes up the third act. Otherwise it might be a separate ballet of divertissements.

The second act, which is almost completely sustained dancing, with its sea-like green-blue lighting and classic tutus, sets the mood for the rest of the ballet and begins the advancement of the plot. Parallel to the wedding scene with its individual solos is the third act in which Siegfried holds a ball to choose a wife, and by mistake chooses the evil counterpart of his beloved. Coming after the dramatic intensity of the previous acts, the fourth act is rather an anti-climax, in its failure to utilize fully the tragic possibilities of the situation. We are told in the program outline that the lovers cast themselves into the lake in order to die together. What we see is that after dancing together somewhat sadly they leave the stage and reappear further upstage in a blaze of glory on their way to the world of eternal happiness.

Nevertheless the ballet with its merits and defects was nearly consistently well done. Among the many capable soloists Franklin White as the Prince's pickled Tutor, Pamela May as the Princess-Mother, Julia Farron and Alexander Grant in the Neapolitan, and Valerie Taylor, Fiorella Keane, Henry Lagerton and Kenneth Melville in the Spanish Dance. Violetta Elvin danced the very arduous double role of Odile-Odette. Although her performance was quite presentable she could have been real brilliant if the part had been danced by two persons as it was written originally and she had done solely the part of the magician's daughter. In this part she conveyed brilliantly the evil beneath the saccharine exterior with fluid swan-like movements. But she did not seem equal to the exacting adages of Odile. It needed to be larger and more warm. John Fields as Siegfried gave a technically satisfactory performance, but failed to rise to the emotion of the part.

The most remarkable performance of the evening was that of the combined chorus. A great deal depends upon whether or not the chorus also achieves swan-likeness. And it is extremely difficult to achieve unanimity in the arm movements which they did. The only disappointment in this connection was the dance of the four swans which can be one of the most delightful variations if it is done precisely.

The orchestra earned a well-deserved hand. It is so easy to forget the importance of the music in the presence of the visual partners of ballet, art and dancing. Also deserving of applause is Olivia Cranmer who designed costumes even more sumptuous and graceful than those of The Sleeping Beauty.

—Wendy Michener.

Margaret Truman

One could never hope to come in contact with a more charming personality than Margaret Truman, a well-known if not well-revered concert artist. It is this very personal appeal which has kept Miss Truman before the public, not her singing ability. In a way this is unfortunate for no one (even a critic) can ignore her warm charm and natural simplicity. Nevertheless the simpoe fact remains that Margaret Truman is completely innocent of all musical comprehension, and although she has had the best tutors (hoping perhaps that some of the gilt might rub off) she lacks all of the characteristics of a good singer-tone, breath-control, production and focus.

Her programme, too maudlin to mention, when she sang at Massey Hall last Thursday, consisted of concert curios and "old favorites". The tempo never changed considerably and although Miss Truman shool her extreme nervousness after the first group, the pace never did vary perceptibly.

The accompanist stayed well in the background until his solo group where we were given a chance to assess his value. Hhe proved no genius, playing music of little consequence and less depth with true indifference to even its little subtleties. It was indeed flashy but not of any particular artistic merit.

But the last straw on my poor sensitive soul was the Gavotte (a 'cello solo originally) set to words about twittering birds and such, superimposed upon little oprano "ha-ha-ha's — shining example two encores, Comin thro' the rye and Smilin' through to a pitfully small audience. Need I say more?

ANOTHER CRITIC IN THE DARK

Mogambo

Mogambo, this week's offering at Loew's, is the latest eruption in the recent rash of flicks with an African backdrop. Of this sequence, several have pleasantly subjected the flimsy plot to an emphasis on the African setting — the photographer was the big star in King Solomon's Mines and Ivory Hunters.

Fortunately MGM and Director John Ford have not depended entirely on gorillas, rhinos, zebras and assorted African wild-life to cause a box-office panic. Not that they have gone so far as to provide a stunning plot. They have added AVA.

Now, Ava Gardner is strictly a product of the southwestern United States — she doesn't even wear a leopard skin in the pic. As a matter of fact, she looks what she is supposed to be in Mogambo: a New York torch singer. Please believe me when I say that you will overlook such petty inconsistencies.

But over and above waht must remain in the primary attraction of Mogambo — i.e. Ava the body — there is also Ava the actress. Her script is clever, sophisticated and very funny and she delivers her lines (I'll avoid the obvious pun) with all the finesse of an established comedienne.

Another winning featuer is the refreshing lack of sentimentality. When Ava doesn't get her way she never turns into the insipid, sulking cry-baby. Rather she tears up a few tents, hurls the pet python out of her room and proceeds to get horribly stoney.

Also, the actions of all the characters are guided solely by self-interest and everyone is thoroughly nasty to everyone else when their efforts are balked.

It should also be mentioned that the old pro, Clark Gable, proves adequate to the loose plot and that the others, including Grace Kelly, offer good performances even if they don't achieve the impossible by stealing it from Ava.

Which all adds up to a couple of hours of much better than average entertainment.

By Carl Mollins.

DOCUMENTARIES OF SORTS

Juggler and Luther

Another Kirk Douglas picture, this one shot by the controversial director Edward Dymytrk on location in Israel, has arrived at the Odeon-Hyland. The Juggler describes the plight of a famed European entertainer. Hans Mueller, whose soul has been so crushed by his stay in a Nazi concentration camp and the loss of his wife and children to the gas chambers that he is unable to have a stable relationship with anyone. A Jew returning to his homeland, he almost kills a Haifa policeman who had demanded his papers. Forced to flee across Israel, he meets a boy and a young woman on his journey who eventually save him for the new land.

The Juggler attempts to give a documentary aspect to an old situation, and is tremendously aided by the raw yet ancient aspect of the land itself. The sandy sunlit images and high-contrast photography recreate a new and fascinating country for the exploration of the feature film. And laudatory remarks are due the lesser players, among whom Milly Vitale, Paul Stewart, and a gangling young boy whose name I don't remember, are outstanding.

The point on which the picture stands or falls is, of course, Douglas' performance as the talented, haunted juggler. And I say, with no little hesitation, that it is here the picture falters, though it doesn't by any means fail. The villain is not the star system, for Douglas though a widely-known star ha managed to avoid typecasting to a remarkable degree. It is the fact that no amount of jowl-wagging will create a character when the actor lacks the ability to project himself completely, and turn himself into an utterly different person, especially when the script offers so much for a genuinely creative actor. It is however, significant that this ambitious actor can draw the highest compliment a critic can give, that of serious criticism according to the highest standards. Only once, in a juggling routine at a children's show does Douglas achieve that transformation which a superior actor should command at will.

Niall McGinnis, who plays the leading role in Martin Luther, at the Tivoli and Capital, is another jowl-wagger whose performance is rather more successful than Douglas', but only because his voice, face and mannerisms are not so well-known.

Martin Luther (about the life of the great reformer) is also a documentary of sorts. Produced by Louis de Rochment Associates for the Lutheran Church, it begins slowly and somewhat haphazardly, but manages to engender a great deal of dramatic intensity by the time the conclusion arrives at Augsbourg in 1530.

The picutre will probably disappoint those who know a great deal of the history involved, for the writers seem to have carefully skirted most of the real color of the era. In this matter the picture hardly touches, of course, Professor Saunders' famed lecture in History 1b. Both peasants and nobles seem somewhat characterless, and the people, who could be a living element in a film of this sort are colorless, the mobs without impetus or meaning. The particular personalities involved are, however, impressively presented: Pope Leo II, the Emperor Charles V, the Duke of Saxony, and the theologians Carstadt and Melancthon.

Jan Simons HH Recitalist Wednesday

Jan Simons, baritone, accompanied at the piano by Dr. George Brough will give this Wednesday's concert in the Music Room of Hart House. Simons was heard last February at the UC Music Club concert. Dr. Brough has been heard frequently on the campus, chiefly as accompanist, but also in a solo programme at Hart House.

Jan Simons studied voice in New York and Montreal, and is now at the Conservatory here on scholarships. His specialty is the German art song, and his concert on Wednesday will include a large group of songs in this style.

The programme begins with an aria of Handel and two by Dvorak. The German group follows, and it consists of songs by Schubert and folk song arrangements by Brahms. Included in it are the well-known "To music" and "Gourp from Tartarus".

The concert concludes with four short English songs—two old songs and two new ones, by Roger Quilter.

This programme begins at 5.10 p.m. on Wednesday, in the Music Room of Hart House. Ladies are invited to attend, and no tickets are required.

ROY CAMPBELL

Poetical Torero

Roy Campbell, one of the foremost of modern verse satirists, will be speaking at the University of Toronto this week. He writes in the rhyming couplets, and with the force and variety, that are associated with the eighteenth century. Of some South African novelists he says:

You praise the firm restraint with which they write,
I'm with you there, of course,
They use the snaffle and curb all right,
But where's the bloody horse?

Roy Campbell was born in Durban, South Africa, in 1901. At the age of 16 he joined the army, but was discovered and sent back to school. After he failed his examinations at Oxford he lived for a while among the fishermen in the South of France. When he returned to England his first important long poem, The Flaming Terrapin, was published. His next important poem was The Wayzgoose, a satire on South African literary and journalistic celebrities, which has a great deal to do with vegetables:

What wonder then if fruits should still be found
Purveying wisdom to the world around.
What wonder if, assuming portly airs,
Beetroots should sit in editorial chairs,
Or any cabbage win the critics' praise
Who wears his own green leaves instead of bays!
What wonder then if, as the ages pass,
Our universities, with domes of glass,
Should to a higher charter prove their claims
And be exalted to tomato-frames,

After becoming disgusted with London, and writing a satire, The Georgiad, on English poets and critics, Roy Campbell left again for the south of France. For some time he was bull-fighter of the town of Martigues, and twice won the steer throwing championship of Provence. He fought with the Franco forces in Spanish Revolution. He lived in Spain until 1939, then, after the war began, he enlisted as a private and served in Africa until he was injured in 1944.

Roy Campbell started to write in England at the end of the poetic period that produced the anthologies of Georgian poetry. He objected violently to this kind of poetry, and soon published his poetic alternative, The Flaming Terrapin. Two other well-known poems of his are To a Young Man with Pink Eyes, and Choosing a Mast.

On Wednesday at 8.00 p.m. in Brennan Hall he will read some of his poetry and give a talk. Admission is 50 cents.

Show Tickets To Be Sold Over Campus

This week a new comfort is being added to the many luxuries of this modern age. Up to now students who wanted tickets for shows have had to walk as far as from the Wallberg Building to Hart House theatre. But this year University College is initiating a new plan by which the ticket will come to the student instead of the student to the ticket.

Each day this week tickets for University College's new musical comedy "WHERE ON EARTH?" to be performed in Hart House Theatre on November 12, 13, and 14th, will be on sale in various buildings across the campus.

Today from 12.00 to 2.00 p.m. reserved seat tickets will be sold in the Rotunda of University College. On Tuesday they will be in Hart House, Wednesday in the Engineering Building, Thursday in the Victoria College Union, and Friday in the Medical Building. Starting on Monday November 9th any remaining tickets will be sold in the Hart House Theatre box office from 9 a. m. to 5 p.m.

Speaking Of Sport

By JOHN ELLIS

Montreal, Oct. 31—For two weeks, Bob Masterson coached his Blues in the intricate technique of using two platoons in a football game. All 500 of the Toronto fans that travelled here for the weekend game saw the results. The Blues simply checked the Redmen right into the ground. The best that the men from Montreal could do was to compile 17 yards passing and 55 yards on the ground.

That the Blues have not been scored on in 120 minutes of league play (remember the McMaster shutout two weeks ago), only points up the fact that the Blues have the best defensive team in the Intercollegiate. And that doesn't mean that they have a defence and no offence. They have an offence, an offence that was powered here today by a tremendous effort by Steve Oneshuk and his cohorts, Bill McFarlane, Phil Muntz and Bob Pinkney, on the ground. Again they used the pass to score with Ollie Mandryk tossing the ball eight yards into the arms of Ted Kennedy for a second quarter touchdown.

Next Saturday's game with the Mustangs will be a honey. Even John Metras, the coach of those Mustangs was willing to admit this after today's game. Metras was one of the very interested in the slim crowd that looked on at the McGill game. The Blues are now in second place and a win over the Mustangs will shoot them into a tie for first. Look for that to happen. Today's win could have put just the right amount of confidence in the Blues to make them giant killers for next Saturday. On top of this, Steve Oneshuk and Gino Fracas of Western will fight their own little battle for the lead in the Intercollegiate point scoring race.

Probably the worst news to come out of today's little effort was the announcement of Vic Obeck that McGill will have a new coach for next year. It's a shame that Vic feels he has to go. But it must get pretty discouraging for a coach year after year to field a team that only has four or five Intercollegiate-calibre players. Last year Vic thought he had a team. Particularly when Geof Crain shaped up as the best triple threat quarter to develop in the Intercollegiate. But the Redmen could only finish a close third to Toronto and Western, so the hopes of Obeck were killed.

McGill is geographically behind the eight ball as far as football talent is concerned. The Montreal area does not have the high school organization that Toronto and Western find themselves in the middle of. If athletic scholarships were legal, probably McGill could offer some competition to Toronto and the Mustangs for Ontario football talent. As it is they exist only as a weak cousin.

All those people that claim that Intercollegiate sport, particularly football, should be played for the sport's sake are probably right. Sure, the Redmen and Marauders of Hamilton get a little enjoyment out of football, but it can't be much when they lose 34-0 or 24-0.

Toronto is pretty well off. Varsity will always have a pretty good team. The University is numerically large enough to field a good team without scholarships. But that doesn't solve the problem as far as McGill, Queen's and McMaster is concerned.

Mac can still solve their own problem by taking a voluntary fade out at the end of the season. They won't lose any face by it. They will simply be facing the facts. Mac cannot field an Intercollegiate team until the University grows a bit. But as far as McGill and Queen's are concerned there doesn't seem to be an out. In the meantime these colleges lose fine coaches such as Vic Obeck.

Sorry to see you go, Vic. You were always a credit to the league. It will be hard to replace you.

Steve Oneschuk was a going concern on Saturday afternoon at the Molson Memorial Stadium in Montreal. All told he scored three touchdowns, and converted them himself as well as the other two TD's scored by Ted Kennedy and Don Cheeseman. Here Steve (81) is seen carrying the ball during a twenty-five yard gain early in the first quarter to put the ball on the McGill one. On the next play Steve went over for his first TD. Ken Wright (38) is seen moving in for the fourth quarter went wide for a single, to complete the scoring.

All the Blues played a great game. But you couldn't overlook the fine running of Phil Muntz, Bob Pinkney, Bill McFarlane and Steve Oneschuk, of course. Defensively the Varsity team got great support from linebackers Bill Horton and Pete Maik who consistently nailed the Redmen for big losses. On the wingline, Bob Waugh, Joe Harris, and Roy McMurtry were a tower of strength. For the hapless men of Vic Obeck, Len Shaw, Ken Wright and Lorne Quinn were the best of the halfbacks. Dick Whitman, Ted Toporowski and Vic Capogreco were the best of a weak McGill line.

Line-ups:

McGill—Wingback, Biewald; Tackles, McGill, Toporowski, Whitman Porter; Guards, Bertrand, Capogreco, Hogan, Hatt; Centres, Bernot, Emery; Ends, Wilmot, Merling, Olszeski, Stirling; Quarterbacks, Wright, McMullan, Bosacki; Halfs Klein, Hutcheson, Shaw, Thurman; Fullbacks, English, Quinn.

Toronto—Wingbacks, Haig, Leeming; Ends, Horton, Kennedy, Smith, Smale, Chorostecki; Tackles, Harris, Scime, Kefer; Guards, McMurty, Meaker, Mackie, Waugh; Centre, Chisholm; Quarterbacks, Skrzypek, Mandryk; Halfbacks, McFarlane, Oneschuk, Pinkney, Maik; Fullbacks, Muntz, Cheeseman.

Queen's 34-20 Over Marauders

Coming from behind the Queen's Golden Gaels drove to a 34-20 victory over the upstart McMaster Marauders in their Senior Intercollegiate Football match last Saturday. A three touchdown splurge by speedy Ron Stewart was the spark that lifted the Gaels and brought them to life after Mac grabbed a second quarter lead and threatened to notch their first win of the season.

Lorne Wrigglesworth was the tops for the Macmen as he tallied a pair of majors, with Dodds converting on both occasions. Dodds toed a neat first quarter field goal which gave the Marauders the initial lead in the game, but that was soon matched and beaten by Stewart's first touch.

For the Macs it meant their fifth loss in a row. As usual the Hamilton lads showed strength in the early part of the game but winded quickly and were unable to match the oppostion power.

The great passing of Joe Kosakowski kept the Macmen in the game and the first score came on a 34 yard heave from Joe's arm to Ken Stanley. This ended a long downfield march for the Hamiltonians

Vic, UC, Lawyers Win In Intramural Games

In intramural volleyball action Friday UC 5ths put up a determined fight before they were forced to bow 15-13 and 17-15 to Vic 4th. In a second game the UC cause was not a complete loss for the day as UC 3rds trounced St. Mike's B team 15-1 and 15-9.

Lacrosse saw SPS 4ths drop a close contest to UC 2nds 3-1. UC scored twice in the 3rd quarter and added another in the 4th. SPS managed their only score in the 3rd quarter. Terry Riley, Chuck Patterson, and Ron Adams carried the scoring for UC while Lukkas netted the only SPS point.

On the soccer scene Knox lost a 1-0 battle to Law with Giadom netting the Lawers' single. In another scheduled game Trinity B team defaulted to Pre-Meds.

PHE Wins Archery In Mural Initiation

Archery became initiated into interfaculty ranks Friday afternoon as the first interfac tourney got rolling. PHE firsts took top honours from the bows of Betty Taylor and Nan Maybee who chalked up a high of 565 points.

Trinity was next as Doreen Toland and Kay Sladen, ex Mac star, shot for a total of 505. PHE thirds, Marylin Charters and Mary Les came third with 433.

Nine teams competed for interfaculty laurels with Kay Sladen finishing out top scorer with 318. Kay, in second year Trinity is being eyed particularly by officials for next year's intercol squad.

The Skule girls, though they tried hard came last in the meet.

Miss Slack, head of women's PHE on the campus stated that she was very pleased with the turnout and the outcome of the tourney. She has been working hard to put archery across to the students and feels her labours well worth her while.

The girls enjoyed excellent weather for the meet but practises and most further "shoots" will be held indoors. Practises are slated for the Drill Hall Mondays from 4-6 and newcomers to the league will be welcomed. Two players make up an archery team.

Further extra-mural meets will be held this year with Mac, OAC and Eaton's Girls Club.

Ryerson Rams Are Just Lambs Take Beating Despite Bleating Shorn Again By Baby Blues 27-0

By MOISHE REITER

Ryerson Lambs had a gay gambol in Varsity Stadium last Friday but lost their football game to the Baby Blues by a 27-0 count.

A friskier flock than Ryerson sent the last time, showed up at Varsity, but they didn't have enough to stop even the terribly weakened Junior Varsitys.

With eight men out because of injuries and the best of those left promoted to the Blues for the McGill game, the outlook, going into today's game, was dark for the Seconds. Ryerson came out on the rebound from a 57-0 drubbing two weeks back and were all set to rub the Baby Blues' snout in the dirt of the Stadium in revenge for the earlier humiliation. As it happened there were snouts rubbed but they belonged not to the Varsitys but to the Lambs.

Starting feebly, the Varsity lads showed the effects of misfortune as they were held to a mere three points in the opening quarter. Two singles by Ross Woods and another by Dick Risk accounted for these.

Ryerson seemed to have the Blues well under control at this point. Varsity sallies into the line were being held and Harry Wilson hardly had time to take the snap from centre before the Techers were in on him. Yet the Lambs could produce no attack of their own and were stuck in their own end throughout the period. Varsity breaks came on Ryerson fumbles and alert line play by John Prendergast, Bill Beamish and Bill Karpinski. Prendergast playing with an arm heavily wrapped in bandages and rubber protection for his broked thumb, found orthodox tackling an awkward business so he saved time and effort by just nudging Lamb ball-carriers so as to bounce them nearly out onto Bloor Street.

The J-V's warmed to the game in the second period and showed a lot more strength as Bill Beamish cut through to nail the Ryerson kicker on his own 22. From there Harry Hall drove to the Ryerson 13 on a reverse play and John Sopinka followed up with a charge for a major. Wally Bulchak made the convert good. And then the Blue drive sputtered out till the half.

In all their games the Varsity Intermediates have made a habit of coasting for the first part and then coming through with a stretch drive that leaves the opposition dazed and befuddled, and, every time for the last three years, on the short end of the score. Since they played the Baby Blues once before the Ryerson Lambs should have expected this late surge. But the score was only 9-0 and the Mutton - men, unaccustomed to being only 9 points down grew over-confident and were ripe for the sneering.

A Ross Woods' kick that flew tree-top high was fumbled by Ryerson and Gary Gorelle snared the loose ball for Varsity on the Lambs' 44. Wally Bulchak took a handoff and slipped to the 27. A screen pass from Wilson to Woods carried the rest of the way for the day's second major, Bulchak again converting.

The pressure in the Blue Boiler really went high in the final frame as the Baby Blues surged to two Touch downs. Woods started the first one off by returning a Ryerson kick to the Lambs' 41. Sopinka carried off tackle to the 26 and Jack Rogers went through centre to the 8. On the next play Rogers went around end for the touch, but an interference penalty to the Baby Blues nullified the score. So Rogers took the ball again, ran wide and threw 25 yards to Sopinka in the end zone for another TD. Once more Bulchak toed the extra point.

A Ryerson boob set up the final score. On Third down Alsop kicked a 10-yarder out at the Lambs' 23 where Varsity took possession. Wally Bulchak needed just one play to skip to the 1 and Rogers took just one more as he slipped off tackle for 5 points. Ross Woods added the final point on a last minute single.

. . . . The Mutton-men should learn how to lose gracefully—it was a little sickening to hear the Ryersons screaming for blood (usually that of "subsidized" Harry Wilson or Jack Rogers) . . . . Ryerson seem to feel that they are too good for our intramural squads, mainly because of their victory over UC—It might be interesting to see what they could do with a squad of the calibre of Skule. It would be an interesting game — if the Lambs could lower themselves to play on the same field as Skule.

Who Fought Whom?

The Editor,
The Varsity:

Professor Strakhovsky in his letter from October 27, concerning my article on "Nationalism in Russia," states that "it was the Russians much more than any other nationality" who fought against communism, just as it is the Russians who now suffer most under that regime. A long list of facts is added to this argument.

To his impressive list Prof. Strakhovsky fails to add the contribution of the Russian people to constructing of the first communist state in Europe. Nowhere else did communism succeed in establishing its rule. Secondly, he overlooks the fact that communist regime spread from Russia to non-Russian border states, and not vice versa, and this was accomplished only with help of Red Army consisting of Russian conscripts. Nor does Prof. Strakhovsky mention the fact that in Soviet-Russia there exists a political hierarchy headed by the Russian people which proved the backbone of the communist regime in the last war. A look at party membership and the fact that "insecure areas" in the border belt, stretching from Finland to Iran, are being systematically resettled by Russians, gives a fair indication who runs Soviet-Russia now.

Curiously enough, in his list Prof. Strakhovsky considers the two uprisings of any importance, namely those which took place in 1921-22, and in 1932-33, "the work mostly of Russians," whereas it is generally known that the situation was most serious in the south, particularly in the Ukraine and in the Caucasus, where millions of people starved to death. Also General Vlasov's effort to save the greatest number possible of the Soviet prisoners of war, who were destined to starve by hundreds of thousands in German camps, is represented as "the unequivocal stand of opposition to communism." Prof. Strakhovsky fails to add that when it came to actual fighting R.O.A. turned her arms against Germans, not against the Red Army.

Finally, it is worthwhile to mention that even the most bitter anti-communists among Russians have been deeply impressed by the restoration of prestige and lost territories which has been achieved by the communist regime. It was none other than Kerensky who said that as far as the (above mentioned) "services to Russia are concerned" he would be the first to bow to Stalin.

Panty-Waists?

The dental faculty will never be famous for its he-me: students, but pu-leeze, must we stand by and watch it degenerate into a sickly mass of panty-waists? If Mr. MacPherson had his way Dentantics would be a pretty fier old ladies tea party.

What is wrong with sex? Every successful novel, every successful movie, every successful stage production and yes, even every successful marriage has a liberal sprinkling of man's driving force through it. Why bury our heads in Hart House theatre to try and forget sex when we must run the gauntlet of Hush, Maid in the Ozarks and the Moon is Blue when we leave?

A feelthy joke will only affect a feelthy mind. What better way is there to minimize a threat than to laugh at it? The MacPhersons and the Sparrows and the Armstrongs of this institution would, if their crusade were successful, make introverts of the lot of us. Stretch your imagination and try to visualize the day when sex and sexy jokes are outlawed (possibly 1984). Imagine slinking down a dark street to a "Joke-House" to buy our sexy jokes from a "Jokestitute" — and probably at a price considerably higher than the $1.25 asked for a dentantics ticket, too.

I'm dead against white-washing the faculty shows. I can't imagine a surer way to kill a spontaneous production than to smother it under a mountain of feeble protests and prissy ideals of the minority.

"WHERE ON EARTH"

Here is an interplanetary News Bulletin.

Space observers have just reported that rocket-ships from the women's planet, Venus, are descending on the male planet of Mars in war formation. Interplanetary observers say that the fleet's only possible destination can be our planet, Mars. There has been no reaction yet from the space invasion strategy office.

The unprecedented attack is coming without any warning at all from planet Venus.

The astronomer's observation station in outer space relayed the message to us but moments ago. Being unable to count the ships, they could only tell us that the number is extremely high.

We are awaiting further information which we will pass on to you as soon as possible.

I repeat, the women's planet, Venus, is invading the men's planet, Mars.

Keep tuned for further Bulletins.

Horrors

Boys can be boys, but it won't be long if this idea of equality is carried any farther. Recently a public school inspector is reported to have said that the day is fast approaching when men will have to learn how to cook, sew and make beds.

With so many wives out working, the husband's role must now include a share of the household duties. "The old pipe and slippers routine is destined to become a long-lost luxury." Horrors, how far will equality go?

It now appears that some of us may not be prepared for that grand institution of marriage. Certainly, in the past, there hasn't been any great emphasis on the "arts" of washing dishes, cooking or sewing.

But we suppose that equality can work both ways. Dual-income families will probably mean that wives will need to know something about carpentry—for household repairs; and mechanics—for repairs on the family automobile.

In fact, this may all come out even in the end. But, then, will boys be boys and girls be girls?

On Words and Deeds

Nationals of different countries desiring to enter Canada are treated in different ways.

This was admitted by Jean Boucher, special assistant to the deputy minister of citizenship and immigration, earlier this year. "But," he said, "if you treat different peoples differently, that doesn't necessarily mean discrimination."

If that is not discrimination, we wonder what it is.

Canadian immigration policies seem to be directed by a belief that "certain peoples have a more intimate claim on our sympathy" than others. We believe that it is next to impossible to create a division among immigrants that resolves itself around the word "sympathy".

Canada is a signatory to the UN Charter and she should show some responsibility for the principles that are implied in that document. Moreover, she can take a very pronounced world leadership on the question of immigration flows.

Canada must also do more in the way of planning and preparing for those who are allowed to enter. There is a major lack of housing; there is a definite lack of inter-cultural education to ensure sounder relations between newcomers and Canadian-born; employment opportunities are not planned for.

Canada is a melting-pot; she has no single point of view. In the process of developing their own culture Canadians must remember their country reflects scores of other national cultures. To say that certain "sympathies" weigh heavier on our conscience when it comes to immigration than others is to falsely contend that the development of a national entity depends on force and not assimilation.

Strikers' Motive

Principle and Integrity

Nore Flynn, II Philosophy, presents the case for the miners in northern Ontario. He write as he saw the facts — as an ex-Hollinger miner.

The Porcupine is not the land of Robert Service, where "Strange things are done 'neath the midnight sun"

"By the men who moil for gold."

THE PORCUPINE is not a honky-tonk collection of boom-towns, now. It is a string of organized communities holding some 50,000 people and although it is not yet 50 years old there are a lot of people under fifty who were born there and think the Porcupine is, or was, more God's country than Service's.

It is no longer the land of quick wealth and quicker death, with a mounted policeman over every fireplace, as the saying goes. We love hockey up there, and Little Theatre, and there is everything from cocktail parties to Girl Guides and Horticultural contests to be found.

The Porcupine is getting civilized. We have built homes up there, schools, newspapers, radio stations and churches, many churches. The first clutches of grandchildren of the Porcupine are now in college. The area was once strong and lusty, despite the silicosis and the yearly record of casualties published by the Ontario Department of Mines. It is built on the solid rock that clenches the actual golden symbol and standard of our economic system; today the Porcupine sprawls in hunger pains over its gold deposits.

THERE ARE MINES IN the Porcupine where men descend into darkness, and sweat in danger, in dust for eight hours a day for a basic pay of $1.02 an hour. Many of these men get their guts spilled by big pieces of rock, or their lungs rotted by little pieces of rock. They figure no doubt, that they are worth a basic pay a bit closer to that of their fellow tradesmen in Sudbury. They believe this with a firmness like rock, and on this belief they struck in July.

I WAS IN TIMMINS in July, although at that time, and this, neither I nor my family are in mining. I left there at the end of September, and now there is a movement to have a tag day for the community which produced me, my home town. I beg the reader's indulgence for my, "How could this happen to us" incredulity.

There have been unauthorized out-breaks of violence, and I shall not treat of these at present, but stand ready to write of them when requested. The miner's violence — that of the strong, simple man outraged, has been played up in an effort, I believe, to convince all humans below North Bay that the gold miner is a nihilistic madman, much given to the dynamiting of ivy-covered cottages, the spilling of blood, and the starvation of his children for the sake of a closed shop.

The men of the Porcupine, and the women, and the children, are not fighting for a closed shop. They are fighting for grub, homes, educations. The proposed contract asks for a voluntary, revocable check-off. The individual miner will have to affirm his financial suport of the union, and he may rescind his decision at any time.

The miner is not led into wickedness by a union. There is no biped more individualistic than the miner. He makes up his own mind. He works with less guidanee than any other skilled labourer, in the dark and alone. I remember one guy who said "no" at the very altar. These are not men who will be conned into the evil machinations of a trade union.

THE MINER DOES NOT LOOK at his profession with the gushing romanticism of some U.T. co-eds. There is an exodus of the young from the Porcupine every autumn. "Keep out of the mines, boy," is the household maxim spoken in 29 different languages by the fathers of the Porcupine. "Once a miner, always a miner," is the lament in the Porcupine.

But there is a lure to it. When you're young you love the roughness of it, the independence, the brotherhood. When you've been at it for a while it gets too rough, and perhaps you'd rather trade a little independence for the security of a bargaining unit ,and you can see your brotherhood slowly coughed or crushed into eternity.

Since it's so damned grim then, why don't the miners all move to Sudbury, or just quit mining?

They stay because they are not fly-by-nights. They have built homes, schools, roads, families and they have founded a frontier into shape. They feel a civic responsibility. They are not nomads. They live the garrison life of a cultural and economic outpost on the wilderness, bearing its rigours and thanking God for its rude leisures. With faith in the gold standard of our economic system and their own hands, they have created the Porcupine. Must Canada make them, Canadians, economic D.P.'s.

In the Porcupine today business and theatres are closing, credit is cut off, food is scarce, and of course winter is coming on. Do not categorize the miner as inhumane for his family, or stupid upon the basis of Globe and mail editorials — grant him his courage, his integrity and idealism.

And if you will bear with me, I shall attempt to show that there is room in the Canadian temperament, for such courage, integrity and idealism.

THERE HAS BEEN PROPOSAL to hold a Tag-Day for the Northern mining communities. In the past we have been approached for contributions to the needy of the far corners of the earth. And we contributed to a need as nebulous as the barriers of distance, race and philosophy could make it.

These are our own.

I tell you that proud, hardworking fathers of my friends, of students at Varsity, are eating in union soup kitchens; are bearing the doubts of their womenkind, and the privations of their children for a cause in which the miner believes.

May we not investigate this cause further?

A Question Of Facts

The Editor,
The Varsity:

After having read the stream of articles that the editorial staff has contributed to The Varsity, one is left with the obvious conclusion that at least one of the editors is opposed to any phase of American policy. Far be it from me to attack the editors for their valued views or for the public expression of them. But when they stoop to print (if not write) a misrepresentation of the facts, then surely a line must be drawn.

In Wednesday's editorial which commented on the difficulties that the Blues' soccer team had with border regulations the annonymous editor blames the McCarran Act for "abusing the right granted every national government". On these grounds do I condmen the author for misrepresenting the facts.

Warren Stevens, director of athletics at the University, stated that: "It is nothing new. It happens every year." (Note: the McCarran Act was put into effect in December, 1952.) He goes on to say . . . "Some can't be admitted under the regulations because they don't have a lamied-immigrants' cards."

The following is a quotation from the Daily Star: "Officials of the US immigration office in Buffalo said there was nothing new in the McCarran Act that "prohibited the players from crossing. They were required to have the necessary identification papers and without these they could not get in."

So you see, sirs, it is not up to you to "condemn McCarran for categorizing them", nor is it your right to cast reflections upon the "sacred soil" of the United States on this basis.

J. Berman,
II UC.

Ed. Note: We should like to remind Mr. Berman that the first McCarran Act was passed, over the veto of the US President, on September 23, 1950. This was later amended in March of 1951 and again on April 27, 1952. The fact, therefore, still remains that there had never been such a great number of "barrings" of Canadian students before the 1950 Act.

LETTERS

Readers are reminded that letters should be typewritten on special copy paper provided in The Varsity office. They must be kept as short as possible. The editors will make every attempt to print all letters, but there is no guarantee.

Letters must be signed and preference will be given to those that have full signature. ATL cards must be shown when handing in letters. Writers who want their names withheld must confirm this with one of the editors.

They should be addressed to "The Editor, The Varsity" and should be signed with the year and faculty of the writer.

As of late the letters have been too long and should, if at all possible, be confined to 200 words.

VIC DISOWNS BURNING

Toronto students tune up their beer bottles in a premature celebration on the way to Montreal. On the return trip the students thought there was an even bigger celebration, but nobody is quite sure what happened.

No College Backing Is Official Statement

The Victoria College student body yesterday denied any connection with organizing the burning of Senator Joe McCarthy's effigy.

The Victoria Men's Residence Council issued this statement last night: "The Victoria College Men's Residence met this evening and as a result of their investigations into the incident on Saturday last, come to the conclusion that the incident, was the independent action of a small group of approximately 40 resident men. The statements released, and the telegrams sent in the name of the student body of this college were considered irresponsible acts, in that the individuals concerned had no authority to speak for the student body as a whole."

It was reported that the American Consul had protested this action to President Sidney Smith, and that Dr. Smith had referred the matter to Vic President A. B. Moore. This was denied yesterday by the consulate in Toronto.

Principal Bennett called a meeting of the residence council last night at which members of the council sat with Dr. C. C. Love, senior tutor of residence. This was to recommend action, attempting to find out those responsible for the Sunday morning fracas.

Principal Bennett said yesterday "We are certainly not holding back any information. If the US consul wishes we would be very glad to meet him, but it is a little delicate, of course."

In yesterday's one o'clock news bulletin the CBC reported that Washington was waiting to receive an official report concerning Sunday's demonstrations at Varsity in which students burnt an effigy of Senator Joseph McCarthy.

The US embassy in Ottawa, according to the CBC, says there will be a routine report on the matter with the state department.

"The demonstration was held by 65 students who dressed themselves in white robes and hung the effigy of the Senator on a scaffold at the University."

The CBC reported that the embassy had also received a telegram from the students denouncing Senator McCarthy's political activities.

Quit Post President Is Asked

Guelph Oct. 29—(CUP)—The student govenment of OAC has been stripped of a president following an automotive accident, a voluntary resignation, a vote of confidence and a forced resignation.

The ex-president " Red Fraser" was involved in an automotive accident last month. He offered his resignation. The student council gave him a vote of confidence, and he resumed his duties. However, he has been asked to resign, leaving the student government without a leader.

As the OAC newspaper editorial asks, "Where does this leave the student body as far as its effect on student government goes?".

Child Study

Thailanders

By BEVERLEY FINLAND

What has been happening in Thailand since the time described in "Anna and the King of Siam"? Even though most Westerners haven't given much thought to the matter, the Thai have been making a place for themselves in the modern world.

An example of their interest in international affairs is their contribution to United Nations—a Thai was runner-up to Mme. Pandit for the presidency of the General Assembly, and the Under Secretary of Education is on the executive board of UNESCO. Now Thailand has taken another step toward better acquaintance with her neighbours in the Western world.

Through UNESCO, a program has been drawn up so that the Eastern countries can study child development and educational methods in the West, and then apply the most useful part of what they learn to their own culture.

The idea is that, in spite of the great differences in child training and educational methods around the world, there must be some basic trends in child development. To this end, an arrangement was made through UNESCO, the Government of Thailand and the University of Toronto, to have six educationists from Thailand spend a year in Toronto. Professor William Line of the Department of Psychology spent six weeks in Thailand this summer to help get the project underway and to choose those who would come to Canada.

The six men and women who are at the university on fellowship are under the direction of Dr. W. E. Blatz, head of the University's Institute of Child Study. Dr. Lamaimas Saradatta, who took her doctorate in Education at Columbia, Miss Boonying Charoenying, Miss Pramuan Vanavase, Dr. Sanoh Dharmgrongattama, who took his doctrate in Education at Michigan, Mr. Niyom Kamnuanmasok and Mr. Kayoon Limtong are all experienced teachers and educationists.

Here, they will study our methods of research, our findings in regard to the needs of childhood and our ways of translating the needs of child development into educational practice. On their return, they will form the nucleus of the staff of a research centre which will undertake studies of children in Thailand.

This project is a significant extension of another which has been in progress in Canada for the last five years. Under the sponsorship of the Mental Health Grants, the University of Toronto and the Canadian Mental Health Association have provided special experience for a number of teachers chosen from the various provinces of Canada, whereby the process of education has been more closely viewed in its relationships to health and personality development.

The Superintendent of Public Schools of York Township, Mr. Harvey Griffin, for many years actively interested in child development through education, has cultivated research and service partnership with the Canadian Mental Health Association and the University of Toronto. In a very real sense, the present undertaking is an outcome of his vision.

An Open Letter

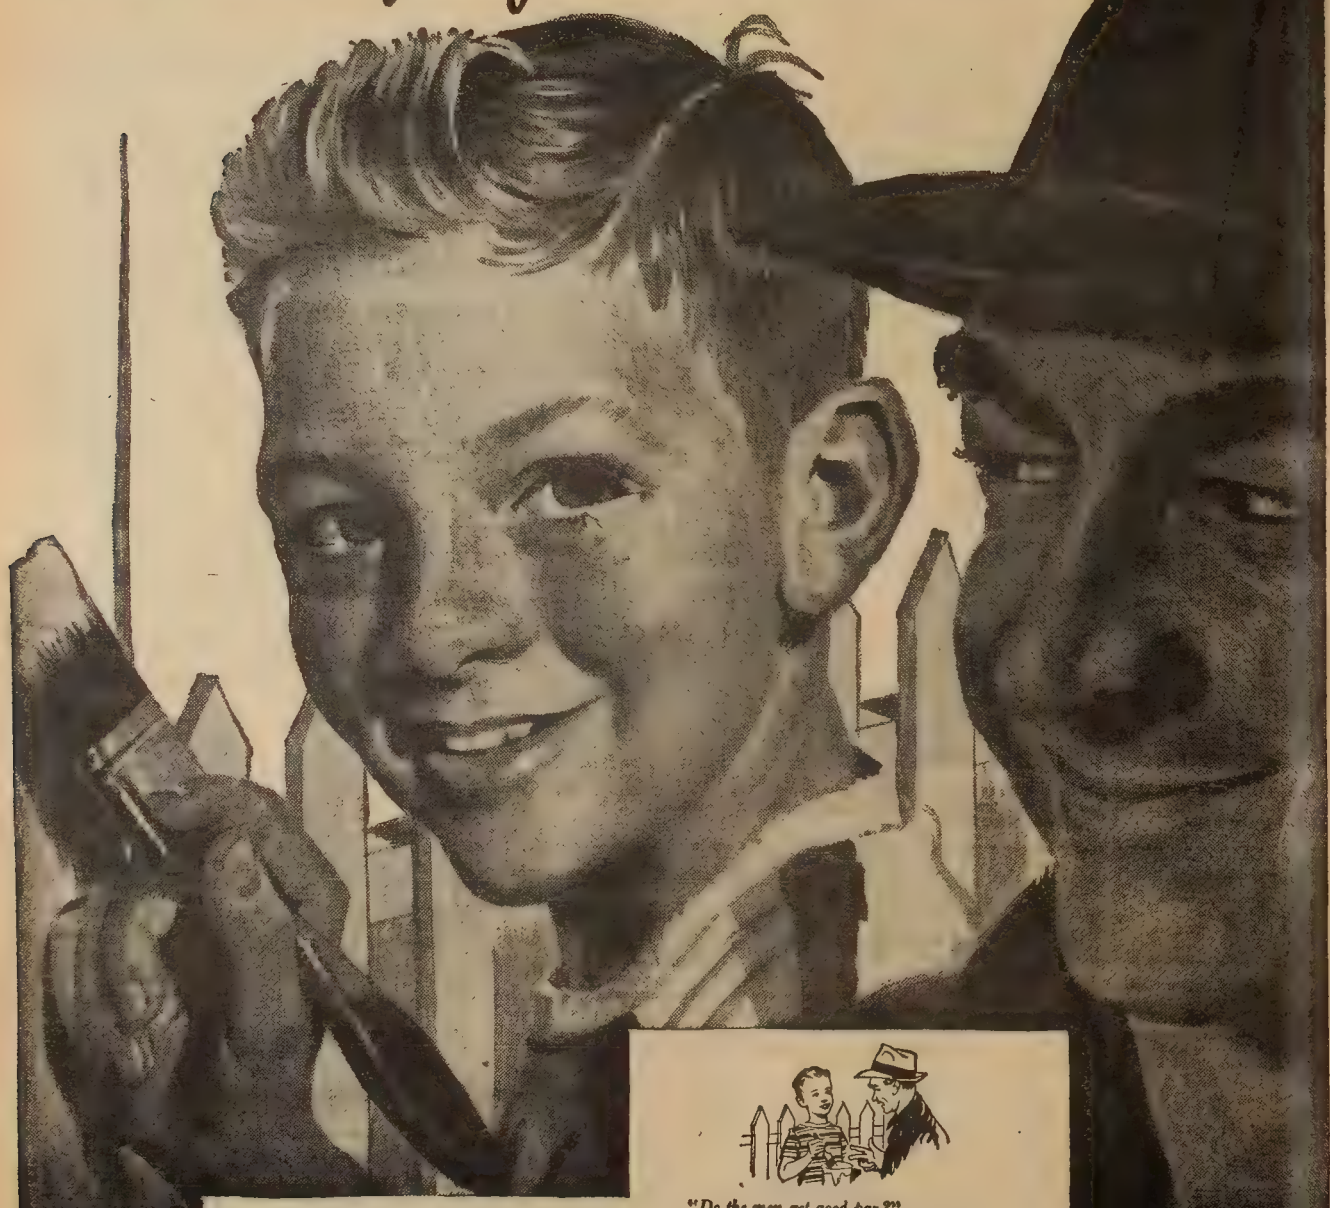
For Student Representation

On November 19th the students of the University of Toronto will be asked to vote on the membership of a Model Parliament. We feel that the results of this election will be held up to the public as representative of student opinion, and that therefore they SHOULD BE REPRESENTATIVE of student opinion. Unfortunately they will not! The present plans of the Model Parliament Committee, barring the Independent Progressive Association from the ballot, ensure that a large segment of student opinion will be disregarded.

Two years ago, the Independent Progressive Association was formed in the belief that a large part of the student body was independent in its political outlook. It was obvious to us, as it had been to the Mock Parliament Committee (as it was then called), that to hold elections on a constituency basis allowing individual members (including independents) to run for election, was impossible on the campus. This meant that, if independents were to gain representation in the parliament, they would have to unite together to form what would, under ordinary circumstances, be an unusual organization—an independent party.

Last year we sought to win support for our views by contesting the Mock Parliament elections. We were stopped, however, by the Mock Parliament Committee, which barred us from the elections on the grounds that we did not have Caput recognition. They DID recommend, however, that we be admitted in 1953.

This year, not only did the IPA get Caput recognition, but met further stipulations as set down by the Committee. We submitted a list of our executive, an eight-point platform, (which we hope will be later published in The Varsity), and were arranging to hold an open meeting by November 1. This last was, however, postponed when it was learned that the IPA would be barred again.



The Independent Progressive Association has consistently complied with every stipulation of the Model Parliament Committee, yet is still being denied the opportunity of presenting itself for student support.

It has been the contention of the Committee that the parliament should reflect only the established political organizations at Ottawa. They regard the student vote only as a convenient means of determining what the party standings in this parliament will be. Therefore, the independents will not be allowed to seek the student vote, but will supposedly be consoled by an arbitrary allotment of five seats in the legislature. But if the intention is to reflect only established federal political organizations, why not distribute seats in the ratio of present party standings at Ottawa? If elections are held, will not the results of these elections be taken to represent student political sympathies? And if this is the case, should not the results be an accurate representation of student views? Can the results be an "accurate representation" of student opinion when a responsible independent group, the Independent Progressive Association, is being barred from the elections?

In view of these considerations we feel that the Model Parliament Committee has erred in its present decision. We feel that, in the interests of the students of the University of Toronto, as well as in the interests of commonsense and justice, it is the duty of the Committee to reconsider its position regarding the Independent Progressive Association.

The Executive of the Independent Progressive Association
Ron Price, President
Roger Bull, 1st Vice-President
John Roberts, 2nd Vice-President
Dave Gauthier, Secretary
George Fierheller, Treasurer

Are there good jobs in a nickel mine?

"Yes, there are good jobs and a lot of them in the nickel mines and plants. There is still a certain amount of heavy work to do, but machines have made most jobs a lot easier and more pleasant. For instance, the ore today is handled almost entirely by machines instead of by pick and shovel."

"Do the men get good pay?"

"Yes, at Inco even a beginner makes good money. As time goes on there are chances for working into better and better jobs. In addition, employees receive medical and hospital care for themselves and families at very low cost to them. Pensions are paid to employees who retire or are disabled and these are paid for by the company. So you see Inco is a real good place to work."
